THE FARMINGTON ASSOCIATION is notable for the excellence of its quarterly gatherings. The last was held at Moose Hill, in Livermore, where Rev. F. P. Freeman, of the Livermore Falls Church preaches on Sunday afternoon. The church was filled. Rev. R. T. Andem was moderator, and his contagious Christian joyfulness kept the meeting in good spirits. Dr. Geo. H. Hamlen, who is beginning his service as pastor-evangelist with every assurance of success, was present and preached. Rev. F. M. Lamb of Canton, sang the Gospel with uplifting power; the world work was presented by State Director Whittemore. Pastors Freeman, Andem, and others discussed practical matters in the church program.

NORTH YORK ASSOCIATION. Pastor Koch was much at home at Shapleigh Corner, where he preaches every Sunday afternoon, and is moderator of the association whenever it visits Shapleigh. Tradition tells of the teams that used to line the fences around the meeting houses, but in this case, the five horses that were present retired to the barn, and the forty automobiles were left about the church. The church was full. Pastors of the association discussed their church work, the program of the year was presented by the Director of Promotion Whittemore. A powerful associational sermon was preached by Rev. Mossman of the Alfred church, and Rev. Geo. F. Stair of Chicago was heard with appreciation and benefit.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE MEMBERS OF THE Winter Hill Church were out in force at the prayer service last Friday evening, and again on Sunday, to welcome home their pastor, Rev. H. Douglas Pierce, after an absence abroad of three months. Decorating and repairs on the church building are completed, and the beautiful auditorium was opened for service Sept. 17. A splendid spirit of anticipation toward the coming fall and winter work is apparent, and the outlook is bright.

The Barnstable Association

A man well-acquainted with the history of the Barnstable Association pronounced the ninety-first anniversary meetings held with the West Harwich church, Sept. 13-14, the best ever. The moderator, Deacon Chester Wright of Pocasset, frequently spoke his appreciation of the unusually fine spirit, choice music, hopeful and reassuring tone of the letters from the churches, and excellent quality of the addresses. The attendance was good. One small church twenty-five miles from the place of meeting reported an attendance of twenty-five.

The forenoon of the first day was spent in devotional exercises, registering, and making and renewing acquaintances. In the afternoon, following the introduction of three pastors new to the Association, Rev. Carey W. Chamberlin of Beverly, spoke on "Impressions of the Orient." Following him Mrs. Eva M. Tedford, pastor at Pocasset, spoke of "The Big Business of the Country Churches." State Secretary, Dr. Hugh A. Heath, gave his informing, inspiring and heartening address on our denominational enterprises. In the evening the importance of work among young people received special attention, and the closing address was delivered by Rev. Benj. T. Livingstone, recently from Rhode Island, now general secretary of the New England Evangelistic Association. He spoke on evangelism.

On the second day the reading of the letters from the churches had a large place in the forenoon session. It seemed specially appropriate, following the letters and the reports of committees, to listen again to Dr. Heath as he gave details of our state work. In the afternoon we listened to Miss Hartley on some of her definite ideas as to definite work with a definite program including graded lessons in the Sunday school. Mr. Henry L. Bell of the senior class of the Newton Theological Institution gave an interesting address contrasting the "passion of living a life" with the "panic of making a living."

Rev. R. W. Van Kirk gave the closing address on, "We Would See Jesus."

The officers elected for the coming year are: Chester Wright of Pocasset, moderator; A. T. Ringold of Hyannis, clerk; Rev. J. D. Matthews of Brewster, treasurer; G. R. Thacher of Brewster, auditor; Mrs. George LaFlash of Mashpee, Sunday-school director.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE BEAVER ASSOCIATION met with the Ellwood City Church for its one hundred and thirteenth annual session. Ellwood City Church has redecorated the church, and welcomed the association with these improvements. The church letters indicated generally conscientious efforts to advance the cause of Christ. In some instances notable records were made in baptisms and good showing in financial expenditures, taking into account the industrial depression. Brothers Russell and Strickland of the state work were present and spoke. A fine report of the larger denominational work was given by Brother De Lancey of Sharon and an interesting discussion held on the New World Movement under the leadership of the chairman of the associational promotion board, Brother Lewis. Brother Lynch, of New Castle, preached the introductory sermon, and Brother Thomas, also of New Castle, preached the doctrinal sermon. The women had Miss Ballard of India for their speaker. The climax of the program was the last afternoon and evening, given over to the young people. Talks by various young people on the work of the W. W. G., the B. Y. P. U., and the organized class, and the possibilities of the Sunday school along the lines of soul winning, character building and training leaders, were followed by a social period at the supper table. The evening session was an impressive one with a devotional period in charge of the young people, a pageant by the Ellwood City young people and a friendship circle of all those present clasping hands, and after a period of prayer in which local and world-wide interests were brought before the throne, the singing of "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

VERMONT

THE SEVEN ASSOCIATIONS in Vermont will hold their meetings during the first of October as follows: Lamoille Assn., Georgia Plain, Oct. 3; Addison Assn., East Charlotte, Oct. 4; Vermont Central Assn., Montpelier, Oct. 5; Danville Assn., St. Johnsbury, Oct. 6; Shaftsbury Assn., Rutland, Oct. 10; Woodstock Assn., Saxtons River, Oct. 11 and the Windham Assn. at South Newfane, Oct. 12. The sessions are one day beginning at 9 o'clock

a. m. and closing after the evening session. The program is packed with good things, with addresses by Miss Margaret Suman of the Philippine Islands, Dr. Selden L. Roberts on Sunday school work, and Dr. Joseph Taylor of China, besides speakers within the state.

REV. C. D. PIPER, who has been pastor of the church at Montpelier for about four years, doing excellent work in every way, has tendered his resignation to take effect after Oct. 15. Rev. A. C. Berris, who has been pastor at St. Albans a little over a year and who had a splendid grip on church and community, has tendered his resignation to take effect Oct. 8, in order to accept a call to Bangor, Maine. Rev. Elisha Sanderson has closed his work at Fairfax and removed to Sutton where he is pastor. Rev. W. W. White has accepted a call to Enosburg Falls and removed from Westford. These four churches are now in need of pastors. The church at Windsor is also pastorless, as are the churches at South Newfane and West Dummerston, which are under one shepherd.

REV. W. G. COOPER, formerly pastor at Websterville, is comfortably settled in the parsonage at Ira. Mr. Cooper is the only pastor in the entire township.

THE GEORGIA PLAIN CHURCH, Miss Grace M. Brooks, pastor, recently received eighteen by baptism; others await the ordinance.

REV. A. J. HOPKINS, pastor of the church at Perkinsville, recently completed fifty years of faithful and efficient service in the gospel ministry. He supplied the Perkinsville Church for one month during the summer of 1872, preaching his first sermon in the pulpit where he is now pastor. Mr. Hopkins has had other and successful pastorates, but began his work, and it is hoped will remain and eventually close his work with the church in Perkinsville.

THE PLAYLET, "HANGING A SIGN," given by the young ladies of the East Dover Church at an evening service attracted a large audience and proved to be an entertaining and effective presentation of the medical missionary work.

IN THE DEATH OF Mrs. Cornelia Claxton, the East Charlotte Church has sustained a severe loss. While her presence will be greatly missed, her life had made an impress which will remain.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

A MEMORIAL SERVICE WAS HELD for Dr. Joel B. Slocum at First Church, Dayton, on Sept. 6.

REV. W. B. JARMAN has begun his work with the Immanuel Church, Cleveland, and the work is opening favorably. Mr. Jarman comes from Bay City, Mich.

THE CEDAR AVENUE CHURCH of Cleveland, has called Rev. J. C. Macaulay, of Toronto, Can., who will begin his pastorate Oct. 1. He will hold two weeks evangelistic services at the beginning, assisted by Rev. J. R. Turnbull, recently of St. Thomas, Ont.

FIRST CHURCH OF HAMILTON is again pastorless. After three years of service Rev. B. F. Caudill tendered his resignation, Sept. 13, to accept the unanimous call to the Twentieth Street Church, Huntington, W. Va. Dr. Caudill will close his pastorate Oct. 8, and go immediately to his new work. Dr. Caudill is not new to the Huntington church, having served them as pastor from 1904 to 1911. In his three years at Hamilton the church has received into its membership 417, 204 of this number by baptism.

REV. G. R. ROBBINS, of Memorial Church, Columbus, has returned from a six weeks' vacation. With Mrs. Robbins and daughter, he motored from Columbus to Ashbury Park, N. J. During his vacation he preached in the First Baptist Church of Williamsport, Pa.; Clinton Ave., Trenton, N. J.; First Church, Ashbury Park and Peddie Memorial, Newark, N. J. Report was made some weeks ago of the collapse of the ceiling of the Memorial building just after re-roofing, rewiring and decorating had been completed. When Dr. Robbins entered the church after his vacation, he found everything in better shape than before the old ceiling gave way and only about $200 need to complete payment.

ILLINOIS

MATTHEW MULLER, PASTOR OF THE church at Erie, was ordained upon recommendation of a council called to advise in the matter. Pres. Geo. W. Taft, of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, preached the ordination sermon. Rev. R. W. Babcock, of Moline, was moderator and Thomas M. Porter, of Rock Island, clerk.

The Bloomfield Association

The Bloomfield Association closed its eighty-sixth session Friday Sept. 15, with the Arthur Baptist Church. The verdict was pronounced by old association "goers" that this was the best district association ever attended. The spirit was superb, attendance large, reports encouraging, plans for the future excellent. This is one of the largest associations in the state outside of Chicago. Its committees will endeavor this year to make the work of the association felt. Rev. C. C. Long, of Urbana, gave over the gavel after three years of service to his successor, Atty. Marion Watson of Arthur, Illinois. Mr. Watson is man of wide experience and possesses a deep interest in the Baptist cause. He will be strongly supported by the ministry of the association and also by many strong laymen. Already he has called for a meeting of the committee responsible for the plans of the year to institute the work at once.

In connection with ministers and laymen's meeting of the association Rev. B. H. Hutto and Mrs. B. H. Hutto were examined as candidates for the ministry. A large council representing approximately thirty-seven churches was present to take part in the examination. This was satisfactory in every detail and they were unanimously recommended for ordination. They are serving the Mahomet Baptist Church where they are making themselves felt in a most vital way among the people of the community. Mr. Hutto is completing his work in the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary this year. During his absence from the field Mrs. Hutto looks after the flock and takes care of the interest of the cause. She has had a very large and varied experience as a Christian worker besides having had a course in the Presbyterian Training School, Chicago. The church has arranged for their service of ordination to take place on Oct. 8. Mr. and Mrs. Hutto give fine promise of Christian workers. They have been on the field at Mahomet since January and have since that time showed their metal as genuine apostles of the faith. Dr. Taft of Chicago will have a part in the ordination service.

Annual Meeting Woman's Baptist Mission Society

The annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Illinois will be held in the Christian Church, Centralia, Monday evening, Oct. 16, and Tuesday morning, Oct. 17. Having an evening and morning session instead of one full day is an innovation—it means that every woman will plan to leave her home early Monday morning so that she will be at the "Acquaintance Hour" at five o'clock Monday afternoon. The general topic for both sessions and for the year is "Our Goals—My Opportunity." This thought will be developed by state leaders. On Monday evening Mrs. Luella Adams will speak on "Americans in the Making" and Mrs. Wallace St. John will tell of "My Life in Burma," the session closing with a pageant.

National officers who will be with us to speak before the general convention and at our Woman's and World Wide Guild Banquet (Tuesday 5 p. m.) are Mrs. George W. Coleman, president Woman's Home Mission Society; Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, honorary vice-president, Woman's Foreign Mission Society; Miss Alma J. Noble, World Wide Guild secretary; Miss Alice Brimmon, Americanization secretary. Baptist women of Illinois, the call comes to you. We want hundreds of our Baptist women at Centralia. If you wish to be informed of our own Baptist family—if you wish to know more of the needs of the world—if you wish to have three days full of cheer, of spiritual uplift, of loving comradeship attend the sessions of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Illinois and the Illinois State Convention, October 16-19. Please notify Mrs. John Wilson, 423 North Poplar Street, Centralia, when you expect to arrive.

MRS. W. P. TOPPING

MINNESOTA

REV. J. McFARLANE, HAS RETURNED from a trip to the British Isles. On the first Sunday after his arrival he was welcomed back to his pulpit by congregations that crowded the church. On Sept. 1, Mr. McFarlane commenced the sixth year of his pastorate in Austin. A spirit of unity and optimism prevails, and the pastor and people are making plans for progressive work in the coming year.

REV. A. C. EARLEY HAS RESIGNED as pastor of the West Concord Church, his resignation taking effect Sept. 25. Mr. Earley has accepted the pastorate of the La Habra Church, California, in the hope that both his own health and that of Mrs. Earley will be improved by the change in climate. As yet West Concord has no one in view as pastor and will be glad to hear from any Baptist minister who desires to make a change.

KANSAS

THE METHODISTS AND BAPTISTS of Clay Center, held union meetings in August, holding them one Sunday in the Methodist church and the next in the Baptist church, with large attendances. J. M. Smart, 84 years of age, was baptized into the church, Aug. 20. The teachers and officers of the Baptist Sunday school held their regular meeting in the basement of the church, Monday, Aug. 21. After the supper a business session was held, with a discussion for the Rally Day. The Campfire Girls have been organized in the Baptist church. They have adopted the name of the Pawvira Campfire Girls with Mrs. Clyde B. Morris as their Guardian. The smaller girls have organized a Blue Bird club. The sisterhood and different circles have resumed their meetings after the summer vacation, with good attendance.

Rocky Mountain States

UTAH

The Land of Neglected Evangelization

Iron, coal and copper are in Utah in almost inexhaustible quantities. In the Pinto Iron Springs District, within 100 feet of the surface, there is measurable now 13,058,900 tons of iron ore. A report by Dickman for the late E. H. Harriman gave in excess of 400,000,000 tons of iron in the Iron County Field. The supply of coal in Utah is inexhaustible and the industry is only in its infancy. In the Carbon Emery field alone the government estimates over 80,000,000,000 tons of coal available. At Bingham, Utah, in one of the greatest copper enterprises in the world, the top of an entire mountain is being removed. At Marysvale in Southern Utah, are said to be the greatest alunite or potash deposits in the world. Much grazing, dry farming and even some irrigated land is yet available in Utah under the homestead, the desert and other acts with special concessions to ex-service men.

Yet, Utah is the land of neglected evangelization. There are entire counties in Utah without a single Protestant Christian worker. Some of these counties are as large as the entire state of New Jersey. A worker under the Presbyterian home board, recently visited a town in western Utah that was forty years old, yet in all that time there had never been a religious organization of any kind.

At no time in the history of Baptist missions in Utah has the opportunity so challenged our missionary forces. Never before has the opportunity for a great service been so large. Yet, Baptist missions in Utah are facing today the greatest crisis in their history. The conditions are parallel to those which existed in the Telugu Mission in the dark days of its early history. In the year 1853, a year ever memorable in the history of that famous mission, the question came up "Should the mission be reinforced or discontinued?" The progress made had been very small and the field could be cared for by other societies laboring among the Telugus. When the question came up for public discussion, one of the speakers, in the course of his address referred to the mission as "The Lone Star Mission," there being but the one station. That night Rev. S. F. Smith, author of our national hymn, caught the words "Lone Star" and before he slept wrote the following lines:

Shine on, "Lone Star!" Thy radiance bright
Shall spread o'er all the eastern sky;
Morn breaks apace from gloom and night:
Shine on, and bless the pilgrim's eye.
Shine on, "Lone Star!" I would not dim
The light that gleams with dubious ray;
The lonely star of Bethlehem
Led on a bright and glorious day.

Shine on, "Lone Star!" The day draws near Where none shall shine more fair than thou;
Thou, born and nursed in doubt and fear
Will glitter on Immanuel's brow.
Shine on, "Lone Star!" Till earth redeemed,
In dust shall bid its idols fall;

And thousands, where thy radiance beamed
Shall "crown the Savior, Lord of all."

The next morning Dr. Smith handed to his friend, Judge Harris, a slip of paper with the remark, "those are my opinions of the Telugu Mission." The judge read the little poem but instead of returning it as Dr. Smith expected he carried it to the meeting and read the verses. Many wept and sobbed during the reading, and whatever of doubt remained as to continuing the mission was now removed. It was unanimously voted to reinforce the mission. The subsequent history of the Telugu Mission demonstrated the wisdom of this decision. The great in-gathering of 1878 when 2,222 souls were baptized in one day stands unparalleled in the annals of modern missions.

The Utah Baptist State Convention stands today where the missionary union stood at that critical period in the history of the "Lone Star Mission." During the past few years there has been small progress made. Fields, which were occupied years ago have been abandoned. Of the remaining fields now occupied, half are without pastors. With the exceptions of buildings at Moab and Soldier Summit, there is not another respectable house of worship in any Baptist Mission Field in Utah. Earnestly the Utah Convention has considered the question: "Shall Utah missions be reinforced or discontinued?" Viewed in the light of our Lord's commission there is nothing which warrants a retreat. The Utah Convention has unanimously decided that Utah Baptist missions should be reinforced.

Occupying strategic points in our Baptist Home Mission work are the Burlington and the Rio Grande churches of Salt Lake City. Located in the western part of Salt Lake City where the population is largely Mormon, these two churches are on the very firing line of missionary effort. If these two churches are to do their full part in helping meet the need of the hour, they must have the equipment, especially new church buildings. Therefore to supply new houses of worship for these two churches is the initial task of the denomination. But why the task of the denomination? Because Baptist mission churches in Utah have a right to the interest and support of all Baptists. So Utah Baptists tell of their work and their opportunities and make their appeal.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

REV. W. E. HENRY, after an eight years' happy and successful pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Everett, has resigned and accepted a call from the First Church of Yakima.

REV. F. W. WIGHTMAN, after a notable pastorate of nine years with the Sixth Avenue Church of Tacoma, becomes pastor of the First Baptist Church of Olympia.

REV. DAN W. THURSTON has resigned from the South Tacoma Church and will possibly locate in Northern California or Nevada.

REV. ERLING MONNES, after a short pastorate of the First Norwegian-Danish Church, Seattle, returns to Powers Lake, N. D., where he was formerly pastor.

REV. A. M. MEHUS, pastor of the Norwegian-Danish Church of Bellingham, has been invited to become pastor of the Norwegian-Danish Church, Seattle, and will possibly accept, beginning his services Nov. 1.

REV. F. G. WEST, after three years' successful pastorate with the Columbia Church, Seattle, has closed his services and is temporarily supplying for the Bellevue Church.

REV. JOHN E. KANARR, who has served the Western Washington Baptist Convention as a district missionary for the past three years and a half, closes his work Nov. 1.

REV. ROY E. MCGRAW, of Kansas City, Mo., has accepted a position with the Western Washington Convention as field secretary.

REV. HARRY O. ANDERSON, of California, will come to Western Washington Oct. 1, for a three months' evangelistic campaign.

THE BAPTIST CHURCHES of Western Washington have been woefully deficient in buildings and equipment. During the past two years a new building era has developed. Several new buildings have already been erected and a larger number have been repaired and enlarged. A number of others are nearing completion. During the month of October the following buildings are to be dedicated: Japanese, Seattle, church and community Christian center building, cost $40,000. Chinese, Seattle, church and community Christian center building, cost $37,000; Centralia, First church building, cost $25,000.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

ALTHOUGH A MAJORITY of the members of the congregation of the Covina Church took a vacation this summer, plans were formulated and preparations made for the work of the church and all its departments for the coming year. The pastor, Rev. C. D. Eddy, and his wife enjoyed their vacation in the month of July, spending part of the time camping among the Big Trees. The last week they were with the young people at their annual encampment in the mountains, where Mr. Eddy had charge of one of the morning study periods. The W. W. G. was well represented at the summer school of missions at Santa Monica the first week of July. The women of the mission circle are determined to help the South Pacific District capture the prize this year, as they did last, in the National Reading Contest. They are procuring the books as rapidly as possible and are reading them and already have many points to their credit. They have also formulated plans for other phases of their work and are working for the prize given by Missions in the Question Box. The Sabbath school, although depleted in numbers succeeded in keeping alive an active and interesting spirit. During the pastor's vacation, as has been the custom for several years, the Presbyterians, worshiped with the Baptists, the Presbyterian pastor filling the pulpit. In August when the Presbyterian pastor was on his vacation the Baptists worshiped within the Presbyterian church. The Baptists of Covina are saddened by the "caking home" of two of their most promising young men members, within two weeks of each other.

we in possession of the spiritual resources with which to help meet it? Will our fellowship with the Christian forces in China minister to the development of a sacrificial spirit in them which will insure the triumph of Christ and his cross in their country?

Perhaps no one has spoken more fittingly of the conference than a Chinese, Mr. T. C. Chao, who said: "No Christian ought to entertain wild expectations and hope to receive more than he contributes. A great 'spiritual adventure' has been launched and every Christian will be held accountable for its success or failure. It is a time of testing."

The writer of this article naturally asks what is the accountability of Northern Baptists at such a moment? With other Christians we share responsibility for fellowship with the Christians of China, but the "spiritual adventures" of our fathers should qualify us for a peculiar sympathy for those who pray for "unfettered freedom." At such a moment let us open again the New Testament and read once more: "If then God gave unto them the like gift (the Holy Spirit) as he did also unto us, when we believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I, that I could withstand God? And when they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, 'Then to the Gentiles also hath God granted repentance unto life.'"

Promoting Evangelism

That really is the purpose of the Inter-denominational Evangelistic Association, headquarters at Winona Lake, Ind., and this was emphasized in the last annual meeting. The desire of the association is to have pastors and churches unite in putting on a program of evangelism which will mean not only a single meeting, but work which throughout the entire church year will bring the message and purpose of the gospel to the attention of the unsaved people in the church and community, and if possible bring them to a decision for Christ. In such a program there is opportunity for every kind of effort, sustaining or brief, regular or exceptional, personal or vocational; local conditions must decide what is best to be done. The secretary of the association, Rev. Parley E. Zartmann, Winona Lake, Ind., will be glad to correspond with churches or union committees desiring information regarding leaders.

The following are the officers of the association for the ensuing year: Pres., O. A. Newlin; vice-presidents, Wm. A. Sunday, Chas. R. Scoville, Bob Jones, M. B. Williams; board of directors, John S. Hamilton, I. E. Honeywell, E. DeWitt Johnston, Elmer P. Loose, G. H. Meinardi, Earle Naftzger, Chas. F. Raach, Geo. T. Stephens, H. E. Storrs, Thos. P. Ullom, Chas. F. Weigle, R. Hayes Willis; gen. sec. and treas., Parley E. Zartmann; office sec., M. Grace Stevenson.

Both child and community are losers by a policy which allows children under the age of sixteen years to be gainfully employed, according to a report on the working children of Boston just issued by the U. S. Department of Labor through the children's bureau. They have not received an education of the sort to make them adaptable to changing industrial conditions or to give them an understanding of the duties of citizenship. The study dealt with conditions which attended the entrance into working life of all children in Boston, Cambridge, Somerville, and Chelsea, Mass., who passed their fourteenth birthday in a given year and who entered employment within two years thereafter, a total of 5,692, or approximately one-third of the children of their ages in these cities. The reason most frequently given by the children for going to work was that of economic need, but retardation and lack of adjustment to school life appeared to be important factors also. Of 3,399 who had entered full-time employment,—all of whom were at least 14 and a large proportion 15 years of age—50.4 per cent had not completed the eighth grade before entering industry. Many of those interviewed gave as their reason for leaving that they disliked school or were dissatisfied with their progress. These facts show the pressing need, the report declares, for the study and application of methods of training adolescent boys and girls which shall make the most of whatever capacity each may possess.

In Many Pulpits with Dr. C. I. Scofield.
New York: Oxford University Press,
New York Branch. $2.50.

In these days of rigid economy and painful parsimony in book-making, it does rejoice the heart to get hold of so beautiful a work as this volume of twenty-seven sermons from the pen and heart of the famous Bible teacher. The typography and paging are worthy of the fine traditions of the house which publish this book. The selection of sermons is made from a large number delivered in an extensive itinerant ministry in America and Europe. This book is especially suitable for a gift, and a multitude of Dr. Scofield's disciples and friends over the country will welcome such a gift.

Every-Member Evangelism, by J. E. Conant, D.D., Evangelist. Philadelphia: Sunday School Times Publishing Co. $1.50.

As evangelism in its technical sense is becoming more and more incorporated into the activities of the church such a volume as this is a great help to leaders in such spiritual activities. It is the fruit of a large experience. We are impressed that the introduction and the hortatory and didactic portions could be abbreviated without a serious loss, for they are already in the heart of a Christian worker. The appendix, which is an instruction on how to organize evangelistic efforts, is exceedingly valuable. Its scheme may not be followed in every particular, but as a working plan it will be found very helpful.

Why Europe Leaves Home, by Kenneth L. Roberts. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Co. $3.

Whether you want an interesting travel-book, or a study of post-war conditions in Europe, a treatise on the immigration problem up to date, or an indictment of booze, you will want this book. The title-page tells us it is "a true account of the reasons which cause Central Europeans to overrun America; which lead Russians to rush to Constantinople and other fascinating and unpleasant places; which coax Greek royalty and commoners into strange by-ways and Ledges; and which induce Englishmen and Scotchmen to go out at night. From accurate and de-propagandized information gathered in England, Scotland, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Danzig, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Turkey and Greece in the years 1920 and 1921."

Mr. Roberts presents the existing conditions relative to European immigration so clearly as to leave no doubt as to the imperative need of laws restricting and selecting the flow of immigrants to America. Every state and national legislator should read it—and heed it.

Men Who Conquered, by John T. Faris. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

Here is the sort of a book that ought to find its place quickly into the hands of schoolteachers, teachers of boys' classes in the Sunday school, and business men who have under them growing youth. Dr. Faris has told in a gripping way the life stories of fifteen men, all of whom "achieved splendid things, in the face of difficulties and discouragements almost without number." Most of the men are Americans, and all of them are of the modern world: Jacob Riis, and Isaac Pitman, Charles Eastman of the "Kodak" film, and George Westinghouse of the air brake, George Bancroft and John Muir—inventors and explorers and presidents and millionaires. Make a note of this book against the coming Christmas; your boys will like it.

"It Is to Laugh"

Inquisitive young daughter—"Papa, what do you do all day long at the office?"

Father (not paying much attention to the question, as he is busy reading the evening paper)—"Oh, nothing."

Daughter (not easily discouraged)—"Well, how do you know when you are through?"—Dallas News.

Gleanings from examination papers that provoke a smile:

"There were no Christians among the early Gauls, they were mostly lawyers."

"In 1620 the Pilgrims crossed the ocean and this is known as Pilgrim's Progress."

"Henry VIII was very fat, besides being a non-conformist."

"The Pyramids are a range of mountains between France and Spain."

"Algebra was the wife of Euclid."

"Algebraical symbols are used when you don't know what you are talking about."

"Geometry teaches us how to bisect angels."

"A vacuum is a large, empty place where the Pope lives."

"The climate is caused by hot and cold weather."

"A brute is an imperfect beast; man is a perfect beast."

CHURCH ACOUSTICS

One of the bothersome elements to be considered in the building of churches and auditoriums is the matter of acoustics. So few architects seem to give the matter due consideration; and as a result we find many church-rooms beautiful in outline and symmetrical in proportion but at fault when it comes to giving clearness and resonance to tones. No argument is required to prove the misfortune of this situation—for it badly handicaps both the minister and the choir. To judge from the letters along this line which reach me at this office, only too many churches are awake to the necessity of doing something to alleviate such conditions in their own properties.

A letter of last week asks some pointed questions as to the efficiency of wires strung across the room, and as to whether the kind of metal has anything to do with the remedial properties of the wires. This church is planning to install a new organ; but is anxious to remedy an annoying echo first. I have never known of a case where this scheme of wiring has done much good, even when the network of wires installed looked like a Western Union main office. To my notion the smear of open wires seriously detracts from the beauty of the hall, and is not efficient to counterbalance the ugliness. A much better scheme is that followed by a large Chicago church—the Hyde Park Methodist. Since my wife was soloist in this church for ten years and directed the large chorus-choir there, two services each Sunday; and I have given many organ programs in this same church, we can speak from experience as to the particular problems involved.

The auditorium of this house of worship is beautiful to the eye but is sadly marred, acoustically by numerous projections and little niches in the roof, complicated by a fair-sized dome—all forming fine reflecting and, what is worse, refracting surfaces to the sound waves. As a result the voice of the minister was scattered to the four points of the compass, his words were mangled and distorted; only a favored few in the middle of the church had any definite idea what the sermon was about. The same weight was on the music; the soloist and the choir had to make superhuman efforts to make themselves understood and heard to advantage. That the situation was due to the faulty proportions of the hall was proved when the choir or speaker would be heard in other surroundings. My wife has always prided herself on her ability to sing the English language as a thing of beauty and distinctness, and has had many press notices stressing this fact. But no one would be likely to hear any such clarity in this church hall; both minister and singer suffered from this unfortunate condition.

During the past years many attempts have been made to solve the difficulty—stringing wires included. But nothing seemed to have any definite value. A final and successful attempt was made this summer. The committee responsible called in the expert advice of Professor Watson, of the University of Illinois, a nationally recognized authority on the subject of sound problems. After a thorough analysis of the situation and his expert diagnosis, the problem was placed in the hands of the Johns-Mansville Company for solution. This consisted in erecting sound-absorbers of thick felt at the refractory angles. A particular kind of canvas was built out in front of them so that they were hidden from view, but could still act as sponges for offensive sound eddies. The canvas shields were painted to match the auditorium when the decorating was done last month, so that they are not in any way noticeable. The important thing is that the annoying echoes and "dead-spots" have disappeared—the sounding qualities of the auditorium have been improved immeasurably. Of course the complication of the dome and the small pockets in the roof still exist, and can be remedied only by rebuilding, or closing off the cavities. But, luckily, this interference is but slight—and is counterbalanced by the great improvement consummated by the felt pads. The resiliency and sharpness of the acoustics now are a source of satisfaction to everybody. For, as one of the choir members said the other night—"Even the choir can now hear what the minister is talking about!" As is evident, the value of the services in this church will be magnified a hundred-fold by this improvement. The point is recommended to any other congregation with like troubles. The results are worth the effort and cost. This page is open to any information along this line from the readers. Write in and tell of your experience in dealing with this serious problem.

O, true love is a bonny flower.....Grant-Schaefer
Four and twenty snowflakes.....Stickles

Three attractive songs are listed above. All are of an easy grade, tuneful and likeable; they will make fine numbers for teaching purposes or for home-music. The first is issued in two keys; the other two are for medium voice.

From The Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

Rude Wind, Cruel Sea.....Glen
Love can dieGlen
Folks need a lot of loving.....Glen

Three "taking" songs, easy to play and sing and clever in sentiment and expression. For teaching purposes or for relief use on concert programs, they should find wide approval. Though not in any way representative of American song-writing on the progressive wing, harmonically and in style they hark back to the days of early Nevin—they have a straight forward melody and broad harmonizations to recommend them; and they are singable to an unusual degree (a not too prevalent virtue just now, judging from much of the recent output).

Rev. F. F. Parsons who recently resigned his pastorate of almost ten years at the West Allis Church, Wis., is acting pastor of the church at Barron the same state.

After forty-five years in the pastorate, Rev. Frank C. Colby has resigned to retire from active ministry. For the past sixteen years he has served the church at Hatboro, Pa.

Rev. J. E. Martin, who recently observed the fourteenth anniversary of his pastorate of First Church, Jellico, Tenn., has received, during the past year, more than 200 new members into his church, and has enrolled 126 titheholders.

At the beginning of the new term of the Mabie Memorial School at Yokohama 130 boys were admitted. This is only half the number who applied for admission, the others being rejected because of lack of accommodations. With an enrollment of 450, the big building is taxed to capacity.

Rev. O. R. O. Farrell, pastor of First Church, Storm Lake, Iowa, died at his home in that city, Sept. 3. He was a graduate of Denison and served with acceptance churches in Ohio and Iowa.

Miss Louise Foreman has been appointed traveling student secretary by the interboard commission on student religious activity of the Southern Baptist Convention. Her headquarters are at Memphis, Tennessee.

While in Brazil, Secretary Hughes attended services in the American Union church in Rio de Janeiro where Dr. W. E. Browning, educational secretary of the committee on cooperation in Latin America, spoke on the spiritual significance of Pan-Americanism. Secretary Hughes received another touch of the influence of the evangelical cause in Brazil when he attended in the afternoon a reception given him by the well-known journalist, Jose Carlos Rodriguez. Dr. Rodriguez formerly the proprietor of the largest daily paper in Rio de Janeiro, has been giving the last few years to the preparation of an introduction to the Bible. He is a strong believer in the evangelical cause and the power of the Bible in solving Brazil's problems.

Under date of Sept. 1, the Foreign Mission Society received this brief message from Dr. W. O. Lewis, its special representative in Europe: "I am on the train from London to Dover on my way to Russia. Rushbrooke and I are together." The denomination will be glad to know that Dr. Lewis, who has made such a favorable beginning of his service in Europe, was able to secure permission to enter Russia. Under present conditions, it is exceedingly difficult to secure permission to cross the Russian frontier. Doubtless, in a few weeks Dr. Rushbrooke and Dr. Lewis will advise the Foreign Mission Society as to what further steps should be taken in relief work in Russia. Probably they will be able, too, to give authentic information as to the condition and progress of the Baptist work in Russia. It is certain that Baptists in Russia have grown in numbers very largely during the last few years. One of the recent reports, which seems to be authentic, is to the effect that in a single day in one

Fundamental Principles

Everything in Life—a house, a successful business, a denominational program, a man's faith—must have an adequate foundation. Fundamental principles are as necessary as food and air. So there are also fundamental principles in stewardship.

1. God is the owner of all.
2. Man is a steward and should treat all that he has as a sacred trust, for which he is accountable to God.
3. God's ownership and man's stewardship should be acknowledged by the contribution of a definite portion of his time, energy, and possessions to the special service of God.
4. Faithfulness in our stewardship is the only adequate expression of gratitude and loyalty to Jesus Christ, our Saviour and Lord.

The month of October has been suggested for the promotion of a stewardship program in every local Baptist church. Copies of the pamphlets "Suggested Stewardship Program for Local Churches" and "Suggested Stewardship Topics for October" and all material needed will be furnished on application to any State Convention office.

"I will place no value on anything I have, or may possess, except in relation to the Kingdom of Christ. If anything I have will advance the interests of that Kingdom, it shall be given away or kept, only as by giving or keeping it I may promote the glory of Him to whom I owe all my hopes in time and eternity".—David Livingstone.

city more people were baptized than on the day of Pentecost. Our people will be glad to know that the Foreign Mission Society, through Commissioner Rushbrooke and its own special representative, Dr. Lewis, will study the situation as carefully as possible.

The Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions has just published a directory of oriental missions compiled under the auspices of the Oriental Missions Council on the Pacific Coast. The directory confines itself to statistics of Christian work being done for Chinese, Japanese, Koreans and Hindus on the Pacific Coast and in the intermountain districts. Population statistics indicate a decrease of Chinese population in these areas from 89,863 in 1900 to 61,639 in 1920 and an increase of the Japanese in these areas from 24,326 to 111,010 in the same period of time. The data indicates a wide scattering of the Japanese people into the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Utah and Colorado. Only 71,952 Japanese are in the great state of California. Of this number 19,911 are in Los Angeles County. In 1920 the number of Hindus was 2,507, of Koreans 1,224. Among the Chinese there is a total church membership of 3,072 and 5,390 among the Japanese. Sixteen mission boards have a total property value of $808,150 in Chinese work and a total annual expenditure through 163 paid workers of $149,352 of which $47,559 is contributed by the Chinese themselves. Eighteen mission boards are at work among the Japanese. Their property valuation is $948,175 and the total annual cost through 168 workers $236,190. Of this amount the Japanese themselves contribute $119,173.

Oct. 4-8 is being observed by the Baptist Union of Rochester and Monroe County, N. Y., as Baptist week. A committee consisting of Dr. C. S. Savage, Prof. H. B. Robins and Clinton Wunder has been making preparations for a big time. Wednesday evening, all the churches will stress fundamental Baptist principles, with a wide distribution of the article in the last U. S. Religious Census on Baptists. Thursday, the women will have a big meeting at Lake Avenue with Mrs. W. A. Montgomery and Miss Nellie Prescott as speakers. Thursday evening, a big supper meeting for laymen and women. Friday evening a Life Work Supper Conference for young people will be held followed by a mass meeting to be addressed by Dr. Fred E. Taylor of Indianapolis, president of the Northern Baptist Convention. The following Sunday the pastors will speak on Baptists and their opportunity and a drive for 1,000 subscribers to THE BAPTIST will be made.

A Prayer

OUR Father, who art in Heaven, we, thy children that have been redeemed by thy grace in Christ Jesus, our Lord, are just beginning our year's work for thee. As we come to the task, we want to thank thee for the rest and inspiration of the vacation season but we want to thank thee even more for this sacred and blessed privilege of service that thou hast given us. Help us to realize, oh Gracious Father, that the rest and service are both thy gifts to us.

And now, as we begin the service, equip us for it. Purify our hearts, that we may see that which thou wouldst have us do, and consecrate our lives, that we may do faithfully that which we undertake; and quicken us by thy Holy Spirit, that our service shall be to the glory of thy son, our Saviour, in whose name we ask it all.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. N. S. McKechnie, vice-principal of Woodstock College, Woodstock, Ont., died suddenly at the home of a son at Dorval, Quebec, September 13. For forty-one years he served as professor of English in the College.

In the death of Sir Thomas Glen Coats, chairman of the J & P Coats thread firm, Paisley, Scotland, Scottish Baptists lose a most valued member. Outside of his church interests he gave largely of his time and means in combating tuberculosis.

The Baptist Temple, Rochester, N.Y., as a piece of community service has installed a drinking fountain for the thirsty passerby. The Temple building is located on a busy thoroughfare in the downtown section.

Rev. George M. Parks has just begun his services as a special worker among the young people of the First church, San Diego, Cal. Rev. Frank O. Belden is the pastor.

Rev. Charles D. Eldridge, who has been the pastor of First Church, Coffeyville, Kan., has closed his work in that important field. Mr. Eldridge plans for a period of travel and rest before assuming other official responsibilities, and will spend the winter in California.

Dr. Selden W. Cummings closed his work at the Ruggles Street Church, Boston, on Sept. 12. He will be followed by the good wishes and prayers of a united people. The church is rejoicing in the coming of Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur, president of the Baptist World Alliance, as preacher and leader for the month of October.

September 24 was celebrated in the Lake Avenue church, Rochester, N. Y., as "Bawden Sunday." It was the last Sunday Rev. S. D. Bawden of Kavar, India, a missionary of the church would be present at its service on account of his return to his field. The church has taken steps to secure a Ford car for use in his work in India.

The five Sunday evenings of October in the First church, Melrose, Mass., Rev. P. H. McDowell, pastor, will be musical services of worship. In days of old the people went to the churches to see the finest in art and to hear the best of music. Under the leadership of Mr. Paul Shirley, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and musicians of like ability, the pastor and music committee have planned to unite the finest in music with the highest in worship.

The Year Book of the Churches brings out the different methods of computing membership in the Roman Catholic and most of the Protestant bodies. The Roman Catholic church includes in its membership "Catholic population," while all but a few small bodies of the Protestant churches count only communicant members. It has been somewhat difficult to get the proper ratio between communicant membership and constituency but Dr. Walter Laidlow has demonstrated through various tests that communicant membership multiplied by two and eight-tenths will give "church population." On this basis the Methodist and Baptist churches have a greater constituency than the Roman Catholic church. The Methodist constituency would be 22,171,959; Baptist, 21,938,700; Roman Catholic, 17,885,646.

Evangelist Geo. W. Griffin, of Baltimore, is holding a meeting with South-west Church, St. Louis. This makes his fifth meeting in Missouri since July 20.

The 85,000 employees of the Ford Motor Company have been notified that any violation of the prohibition law on their part will cost them their position with the company.

There was no special effort at money raising at the laying of the corner stone of the Immanuel Church, Chicago, on Sunday, Sept. 17, but about $3,500 was contributed by friends. It will be recalled that a few weeks ago the church received two visits from members of the Ku Klux Klan at which time they contributed about $1,000.

Rev. G. A. Clark, pastor of the First Church, Edmonton, Alberta, has been preaching a series of sermons on "Is the World Growing Better or Worse." The series has awakened considerable interest and while the building seats 950, people have been turned away from the services on account of a crowded building.

The Board of Promotion of the Calvary church, Minneapolis, Minn., has outlined its work for the fall, beginning with a church rally at the mid-week service, Sept. 28. Oct. 1 will be observed as annual every-member-home-coming communion service. Oct. 5 the parish dinners begin at which time various groups plan their activities. Oct. 8 will be the fellowship canvass of the entire church. Oct. 13 all Calvary church social under the auspices of the women's organization, followed on Oct. 15 by a pay-up Sunday for current expense pledges and especially for the New World Movement.

We Have Done What We Couldn't

In this day of slogans we suggest that many churches can truthfully adopt the above as their slogan. They could not meet the allotment of the N. W. M. but they have done what they couldn't. They could not pay the amount after it was pledged but they are making their payments promptly month by month. It was simply impossible to get the people to take THE BAPTIST and Missions but they have somehow secured every family as subscribers to these journals. If your church is among this number, by way of reminder post on your bulletin board this slogan: "We have done what we couldn't." If you are falling down in your resolve to do what can't be done.

Killam's Kollum

Undervaluation of Denominational Papers

None who rightly esteem the kingdom of God would accord the proposition to suspend publication of our denominational papers any sort of hospitality. In fact those who love the kingdom with the greatest devotion would be the quickest to oppose such a suggestion. Those who sacrifice the most for kingdom causes try the hardest to sustain the denominational press.

Economical Publicity

There is no publicity half so cheap as is the method of maintaining the denominational paper and widening its circulation. The same amount of dissemination of denominational information through secular press advertisements, or by means of tracts and circulars through the mails would be almost a financial impossibility.

Widest Publicity

Any other method of reaching as many persons as are reached, and could be reached by a little more effort on our part by our denominational papers would be practically out of the question. A circular is the voice of one. A tract is a communication of a single person. In the denominational paper many voices call to intelligent activity in kingdom causes.

Invaluable to Kingdom Interests

What cause that moves upward is not indebted to these custodians of its fortune far more than it is able to estimate. Denominational enterprises would be on motionless seas without winds in their sails if these weekly messengers of mercy and merit did not come to fan the interest of our people into hearty movement. They instruct, stimulate, inspire and engage our people in the activities which become those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

Making an Atmosphere

Few will fail to accord to the denominational paper the function of making an atmosphere which is conducive to the right reception of other denominational claims.

When any who seek the promotion of any interest of the denomination come into the presence of those who read the denominational papers they come into an atmosphere of intelligence, friendliness and personal concern.

Subscribers Great Contributors

The upholder of these papers by subscribing for them, and also by inducing others to subscribe, is indirectly, but in a great way giving aid to every enterprise fostered by his denomination. News from the Baptists of Russia

THE announcement by the Foreign Mission Society that Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, of London, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, has just completed his investigations in Russia and is sailing at once for America, will be read with unusual interest. Together with the well-authenticated stories of widespread suffering in Russia have come reports, now and then, of very remarkable religious movements, especially with reference to the Baptists. For instance, we were told recently that on a single day more people were baptized in one of the cities of Russia than on the Day of Pentecost. Baptists in Russia, whose strength in 1914 was estimated at about 100,000, are now said to number at least a million, and some say two millions. Now Dr. Rushbrooke will be able to give reliable information, not only as to their numerical increase, but as to their progress in general and as to their plans for the future. Doubtless, too, he will be prepared to advise our foreign mission agencies as to how they can cooperate most helpfully at this time with their brethren in Russia. Although his recent visits to that country have been primarily to ascertain what further help should be given to the suffering Russian people by the Baptists of Great Britain, North America and Scandinavia, he must also have acquired much information regarding the Baptists which will be welcomed.

It will be recalled that Dr. Rushbrooke was elected Baptist Commissioner for Europe at the first international Baptist conference following the war. This conference, held in London in the summer of 1920, had been preceded by a survey of European countries in which Dr. Rushbrooke was associated with Dr. Charles A. Brooks. These men were largely responsible for the success of the London conference. Since his election to the office of Baptist Commissioner for Europe, Dr. Rushbrooke has rendered a service of great value to the Baptists of the world. He has had the direction of the large relief work in Europe which has been supported by Baptists of several countries. At the same time, he has given much of his attention to problems connected with Baptist work in the various countries which he has visited. It is evident that his close fellowship with Baptist bodies in Europe has given them new courage, and it is well known that he has made a hard fight, especially in Roumania, for religious liberty for our own brethren and for other religious minorities. His visit to the Northern Baptist Convention in 1921 will be remembered by many. THE BAPTIST gives him a hearty welcome as he comes once more to America, and it is to be hoped that he will be able to remain here long enough to visit many sections of our country.

A Communication from Greece

The following letter from Dr. Bitting, with the accompanying appeal from Greece speak for themselves.

St. Louis, Mo.
Sept. 27, 1922.

The Editor of THE BAPTIST,

My dear Brother:

I am sending you copies of two letters received in this morning's mail. Here is an appeal that I think it would be wise for you to print at once. I am sending copies of these letters also to our American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and have no doubt that the foreign secretary of that organization, Rev. J. H. Franklin, D.D., will be glad to receive and transmit any funds which our churches or individuals may care to give for the relief of these distressed people. * * *

These letters were sent to me as the Corresponding Secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention by the Greek Legation. I am sure that Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, president of the Northern Baptist Convention will approve of my sending these communications to you.

Yours sincerely,

W. C. Bitting
Corres. Sec., N. B. C.

Légation Royale De Grèce A Washington
September 23, 1922.

The Greek Legation presents its compliments to the Reverend W. C. Bitting, Executive Secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention, and, at the request of the Greek Clergy Association, Athens, Greece, begs to transmit to him the enclosed text of their telegraphic communication.

Calumny

A WHISPER woke the air,
A soft, light tone, and low,
Yet barbed with shame and woe.
Ah! might it only perish there,
Nor farther go!

But no! a quick and eager ear
Caught up the little, meaning sound;
Another voice has breathed it clear;
And so it wandered round
From ear to lip, from lip to ear,
Until it reached a gentle heart
That throbbed from all the world apart,
And that—it broke!

Text of Communication Received from the Head of the Greek Church

In the name of our Saviour Jesus Christ, we, the undersigned, plunged in profoundest grief on account of unspeakable crimes perpetrated against peaceful and defenseless Christian populations of Smyrna and throughout Asia Minor by Kemalist hordes athirst for Christian blood, beseech you to assist us in saving those of the Faithful, who, so far, have escaped the Kemalist scourge.

Smyrna, one of the largest cities in the Near East, has ceased to exist. Foreign eye witnesses—European and American—report that the Turkish populace and the infuriated Kemalist soldiers, soon after they made their entrance into the city, set it on fire and burnt it to the ground.

Those unfortunate Christians who were spared by the flames, when coming out of their dwellings, frantic with fear, met death in the streets where their enraged slayers waited for them and killed them without discrimination of sex or age.

All the churches, including the Roman Catholic Cathedral, have been devoured by the flames. The Greek Archbishop, Greek and Armenian priests were slaughtered. These acts were witnessed by foreigners who had taken refuge in Athens, and took place under the very eyes of the European men-of-war which remained passive observers of butcheries, plunder and incendiarism.

Hundreds of thousands of Christians, without shelter or food, are left on the ruins of Smyrna in dire distress and panic stricken. You are their last hope and salvation. They implore you to take immediate action on behalf of 8,000 members of the Greek Clergy Association.

Signed

Damaskinos Papandreou, Archbishop, Papikononou, Priest & Secretary, Holy Synod of the Greek Church.

Greek Legation.

Dr. Rushbrooke Sailing For America

The Foreign Mission Society has been advised by cable that Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, has returned to London, after visiting Russia again, and that he is starting for America immediately. Doubtless he desires conference at once with the Baptist foreign mission agencies, whose headquarters are in Toronto, Richmond and New York. In his visit to Russia, Commissioner Rushbrooke was accompanied by Dr. W. O. Lewis, representative of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and Dr. Everett W. Gill, representing the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, who joined him in the following cablegram: "Strongly urge all possible steps to send clothing Russia. Need very great."

Doubtless Dr. Rushbrooke secured authentic information, not only in regard to the need for further relief work in Russia, but he must at the same time, have learned accurately the story of the progress of Baptists in that country, about which we have heard so much in recent months. He is due to reach New York by Oct. 10, and it is hoped that his ship will arrive in time for him to meet with the Board of Managers of the Foreign Mission Society, which is expected to be in session that day. His story will be given to the denominational papers as soon as possible.—James H. Franklin, Foreign Sec.

Delegates who expect to attend the Illinois Baptist State Convention at Centralia, Oct. 16-19, will please send their names to one of the following persons: Mrs. J. S. Wilson, 423 N. Poplar St., or H. T. Cunningham, 324 N. Poplar St., Centralia, Ill.

Those who expect to stop at hotels independent of the committee are advised to make reservations ahead. The hotels are the Hotel Pittinger and the Langensfeld Hotel. Rooms in either are $1.25 up. The rooms in the Y. M. C. A. are 50c and $1. All European plan.

H. T. CUNNINGHAM, Chairman of Committee.

The Negro Baptists have lost recently two of their distinguished leaders, Dr. E. C. Morris of Little Rock, Ark., and Dr. R. H. Boyd of Nashville, Tenn. The former was president of the National Baptist Convention and had been pastor of one church forty-three years. He was a member of the executive committee of the Baptist World Alliance. Dr. Boyd had been unusually successful in building up a publishing business for his people.

The Baptist

A Continental Realignment of Baptists

NORTHERN Baptists are becoming accustomed to the frequent promulgation of signed manifestoes, of creeds proposed for immediate and wholesale adoption, of blank applications for membership in new "movements" and "fellowships," of candid requests for offerings to facilitate the circulation of printed propaganda to all the churches and all the members of our constituency.

We are acceding to the request of a group of brethren to give free publicity to the latest of these proposed movements having for its aim a new alignment of the Baptist churches of the United States and Canada and their foreign mission staffs. We are also publishing in this issue a resume of a notable article by Dr. L. R. Scarborough of Texas on the program announced by the Los Angeles Fundamentalist Conference. These two articles are published as news stories having to do with the life and fellowship and development of our denomination; and we have no question as to our duty and right to publish them for the information of our readers and in fulfilment of our mission as a national Baptist paper.

The Baptist Bible Union of America, it appears from the "Call and Manifesto," is already in existence, with officers qualified to receive and disburse funds, and with a full-fledged creedal "statement of such truths as, in the present circumstances, it is important that Baptists should rehearse and emphasize." No clue to the authorship of the "Doctrinal Basis" is given, and we are left to guess among several possible sources: the 132 American signers to the "Call," or the three members of the committee; or any one of the three; or (as we incline to believe) the three English brethren who sign as officers of the Baptist Bible Union of England.

Whatever may be the source of this "Doctrinal Basis," it is a rather novel procedure in Baptist history for a small group of ministers and laymen, without solicitation or appointment by the constituency which they propose to serve, to formulate a "statement of such truths as . . . it is important that Baptists should rehearse and emphasize," and of essential and clearly revealed doctrines" which are declared to be "fundamental and vital," and then to offer this "Doctrinal Basis" for the hearty subscription of "all Baptist churches and Baptist church members in the United States and Canada"—when these churches and church members have had no part whatever in the discussion and formulation of this document—a document which is to be the touchstone and standard by which their doctrinal views and their message are to be judged. This unusual, not to say presumptuous procedure seems flatly to controvert and contradict the very principle stated among the "Aims" of the "Baptist Bible Union of America" as included in the "Call and Manifesto": "6. The maintenance of the right of each local Baptist church to manage its own affairs, under the sole authority and rule of the Lord Jesus Christ, and apart from any outside demands." This principle, if conceded, reduces to comparative indifference and inconsequence the privilege of membership in this new organization which requires hearty conformity with a ready-made, man-made creed as a condition of the enjoyment of that privilege.

A significant feature of the new movement is its specific committal to the premillennial view of the Second Advent. The "Doctrinal Statement" with its article concerning "His Glorious Second Advent—Premillennial, Personal and Visible," implies a breach in the ranks of the fundamentalists and a realignment of the adherents of that movement in support of "essential and clearly revealed doctrines," among which is that of the premillennial coming of Christ. As we have noted elsewhere, according to Mr. Charles R. Brock, an eminent spokesman for fundamentalism, it is not true "that premillennialism is accepted by the fundamentalists as definite truth." Apparently this admitted liberty among the fundamentalists has forced certain of the group into the new proposed organization which denies such liberty and affirms that premillennialism is among the "fundamental and vital truths" of the Christian revelation. If our inference is sound, this group represents a protest against the fundamentalist movement which these men themselves inaugurated, and at least partly in advocacy of the premillennial doctrine which the fundamentalists do not accept as "definite truth."

The new organization announces its purpose "to promote such missionary, evangelistic and educational work as the union may feel led to undertake or desire to encourage." We have remarked elsewhere that this attempt to align American Baptist churches in a new and exclusive organization makes no avowal of its loyalty to the New World Movement and pledges no cooperation in the world-embracing enterprises of our historic and fruitful missionary societies. On the contrary it is clearly implied that the "Baptist Bible Union of America" aspires to become a new denominational body with a stereotyped written creed and with its own distinctive program and propaganda. The committee announces that "a call for a national convention will be sent forth in due season." "The Call and Manifesto" provides for a "council" and for state and sectional unions. We are witnessing therefore the attempted formation of a new denomination, to be effected by the excision or absorption from the existing Baptist denominational bodies of such churches and individuals as can be persuaded to sunder their present relationships and obligations, or to discount them by enrolling as members of the "Baptist Bible Union of America." The movement is a movement avowedly of dissident and disseverance, whose ultimate effect, if completely successful, would be the disintegration of the Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions as now organized and administered, and the collapse of the movements for world redemption to which these bodies are committed.

We have sought in this article accurately to state and honestly to interpret this new adventure in Baptist realignment, as we understand it and appraise it. Our own clear conviction is that in the present condition of the world and under the burden of our imperative denominational tasks and opportunities, peace and not confusion, unity and not division, confidence and not controversy, patience and not petulance, love and not logomachy, should control our churches and characterize our activities. Incessant and increasing preoccupation over formal statements of doctrine, and unremitting interest in a cumulative propaganda which offers gratuitously to 8,000,000 Baptists a man-made creed and a new basis for fellowship, tend to the most deplorable distraction from the task which our Lord has committed to his people. If the church is his body, and if the New Testament is the revelation of his grace as Saviour of sinners, and if his Spirit is promised to abide with us and to guide us: what need we of other mentor to test and correct our faith, what want we of any lesser and more partial security against error and untruth? "Therefore, brethren, since we are not children of a slave-girl, but of the free woman—Christ having made us gloriously free—stand fast and do not again be hampered with the yoke of slavery." (Gal. 4:31f.)

"IT is the will of God!" Pillage of stores and houses; devastation of schools and orphanages; deportation of families; violation of maidens; spoliation of cities; extermination of nations; is this the will of God for any portion of the race whose chief offense is that they confess the Cross and worship the Crucified? Islam: it is the will of God! Is it the will of God that outraged Armenia suffer yet longer at the hands of her blood-thirsty rulers whose sovereignty is validated by the "Great Christian Powers"? Is it the will of God that the monstrous infamy of Turkish misrule in the Balkans be obliterated from memory by a new treaty which welcomes the banished Ottoman back to Europe? War indeed is frightful—but it is no more frightful in October, 1922, than it was in August, 1914. War is an intolerable evil—but there are worse evils than war; else this nation stultified itself when it took up arms against Germany. What forgiveness can the Great Powers expect at the hands of God when they have forfeited their divine commission as the avengers of oppressed peoples and helpless nations, by their interminable squabbling among themselves over the spoil of battle? O for a Gladstone to stir the heart of the British Empire once more with its fiery plea for tortured Armenia! O for another Bernard to set France on fire with holy passion to enlist in another Crusade for the relief of oppressed and enslaved Christian peoples from the brutal Moslems! O for a modern Peter the Hermit, at Paris, or in Downing Street, or at Washington, to cry "God wills it!" to the sleeping conscience of Christendom in behalf of a movement to deliver the suffering remnant in the Near East!

Make It Concrete

IN an editorial in THE BAPTIST of September 16 under the title of "Are you a Liability or an Asset?" attention was called to the almost invaluable service of maps and charts. It is very difficult for most people to become enthusiastic over a world, a denomination or education in general. The subjects are too large and their fields too extended. There is grave danger in being interested in everything in general and nothing in particular. Most of us need helps in order to make the task concrete. The purpose of the editorial in question was to call attention to the fact that men and women, our own brethren in Christ, are at work at definite tasks here and there all around the world. For instance, we are all thinking of Swatow now. Our attention has been called to its devastation. Our eyes have looked upon the pictures of the scene of destruction. We have heard, as we hear again in this issue, from those who passed through the typhoon. Due in no small measure to publicity, there will be a wide response to the special appeal authorized by the Administrative Committee. This illustrates the wisdom of making more definite and concrete all of our appeals. It should not be forgotten that our General Board of Promotion has prepared a set of eight missionary maps showing the location of every missionary of all our societies, general and woman's. If your church does not have the maps which will help you in your study classes, it would be well for you to secure full information from any one of the branches of the Literature Department of the Board.

Stop, Look, Listen

INSPECTORS of the Pennsylvania railroad recently made a check of 30,378 automobile drivers at Highway crossings in five Eastern states. A summary of these checks showed that 97 per cent drove over the railroad tracks in a careful manner, but 3 per cent failed to exercise the ordinary precautions necessary for the protection of life. There are more than 10,000,000 automobiles in use in the United States. Three per cent represents 300,000. This number of carelessly driven machines distributed on the streets and highways of our country constitutes a serious menace to the safety of all the people and an unwarranted reflection upon the careful drivers who make up 97 per cent of the total.

This is, we believe, a fair illustration of the general attitude of our people toward law and order. The reckless drivers are in evidence because of their wild driving and its disastrous results. Makers of home brew and violators of the prohibition laws are a minority—a small minority in most sections of the population. They are much in evidence. They hold demonstrations and sign petitions and constitute a menace to law and order. They are, however, like the reckless drivers, a dangerous minority.

Mandates

ONE by one the magnificent ideals and splendid visions included in the Versailles Treaty fade into obscurity, and there is thrown into sharp relief the age-long tragedy of human selfishness and the brutal prowess of the strong over the weak.

The policy of committing weak and undeveloped peoples to the protection and humane care of powerful civilized nations was one of the outstanding features of the treaty. "Mandates" promised to make forever impossible a recurrence of the murderous career of Leopold in the Congo and Spain in Cuba.

The third assembly session of the league of nations is being held at Geneva, and a Haytian delegate, M. Bellegarde, has hurled a bombshell into the camp of these guardians of modern civilization by revealing the shocking story of the massacre of more than one hundred Hottentots in southwest Africa last June at the hands of the British expeditionary force. The story is given as follows by a foreign news service correspondent of the Chicago Tribune:

"The Hottentots were unable to pay £1 a year dog tax, increasing to £10 a year for five years, which the British government levied on them, although they tried to sell cattle to raise the funds.

"The British, it seems, do not want the Hottentots to have dogs, because with dogs the natives can hunt and obtain food to live on. Without dogs, and lacking firearms and other weapons, they are obliged to work for the white settlers to obtain food.

"The Hottentots complain that when they do work for the whites they do not receive the meager wages promised them, nor the ragged clothing they are expected to get. Anyway, the British try to keep the Hottentots working for them, and so tax dogs so the natives can't have the animals.

"Mountain artillery, machine guns, airplanes and bombs and other modern implements of war were used by the force of 350 who were sent to punish the Hottentot tribe, numbering about 300, of which only eighty-six were men, the rest women and children.

"The report on the matter describes in detail how the punitive force tracked down the natives, pursuing them and capturing their cattle, until finally the Hottentots were reduced to one donkey, which they killed and ate. Then the expeditionary force attacked and the airplane dropped bombs, which killed about 100 natives. Afterward the victorious forces cleaned up the ground. They found the Hottentots did not have a hundred rifles, and what they had were old and rusty."

With this sort of thing going on under flags which claim to represent our noblest Christian civilization; with the story of the Herrin slaughter flashing around the world; with the French exploitation of Syria under her mandate for that distressed region: how can we of the "great nations" of the world look the Turk in the face and in the name of God tell him to get off the earth?

The law of Christ as defined by Paul is the only worthy principle by which mandates may be fulfilled: "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves"; and until strong and self-sufficient nations cease to regard primitive and undeveloped tribes as incidental factors in the profitable exploitation of natural and human resources, those nations have no right to assume in God's name the lordship of the world.

The Versailles Dream was the vision of a world in which the spirit of Jesus Christ controlled those who controlled the dominant forces of organized human society: government, commerce, science, finance. The grim reality is a world whose governments, commerce, science, finance, are paralyzed or manipulated by selfish ambition and self-seeking intrigue. The Versailles Dream will never have realization until rulers and parliaments and legislatures and boards of trade have been born from above. The new world which the Versailles Treaty sought to secure by covenants and leagues and stipulations and commissions, can come into being only through the regenerative power of him who maketh all things new. The evangel of redemption and life through Christ, the message of our New World Movement to all nations and to all governments and to all institutions, is the only adequate solvent for the universal malady which enthralles mankind.

A Spiritual Clinic

WHAT percentage of the total membership of your church attends the mid-week meeting? In many churches such gatherings are sparsely attended. Numbers of churches have discontinued the mid-week prayer meeting as such. Other churches have made this gathering a church night in which committees, study classes and social groups hold their several meetings. Much can be said in behalf of this plan. There is, however, in most churches a genuine need for a real prayer meeting. In the calendar of the First Church, St. Paul, we read, "It is now time to revive the attendance at the mid-week spiritual clinic. 'Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish, earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.' Let us keep our communication with heaven unbroken. We have problems to solve, diseases to be healed, sins to be cleansed and forgiven, ideals to realize, and plans to carry out. Let us make the mid-week meeting rich with prayer, with praise, with fellowship in Christ."

If the mid-week meeting of the church can be made to minister to the deepest needs of men, the problem of attendance will be easily solved. That many of our week-night church meetings do not serve as spiritual clinics is due in large measure to the tendency to emphasize the teaching that every man shall bear his own burden. We are apt to forget that we are exhorted to bear one another's burden. Burden sharing is possible only where there is frankness upon the part of those who are living under the shadow of physical, intellectual or spiritual distress.

How Science Helps Our Faith

BY SHAILER MATHEWS.

SCIENCE always has been making its contribution to religious thought. Every religion has had its view of the universe. One can see this in its literature. True, such views do not constitute the most valuable element in religion. For example: the writers of the Old Testament speak of the earth as flat and of a solid firmament resting like an inverted bowl above it. They speak of Sheol, a great pit under the earth where the spirits of the dead went, and of water beneath and around the flat earth. Underneath the firmament were the sun and the moon and the stars. In order to believe the religious teaching of the Bible one does not need to accept such views of the physical universe as these. The really important thing is that man believed that God was a creator and a preserver of the universe as they knew it. As far as their knowledge went, they found God. He was in the uttermost parts of the earth. He was in Sheol.

The Copernican Theory

The early Christians did not feel the need of scientific study in order to believe in Jesus Christ. They accepted the scientific views which were set forth by the teachers of the day. In the course of time these views were, as it were, taken up into theology and received the approval of the church. When a new theory of the universe like that of Copernicus was broached, or when Galileo declared that the earth rotated on its axis, the conflict over such views was not exactly between science and religion, but between those views of science which the church held and other views of science which the church did not hold. It was a feud between scientists as truly as between scientists and ecclesiastics. Yet it was not long before the Copernican theory was accepted as true and built into theology. A new content was thus given to religious thinking.

Today there is the same conflict between views of nature which have been approved by the church and new facts and explanations which science has discovered. There is no doubt as to what the outcome will be. Truth always fits into truth. Theology no longer thinks of the earth as flat or denies that it circles around the sun. Our religious thought has been broadened by the substitution of the one view for the other. But we are only at the beginning of such enlargement of our religious thinking. Science can make contributions to our religious thinking today just as truly as in the past. As our knowledge of the universe extends, so can our faith extend. Unless we can believe in a God coextensive with reality, there will be some place where we must believe God does not exist or work. Such a belief would destroy Christianity.

From time to time "THE BAPTIST" has published articles in which the authors have warned of the dangers which lurk in science—perhaps science falsely so called. In this article, which is one of a series of "Science and Religion" leaflets just published by the American Institute of Sacred Literature, the well-known religious teacher shows us the other side—"How Science Helps our Faith."

Few religious teachers have seriously undertaken to utilize the results of recent science. Many of them unfortunately have opposed scientific conclusions on the basis of theology. Both attitudes are unfortunate, for modern science has much to give us in the support of our religious faith.

Especially is this true as regards our belief in God. It is a familiar fact, that philosophy is very dubious about certain of the arguments used by the defenders of Christianity in the eighteenth century. In late years, new doubt has arisen as men have become more psychological, and the idea of God has been said to be the real God. Some have socialized as well as psychologized God out of existence.

But it does not require any particular gift of prophecy to see that unless the word "God" stands for something more than an idea, we soon will not believe in any God whatever. Unless we can find arguments for his existence in the great universe in which we live, we are not likely to feel any desire to pray. The greatest need of our civilization is an absorbing conviction as to the existence of God. Can we be sure that he is? Has civilization lost its reason for faith in his existence, for reliance upon him, for obedience to his laws?

These are fundamental questions, in comparison to which everything else seems trivial. If there is not a real God in existence, we shall never get any help from religion.

But our modern scientific thought is giving us a new basis for our faith in the existence of an infinite God—the very God revealed to us by Jesus Christ. It is giving us new material for our theology.

1. Chemical and physical sciences have made it certain that there is no such thing as dead matter, but that there is universal activity. A few years ago men thought of atoms as little pellets of dead matter which in some way or other joined to make molecules. But today the atom is itself analyzed into a nucleus of positive discharge, around which circle one or more electrons of negative discharge. What looks like solid, dead matter we now know is really active.

This is true of all the universe, so far as the most accurate instruments can search out reality. Everywhere are force and action.

A Conception of Infinity

2. Science is giving us a conception of infinity. This universe that is pulsating with activity is no abstract infinity reached by speculation. Our minds are of course incapable of defining infinity except negatively, but it is possible to expand our thought so as to bring us to the place where boundaries have practically disappeared. This is what our astronomers are doing. They tell us of single stars so far away that it takes thousands of years for their light, traveling six million million miles per year to reach us; of what look like single stars which are in reality clusters of thousands of stars, billions of millions of miles in diameter. They tell us the number of stars of what they call our galaxy is probably one billion five hundred million; and then they tell us of a galaxy of such galaxies.

One's mind grows dizzy as it tries to grasp such facts, and yet that is the universe in which we actually live! And by means of scientific instruments of all but miraculous accuracy we are able to see that the same forces are active, the same elements are present through it all. It is a universe of infinite activity and force.

3. Science is showing us that this infinite activity in all its variety is reducible to formulas or laws. No intelligent person would now say that a natural law does anything. A law, in science, is a formula describing how things take place. The activities of all this universe can be expressed by mathematics. Our mathematicians figure out when the comets are to appear, as accurately as they figure the phases of the moon. The same laws describe the movements of electrons as they circle around the nucleus within the atom, which describe how planets circle around the sun. Everywhere is what we are forced to call sanity and reason; and so immanent is this rationality within these forces that it is possible to make it an assumption for further investigation. All science rests upon this conviction.

A formula based upon what we already know, used as a means of finding out that which we hope to know, is called an hypothesis. It has been said that an hypothesis is only a theory or guess; that one man's guess is as good as another's. Whoever talks thus is either uninformed, or dishonorably clouding vital issues and weakening faith. Even the tyro in science knows what hypotheses have accomplished. By their means we have found a new planet as well as new elements of matter; we have developed means for utilizing electricity and radio-activity; we understand better the meaning of life, and the cure of various diseases. No scientific man will organize an hypothesis which is not already made probable from the study of facts. A scientific hypothesis is a reading of cosmic forces.

But if the activity within this infinite universe is thus capable of rational ordering, it is impossible to believe that it does not have within itself that which must be called rational. And thus we gain a new and grander belief in a cosmic Intelligence.

A Universe of Purpose

4. Science is also showing us processes and tendencies within the field of that which can be known. Ultimate origins and destinies are beyond our knowledge, but within the limited area of experiment it is possible to see tendency and process. Just as the universe is not like the action of an insane man, it is like the action of a man with purpose and design. As one studies this wonderful continuous succession of changes where everything has its cause, called process, or development, or evolution, one supreme conviction is thrust upon us: the only thinkable explanation of this wonderful fact is that of purpose. We have thus added to our conception of activity, infinity, and rationality, that of purpose.

Thus we come inductively to a belief in an Infinite God.

5. This is not all. Science is also making plain that this process, in so far as we have been able to explore it, culminates in personality; that is to say, we human beings are its outcome. But if there is that within this rational and purposeful activity which in the course of evolution results in personal life, then there must be that within the activity itself which is at least as personal as we. It is logically impossible to think that an impersonal universe should produce personality. It is imperative to think that where personalities like ours actually exist, there must be similar elements within the universe. That though the universe is not God, God is in the universe. For by these facts the great conviction is forced upon us that just as we men and women have personality within that mass of chemical and physical activity which we call our body, so in this infinite universe is there a Person whose existence and character account for its rationality and its purpose. And thus one comes to the conception of a personal God. It is the same line of thought followed by men who knew less of the universe than we do, but it culminates in a faith which is coextensive with a universe we have come to know more actively. Nowhere is there a no-God land. Wherever there is activity, there is God.

6. But even this is not all. Our scientists are making it plain that an organism that has resulted from life in a certain environment must live in accordance with that environment if it is to continue. This is the great law of the personal life in the universe where personality has been found. We must live in this universe personally, because only thus can we come into right relations with an environment which has made personality in us possible, and is itself full of personal activity. So to live is to be religious.

Thus we reach a conclusion which is of the utmost value. Our religion is not mere survival of imperfect ancestors, neither is it mere custom or the maintenance of artificialities. It is the law of life itself. He who does not live in accordance with the laws of his own being, in sympathetic, helpful relationship with the environment upon which he depends, suffers. We are thus not merely using conventional terms when we say that a man can lose his soul. He can lose his life in the same way that a plant that does not live in the sunlight loses its color and vigor. He who would save his life must live with the infinite God immanent in this infinite universe of activity. Sin is seen to be more than a mistake. It is a violation of the very laws of being.

Confidence Strengthened

Reflection will make it plain that on such a magnificent conception of God suggested by our increased knowledge of our universe, can be raised a new understanding and faith in Jesus as a revealer of the infinite personality. Confidence in the gospel is strengthened rather than weakened by our knowledge of the forces in the midst of which we live. It is idle to be concerned over origins. They can never be changed. Religion is interested in destinies, and these we may control. The gospel is in harmony with evolution, for both are revelations of God's will.

He who understands the Bible in accordance with actual facts has no difficulty in realizing the truth of its teaching that God is in the processes which have produced and sustain mankind. It is only those who are ignorant, both of the origin and nature of the Bible and of the facts in our universe, who are terrified lest science should make them lose their faith. To all others, knowledge is light rather than darkness. Just as we live in a universe of light, and make our own night as the earth gets between us and our sun, so do we walk in religious darkness only when our prejudices and our ignorance get between us and reality. The faith which Jesus evokes is a faith in the Father who made the heavens and the earth. The Christian's God of Love is the scientist's God of Law.

He Stooped To Conquer

When the famous sculptor Sir John Steel was depicting the great Duke of Wellington, he tried every way to get the duke to look warlike, but in vain. Finally Sir John lost patience somewhat, and this scene followed:

"As I am going to make the statue of your grace, can you not tell me what you were doing before, say, the battle of Salamanca? Were you not galloping about the fields, cheering on your men to deeds of valor by word and action?"

"Bah!" said the duke, in evident scorn, "if you really want to model me as I was on the morning of Salamanca, then do me crawling along a ditch on my stomach, with a telescope in my hand."

The great Duke of Wellington found it necessary to stoop to conquer, and so must we all if we would win out in life and enter the kingdom of heaven at last as a little child.

The Baptist Bible Union of America

A new movement for doctrinal formularies, inspired by English Baptists.

TWENTY thousand copies of a "Call and Manifesto" have been sent to the Baptist churches of the United States and Canada, inviting them as churches and individuals to become subscribing and sustaining members of the "Baptist Bible Union of America" which has been organized with a "Doctrinal Basis" and a statement of "Aims."

THE BAPTIST has received a letter from Elyria, Ohio, signed by three of our Baptist brethren, R. E. Neighbor, W. L. Pettingill, and O. W. Van Osdel, enclosing a copy of the "Call and Manifesto" and requesting us to publish the larger portion thereof. Although there is no indication that the movement is designed either to promote the New World Movement or to extend the circulation of THE BAPTIST, we readily accede to the courteous request of our brethren above named, and give ample space to the announcement of their program for a new segregation and realignment of the Baptist churches of the North American continent.

The Signers

The "Call and Manifesto" is signed by 135 men (as far as we can determine there are no women in the list), eleven of whom are laymen, and "the others are pastors, evangelists, and Bible teachers." Of the total who sign, twenty-three are from Michigan and twenty-four from Ohio. A patient study of the list of signers fails to reveal the names of any considerable number of men who have been conspicuous in their advocacy of the world-embracing program of the Northern Baptist Convention as defined in the New World Movement.

Eight of the signers of the "Call and Manifesto" were also signers of the call for the Buffalo Fundamentalist Conference: W. S. Bradshaw, of West Virginia; F. W. Farr (?), (in the "Call and Manifesto" Mr. Farr's name appears as P. W. Farr; the identity is therefore not certain), of California; C. H. Heaton, of Michigan; Lawrence A. Meade, of Michigan; W. L. Pettingill, of Pennsylvania; H. Steward Tillis, of Pennsylvania; W. Leon Tucker, of New York; and George M. Vercoe, of Michigan.

The "Call" is printed verbatim herewith:

"Whereas, There has arisen within the bounds of Baptist denominationalism an ecclesiasticism, dominated by modernism, which has turned away from the Integrity, Finality and Sole-Sufficiency of the Bible as the Inspired Word of God and from the simplicity of Apostolic Evangelism—the message and method of our Fathers; and

"Whereas Within the bounds of Baptist denominationalism this ecclesiasticism, dominated by modernism, has forced the Orthodox into an unholy and God-forbidden alliance with the Heterodox; and

"Whereas, There has arisen from every side, both from churches and individual members, a call loud and long for a new fellowship in Christ Jesus wherein those who hold to the Integrity, Finality and Sole-Sufficiency of the Bible as the Word of God, and who hold to the simplicities of Apostolic Evangelism, may meet in communion, apart from unholy collusions which gender strife;

"Therefore, We, the undersigned Baptist ministers and laymen, send forth the enclosed statement of the Baptist Bible Union of America, requesting that all those who stand with us in the Doctrinal Basis and Aims of the Union, and who desire membership therein shall sign the attached membership application as per instructions on another page."

Limitation of space prevents the publication of the entire list of signers, which includes, in addition to the eleven already given: Mr. Elsworth Brown, of Dayton, O.; Joseph Cohn, of Brooklyn; Mr. E. S. Carman, of Cleveland; Rev. H. C. Fulton, of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Rev. Charles F. Fields, of Chicago; Rev. C. E. La Reau, of Detroit; Rev. D. D. Munro, of Kansas City; Rev. J. Frank Norris, of Fort Worth, Tex.; Dr. W. B. Percival, of Pasadena, Cal.; Rev. J. A. Sutherland, of San Jose, Cal.; and Rev. H. R. Whitlock, of Manchester, N. H.

The "Manifesto" provides for a national or general body and also for state or sectional unions. It is announced that "a call for a national convention will be sent forth in due season." The more essential articles of the "Manifesto" are as follows:

Definition: The Baptist Bible Union of America is a fellowship of Baptist churches and Baptist believers accepting its Doctrinal Basis and Aims.

Membership: 1. All Baptist churches, Baptist ministers or Baptist church members who endorse the Aims and Doctrinal Basis of the Union, as set forth herein, shall be eligible for membership. 2. Churches or individual believers, becoming members of the Baptist Bible Union, may follow their own pleasure as to maintaining other Baptist denominational affiliations.

An executive committee and a council provide the machinery for "carrying forward the policy of the Union, . . . but always in line with and never contrary to the expressed will of the Union."

The "Aims" of the Union are set forth in the following statement which is printed verbatim:

Aims: 1. To 'Contend earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints,' and the presentation of a united witness to the Bible as not only containing and conveying, but as being in itself the Word of God. 2. The maintenance of the Evangelical Faith; and especially of those essential and clearly revealed doctrines which, at the present time, are being assailed, questioned or ignored in certain circles. 3. To promote a deeper fellowship and a closer cooperation amongst Baptist churches and Baptist believers who hold a like precious faith, and who walk together in their conception of the mission of the church. 4. To oppose any federation of Baptist churches or believers upon any basis which involves the sacrifice of principle, or which discredits the Bible and dishonors the Lord Jesus Christ. 5. To promote such missionary, evangelistic and educational work as the Union may feel led to undertake or desire to encourage. 6. The maintenance of the right of each local Baptist church to manage its own affairs, under the sole authority and rule of the Lord Jesus Christ, and apart from any outside demands."

The "Doctrinal Basis"

The "Doctrinal Basis," full and hearty subscription to which is a condition of membership in the Union, is as follows:

"Doctrinal Basis: The following does not profess to be a comprehensive Creed, but is merely a Statement of such truths as, in the present circumstances, it is important that Baptists should rehearse, and emphasize, in view of their historic witness and of the flagrant ambiguities and omissions of fundamental and vital truths in the Doctrinal Basis of the Modernists. We emphasize, in particular:

"I. The Divine Inspiration, and the Integrity, Finality, and Sole-Sufficiency of the Bible as the Word of God. II. The Holy Trinity of Father, Son and Holy Spirit—Three Persons in one Substance. Power and Eternity in the unity of the Godhead. 1. The Love and Grace of the Father. 2. The Redemption by the Son: a. His Incarnation, Virgin Birth, Sinless Nature and Life, and His Infallibility as Teacher; b. His Substitutionary and Atoning Death; c. His Bodily Resurrection, actual and real; His Ascension into Heaven, invested with all authority; His Mediatorial Intercession, High Priest over the household of God; and His Glorious Second Advent—premillennial, personal and visible. 3. The Regeneration, or New Birth, by the Holy Spirit. III. The Depravity and Sinfulness of Mankind, in consequence of the Fall. IV. Justification and Adoption by grace, through faith in the propitiatory Sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ. V. The Baptism of believers by Immersion, and the Memorial Ordinance of the Lord's Supper. VI. Sanctification by the Holy Spirit through faith and the Word, leading to the growth in Spiritual life of God's people. VII. The Resurrection of the body, both of the just and the unjust, but each in his own order, and the final Judgment of the wicked by our Lord Jesus Christ."

The "Call and Manifesto" includes an application for membership and a request for funds to make possible the circulation of the document among the churches of the United States and Canada and all the foreign missionaries supported by these churches. Such applications and funds are to be sent to O. G. Nichols, assistant pastor of the First Baptist Church of Elyria, Ohio.

It is of interest to note that this most recent movement for a realignment of the Baptist churches of North America is positively and exclusively premillenarian. Mr. Charles R. Brock in his notable and authoritative statement of fundamental views widely published last summer,

The Goal for the Efficient Church

THE efficient church will approximate the following goal:

Every member worshipping God.
Every member living the prayer life.

Every member studying God's word.

Every member giving of his means.

An efficient church enlists its whole membership in whole-hearted service for the whole world.

Southern Baptists Concerned About Fundamentalist Invasion

Dr. L. R. Scarborough, President of the Southwestern Theological Seminary, discusses the movement.

SOUTHERN Baptists have never been so much enamored of intimate and entangling alliances with other Christian bodies. In their practical relations and activities they have been much like the cat and dog who got along finely until they were tied together. The Southern Baptist Convention has declined membership in the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. It steadfastly refused to become involved in the ill-fated Interchurch World Movement. Its attitude in problems of comity and cooperation in foreign mission fields is extremely conservative. In the words of one of their most eminent leaders, "Our Southern Baptists have regarded such union with interdenominational movements as a violation of our conception of New Testament truth and of church polity and organization. With our consciences we cannot consistently join in such movements."

Dr. L. R. Scarborough, president of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary at Fort Worth, and leader of the $75,000,000 movement of Southern Baptists, has published a significant article in the Southern Baptist papers, in which he voices the response of our southern churches to the program promulgated by the fundamentalist conference held at Los Angeles last summer. He sees in that program a coalition of Baptist and pedobaptist forces which proposes to invade the field of the Southern Baptist Convention with a propaganda and appeal whose result, if successful, would be the subversion of the existing organized fellowship and work of the convention, and the supplanting of it by an interdenominational organization which Dr. Scarborough believes to be dishonoring to Christ and in violation of the teaching of the New Testament.

A New Sunday School Literature

Dr. Scarborough calls attention to the avowed purpose of the fundamentalists to prepare and circulate a Sunday-school literature, non-Baptist in character, which would be substituted for the literature issued by the Baptist Sunday School Board for Southern Baptist churches; to the announced intention of the fundamentalists to organize and maintain missionary enterprises of their own, and to seek to divert offerings from the Southern boards to the support of these new enterprises; and to the promise given by the fundamentalists to provide support to churches which may desire it.

Dr. Scarborough specifies the following proposals as among those adopted by the Los Angeles Fundamentalist Conference: 1. They have set up an organization covering the United States and Canada. This territory is divided into seven districts, of which two are in the South, with headquarters at Chattanooga, and at Fort Worth, the latter in charge of J. Frank Norris. (Dr. Norris is also one of the signers of the "Call and Manifesto" of the "Baptist Bible Union of America" announced on the opposite page.)

2. According to the published resolutions, "We declare our purpose to create our own Sunday-school Bible course by Jan. 1, 1923, and advise the adoption of the same by every church that remains loyal to the Lord and his work." On this proposal Dr. Scarborough comments as follows: "This would look like an interdenominational organization which proposes to furnish an interdenominational Sunday-school literature and makes its appeal to 'every church that remains loyal to the Lord and his Word.' This would include Southern Baptist churches, and of course wherever this Sunday-school literature is adopted it would replace and do away with the literature of our Sunday-school board."

3. The Los Angeles program also recommends "the organization of a layman's movement in connection with the Christian Fundamentals Association."

4. "In order also to make possible equally sound teachings in our schools and colleges, we recommend to those of our members who are adequately equipped for the work of writing the Sunday school literature and textbooks for our theological seminary, university and second-grade school work, and we pledge to these, our members, our cooperative endeavor to secure the adoption of such textbooks in all possible schools." Dr. Scarborough sees in this paragraph a proposal to launch an extensive enterprise for the publication of textbooks in the entire field of human knowledge, secular and sacred.

5. The Los Angeles resolutions recommend that "every church and minister holding to the fundamentals of our faith increase their loyalty to the Lord and his Word, and we promise to all such to provide them through this organization Christian fellowship and in every instance where possible such assistance and counsel as may be better aid in the work of both pastor and church." "This resolution," declares Dr. Scarborough, "can but be considered as a direct attack upon the $75,000,000 campaign and its organization," since it definitely pledges the conference "to offer Christian fellowship and every possible assistance and counsel to the pastors and churches against this denominational drive in the South."

6. The advice given in the Los Angeles resolutions to the effect that churches designate their mission offerings for use only in connection with such stations "as have remained loyal to the Lord and his work," Dr. Scarborough weighs in the following pregnant words: "Here comes an interdenominational organization, with two headquarters in the South, calling on our churches who have already on certain agreed bases made their pledges and contributions to the various causes and these are now asked to designate their funds, based on the test of orthodoxy submitted to Baptist missionaries by Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and as Dr. Norris says, 'all evangelical denominations'."

The concluding paragraphs in Dr. Scarborough's article we quote at length, for the information of our readers:

"These are some of the things proposed by this new organization of interdenominationalists. The Interchurch World Movement proposed to take over the machinery of Southern Baptists and raise their money for them, and now here is another interdenominational movement with seven sections on the American continent, two of them in the South, and with such headquarters and organizations and 'secretarial service as each section may provide under the committeeman's leadership,' and this organization proposes to pass upon the orthodoxy of Southern Baptists and to take over their doctrinal teachings. It is wondered which Southern Baptists would rather have: An interdenominational group to take over their machinery or an interdenominational group to take over their orthodoxy and furnish literature for their Sunday schools and textbooks for their seminaries and denominational schools. It is my deliberate judgment that Southern Baptists will not take advantage of a ride on this unbridled horse.

Deep Convictions

"Let it be understood that, so far as I am concerned, and I believe so far as cooperating Southern Baptists almost unanimously are concerned, there is no doubt about our loyalty and deep conviction on the great fundamentals of the faith. There is not in my veins one drop of modernist blood, if by modernism we mean a denial of the deity of Christ, the complete and full inspiration of the Word of God, its integrity and authority over the souls of men, the efficacy of Christ's blood in saving the souls of men, his bodily resurrection, his second coming and all the other teachings dear and precious to Southern Baptists. I am full length against Darwinian evolution and theistic evolution, and I believe the overwhelming majority, even almost the unanimous conviction of Southern Baptists, is to the same. I do not want one atom of modernism taught in the public schools nor in our denominational schools. I want our missionaries to be sound in the faith and true and loyal to the Word of God. I go full length on all these great doctrines with the fundamentalists, of whatever faith. As a simple Baptist, willing to cooperate with God's people in other denominations, on all these great matters of general and country-wide interest and vitality, on prohibition and the preservation of our Sabbath, the enforcement of law and order, the development of true Americanism, I will go my length on these; but I, as a simple lover of the truth of Christ, as I see it, cannot join in with an interdenominational organization which proposes to teach fundamentals to Baptist churches. I think this ought to be left to Baptist preachers and not to interdenominational leaders.

Slumbering Souls

THERE are times when Jesus seems asleep. We are tempted to cry, "Awake, Awake, O arm of the Lord," as though he slumbered. It is not Christ who sleeps, but our souls. Christ is in the midst of us, not asleep but alert, not impotent but mighty to save. If our faith were stronger we should discern him —F. B. Meyer.

"In this paper I represent myself only, but I believe that the great heart of Southern Baptists stands with me in loyalty to our 75,000,000 campaign, in loyalty behind the Sunday school board and its literature and all the other movements that Southern Baptists are fostering, and I believe they will say that they are unwilling for an interdenominational group, howsoever good men they are, and howsoever loyal they are on some of the fundamentals of our faith, to set up an organization which proposes to take over the orthodoxy of Southern Baptists.

"Southern Baptists will not likely ride this interdenominational horse under the name of 'fundamentalism.' These interdenominational movements may take care of some of the doctrines of theology, but in the meantime, what will become of the great doctrines of ecclesiology? Some of Dr. Gambrell's last words to me were, 'I regard all these interdenominational movements, emasculating the fundamentals of ecclesiology, the greatest peril to the truth of God today.' The brethren everywhere among our Southern churches need to understand the wide scope and full meaning of this, another unbridled, interdenominational horse."

Dr. White and the Columbia Conference

By the President of the Southern Baptist Convention

To the Editor,

THE BAPTIST:—

My attention has been called to the article by Dr. John E. White which you republished from the Biblical Recorder, entitled "Why Southern Baptists Overturned the Columbia State."

Lest your readers get a wrong impression from the title of Dr. White's article, without giving very careful attention to the article itself, I wish to make a few comments. The title of Dr. White's article does not correspond with the body of the article in some important particulars.

The reasons which Dr. White assigns for the action of Southern Baptists are reasons which were advanced by individual members of his committee in the committee meeting, but not before the convention itself. The members of Dr. White's committee held various views regarding the matter, but agreed on the whole to report adversely to the adoption of the Columbia recommendations.

The point I wish to emphasize is that the reasons which Dr. White assigns in his article are not reasons which were brought to bear to influence the Southern Baptist Convention in its action; for none of these reasons were presented to the convention. They were merely reasons which actuated the committee in reporting adversely. The merits of the question did not come before the convention at all. I do not believe that the "reasons" which Dr. White assigns for the views held by some members of his committee would have been adopted by the convention itself, had the matter been discussed on its merits in the convention.

Dr. White says "There is a Baptist deadline of creeds in the mass conscience of Southern Baptists, and it lies somewhere this side of the big organization we call the Southern Baptist Convention." Of course, we gladly concede to Dr. White his own opinion as to what the "mass conscience" of Southern Baptists would do. There are many other equally able and distinguished members of the Southern Baptist Convention who maintain that Southern Baptists would put forth articles of faith in any situation where the need was imperative.

If, for example, there was wide divergence of doctrinal opinion, and if such a divergence was seriously affecting the unity of Baptists in their general organized work, or if any other exigency of a serious nature were to arise imperiling the efficiency and unity of our people along lines of doctrinal teaching, I have no hesitancy in expressing the opinion that Southern Baptists would in some way record their fundamental doctrinal views for the information of everybody. This is my opinion of course, but I happen to know that there are many others who agree with me in this. I do not claim to have any inside information concerning the "mass conscience" of Southern Baptists. I do know that there are a few brethren among us who are opposed to any kind of doctrinal statements by general religious bodies; but there is no "deadline" which Baptists have ever established in this regard. Their history proves clearly that they put forth doctrinal statements when necessity arises in the local church or in other larger bodies. Baptist history runs clearly and steadily in this direction, as it is easy to demonstrate. Baptists have put forth many doctrinal expressions in their history, and in my opinion they will put them forth in the future if the need is great enough. They are, of course, very conservative and cautious in the matter, and they would, in my opinion, never put forth a doctrinal statement with any claims to ecclesiastical authority. Baptists, in putting forth doctrinal statements, have always done so with the full understanding that no one is bound by them except the people who put them forth.

Please let your readers understand that there was no discussion whatever of the Columbia proposals. The reason that there was no discussion is easy to state. It is exactly in line with what I said in my brief talk to the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis. There were a number of delicate and difficult matters which threatened the unity of the Southern Baptist Convention. They were not, however, doctrinal matters. Everybody went to Jacksonville with the fear that there would be division and strife over certain matters. Those who were interested in the Columbia Conference clearly saw that there would be some division in the convention if it were attempted to adopt the recommendations of the Columbia Conference. It is the very firm opinion of very competent judges that the recommendations would have been passed by a decisive majority if they had been brought to a vote of the convention. This is my personal judgment in the matter. But we were deeply convinced that the important thing was for us to go ahead with our work and not even run the risk of division over this matter.

The initiative in the request for such a statement did not come from members of the Southern Baptist Convention at the Columbia Conference. It came from representatives of the Northern Convention. Naturally, there was a disadvantage from the standpoint of the Southern Baptist Convention in taking the initiative in something which was in the interest of peace and harmony in the Northern Convention. No doubt, this would have influenced the minds of some. On the whole, therefore, those who were willing to see the recommendations adopted felt that the wise thing was not to press the matter under all the circumstances. A number of the strongest leaders in the convention were committed to the Columbia proposals. Personally, I would have strongly advocated them if they had come to a debate.

The ideal which we pursued in Jacksonville was peace and harmony. Let no one in the Northern Convention, therefore, draw any wrong conclusion from the vote that was taken. Southern Baptists have no hesitancy, when the need arises, in setting forth their views concerning the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. Personally, I am in hearty agreement with the idea that such statements are rarely needed; but I am equally convinced that when they are needed it is our duty to make them.

In conclusion, let me say, then, that the Southern Baptist Convention did not turn down the Columbia recommendations on the merits of the issues which are outlined in Dr. White's article, because those issues were never discussed in the convention. The whole matter was side-tracked simply because we did not wish to provoke division among our own forces.

Cordially and sincerely yours,

E. Y. MULLINS.

Drashpil of the International Baptist Seminary

Professor V. Drashpil was born in the town of Starokonstantinov, Province of Volhynia, Russia, near the Austrian border. His father was the postmaster of the town. He entered a military school, studied to be an officer and for more than twenty years served in the Russian army, becoming captain in the cavalry. Before the war he was stationed in Poland on the border of Germany and was later transferred to Archangel on the White Sea where he remained on duty until the revolution. After the revolution the Bolsheviks held Archangel for a time. Then the American and English soldiers drove the Bolsheviks into the interior. When the allied troops left Archangel and the Bolsheviks returned, he feared for his family, and lost no time in sending his wife and four sons to America, Captain Clifford, an American, aiding him.

Captain Drashpil could not leave with his family because no one who had served with the army dared to leave Russia. He put off his uniform and dressed as a civilian and when the Bolsheviks again took over Archangel, he was a teacher in a college in Archangel.

At length Professor Drashpil got permission to go about as an artist to get sketches and in this disguise left Archangel and went to other parts of Russia. It took him a month and a half to get to Norway, traveling in fishing boats and other small boats. From Christiania he sailed for America.

In the International Baptist Seminary, East Orange, N. J., Professor Drashpil is teaching the Russian language, general history and Russian literature. His oldest son, Vadim, was graduated from a military school in Russia and went into the imperial army. That was in 1918, and he has not been heard from by his family since.

An Intimate View of the Swatow Typhoon

There are villages of ten or twelve thousand with scarcely more than two or three houses still erect. Entire families are wiped out. Some of the schools cannot be opened this fall.

By ABBIE G. SANDERSON

THE great Swatow earthquake of February, 1918, took place just before I left America, and although I have heard many people say that they would not have missed it for anything, yet I have never understood how anyone could feel that way, nor have I ever wished for one minute that I had been here. I can understand better now, though, for the marauding typhoon which swept this district, August 2 and 3, has been a strange experience for me and one that is teaching me many things. Perhaps it will help to make me a better woman and a more consecrated missionary.

An Interrupted "Sing"

Until about nine o'clock Wednesday night Mary Ogg and I were enjoying the most cheerful "sing," and our songs were the most peaceful of lyrics and lullabies. Emily Miller and I had our beds brought into the living room, for we knew that we should never be able to stay in our beds out on the veranda, where we have been sleeping, in the high wind that had come up during the evening. About ten o'clock the two bamboo mats that we have used for awnings were torn loose and made a great racket, whipping against the pillars and the veranda roof until they were wrenched off completely. The storm came on so quickly that we could not get all of the shutters closed. We did the best we could, then lay in bed and waited, while the house shook, trembled, stopped, then started violently again. This kept up until about midnight, when the storm suddenly shifted from the north, and the west window directly beside our beds blew in, with a mighty crash and fall of glass, and the horrible rasping shriek,—like a giant madman's—of wind and rain whistling into the house. That awful howl still rings in my ears.

Our bedding was soaked before we could get it downstairs, and the rain was already pouring down from the upstairs room, but we dragged our army cots into the hallway and got the Chinese women and children settled there with us. We thought that the storm was abating and that we might get a nap, but no—another shift in the wind and we were on our feet to brace the front door against the raging tempest. The cook came and helped us hold the door and the Chinese women helped get our trunks, boxes and clothes into the hall. One thing that puzzled and frightened us all was a rolling and pounding as of huge ten-pin balls. We could not determine the direction of the sound, but the walls drunkenly quivered and shuddered as the shocks came thick and fast. We held the door for over an hour. Suddenly the water began to rush in at the door cracks in knee-high swirls. Emily and I looked at each other and then she said, "Abbie, that is the ocean."

Just then one of the women, apparently struck with the same idea, leaned over and tasted. The water was salt!

You see the two houses of the Chaoyang mission compound sit side by side about sixty feet back from the front of a shallow lagoon of about forty acres in extent. The lagoon is walled in from the sea on three sides by a dike four feet high. On the top of the bank on the land side runs the public road, just beyond a compound wall which was eight feet high. The Groesbeck's yard is a little higher than ours, but our house is built on a five-foot basement. This makes our lower floor nearly three feet higher than theirs. When we found it was sea-water that was swishing insistently around our feet, we hurriedly piled a few things on tables and chairs and rushed up the stairway, through the pelting of rain, plastering and bits of flying glass from the skylight above. Louise Campbell had long since Straining every muscle, one of the women pushed, by mistake, on the glass and out came the lower pane, letting in a furious blast. A wink Emily had stuffed a pillow into the hole, and it held! Finally we got the door nailed shut in several places. It seemed then as though that was what saved the day; I suppose it was then that the storm really began to slacken. We all dropped down, on bed, chair, or floor, to get what rest we could the remaining hour or so before dawn. At five o'clock we were able to go into Louise's room and look out toward the front. Never in my life can I forget that sight!

The only thing visible was a wall of sea which appeared to be volleying full speed into our front yard. Talk about surf, and breakers—there they were, at our very door! I have no words to tell the thrill of horror and yet of fascination that gripped me as I stood watching that surge of water beating towards us. In reality it was much lower than it had been in the night; nevertheless the impression was that of an onrushing flood which must swallow us the next moment. As the day grew lighter, we could see that the compound wall had blown down. As the waves broke upon it we felt the spray on our cheeks. We could see the Groesbeck's verandas stripped of tiles, and their tall date palms, custard apple trees and others bent almost to the ground. The terrific tidal wave had rolled on past us up into the fields back of the house, carrying broken shutters, parts of boats that washed ashore, and all the planks and crossbeams of our lower veranda! This explains the noise of pounding ten-pins,—the veranda was simply torn loose, knocked to pieces, and driven along. Our upper veranda was ripped in a good many places, and the roof all gone but the frame. We have a hole through to the sky in the living room.

An Indelible Impression

We went downstairs fearfully; but the water had not come much higher than when we left the hall, nor had the door blown in as we expected! The most of our things were high and dry; Emily's hats were all wet and I had not a single dry shoe. I found my camera, with three exposures still in it, soaking on the floor. With the camera were the books containing all my pictures of the great Swatow earthquake. We peeled them off, washed them, dried them, and now I am planning to put them in the same book with any pictures I may get of this catastrophe. I am not sure that I shall want many pictures, though; I need none to help me remember it!

The fine big chapel here has but two walls left standing; the prow of an enormous junk cleft the whole building and brought the roof down. This building was used for a hospital, and several patients were drowned and buried in the debris.

This all seems gruesome enough, doesn't it? But when we hear reports from elsewhere we are grateful to be still alive. Over 3,100 bodies have been dug out of the ruins in Swatow City alone, and the dreadful work is not nearly finished; the

You and Today

WITH every rising of the sun,
Think of your life as just begun.

The past has shriveled, and buried deep,
All yesterdays; there let them sleep.

Nor seek to summon back one ghost
Of that innumerable host.

Concern yourself with but today.
Woo it, and teach it to obey.

Your will and wish. Since time began,
Today has been the friend of man.

But in his blindness and his sorrow,
He looks to yesterday and tomorrow.

You, and today! a soul sublime,
And the great pregnant hour of time.

With God himself to bind the twain been driven into Fannie Northcott's room. Her shutters had blown off, and the window broken in; a part of the roof was off and the rain was coming through the ceiling in great streams, just as in the living room which Emily and I had left a short time before.

In Fannie's room the girls were frantically holding their door as we had held the one downstairs. Then the gust switched a bit to the east and we took turns holding first the door and then the window. Emily and Fannie grabbed their courage in both hands, dashed out on the east veranda, and closed the shutter there while we fastened it on the inside. Then we concentrated on the south door. It was a matter of some moment to keep that door shut, for, with the exception of one tiny and quite inaccessible room under the kitchen, the room we were in was the only one in the house that was dry even in spots. We had no other shelter. More than once just as we thought the door could not hold a moment longer, a little respite came, which generally meant that the next gale would be fiercer yet.

stench is unspeakable. Our mission compound is a wreck as far as roofs are concerned. Many Chinese houses are flat and many more people are homeless than at the time of the big earthquake. Miss Mabelle Culley has sixteen Chinese people with her now in our house at Kakchieh, and she is using some of the rooms as an annex to the hospital.

Many of the river launches were smashed to bits; we found the red and blue cabin door of one in our front yard. There is no way to get to Swatow except by small boat or all the way by chair, and either way at an exorbitant price. For the first two days we could get no chairmen because they were all busy cleaning up their own houses or carrying coffins. Two villages near here suffered severe losses and we have heard the wailing at all hours of day and night. The shores are lined with wrecks of large and small boats. Several were caught on the lagoon dike and probably thus kept from doing our houses serious damage. Our boys helped to rescue a number of men who were washed up clinging to planks. The coolie we hired for the summer lost his little girl as he and his family of seven were seeking shelter after their tiny home had blown away.

There are villages of ten or twelve thousand with scarcely more than two or three houses still erect. Entire families are wiped out. Some people swam to the high new institution church building in Swatow and were saved. Our chapel in Kakchieh was not badly hurt but some of the schools cannot possibly be reopened this fall. The mat shed that I had put up last summer is all gone. This means that we shall have to turn away many girls who are eager to come and study.

More I cannot write; the details are sickening. Will you pray that this trial of faith may only make us the stronger? Chaoyang, China.

Word from Other Missionaries in the Typhoon District

Extract of Letter from Rev. B. L. Baker, of Chaowowfu, South China, Dated Aug. 13, 1922.

"The Swatow region has been visited by the worst typhoon in its history. We had word while we were in the hills that the damage here was not very severe but I came down to see the condition of things. When I arrived at our hilltop, I was aghast and now I seem to be writing in a dream. When I really got to my senses my first feeling was one of gratitude that we all were away when it happened. I can't begin to describe it all but it is ten times worse than I expected.

"The evidence of the violence of the wind is everywhere. I noted indications from Phu Kng (where we left the boat this morning to walk over to the city) that the storm seemed to have been worse the nearer we got to the city. The last part of the trip we came up the dike and it was a sight all along,—walls down, roofs off, trees torn to pieces and uprooted. The first evidence of the destruction here was the strange look the place had from across the river. The medical room was flat, the roof of the house looked strange and the whole hillside appeared uncanny. And so it is. Beams, various parts of roof, tiles, parts of walls are scattered all over our yard on every side of the house. The tiles are gone from our entire roof. There is not a room that affords protection from the rain if it comes hard. Both closed-in ends of the front veranda are gone,—glass, woodwork and all. The three doors to the kitchen and pantry are torn up as by a giant. Shutters are gone, in some windows not a pane of glass is left, the medical room is a complete wreck and hardly a tree is left on the place. Some of the fruit trees were taken up bodily and all of the papaya trees were smashed. The whole hilltop is covered with debris. The boat was blown down in front of Miss Boss' door. The young pines were blown flat. That is the thing in brief. But I haven't told how it looks and seems. I can't. I can't tell it; I just feel it. It is terrible."

Extract of Letter from Rev. A. H. Page, of Swatow, China, Dated August 7, 1922

"Our beautiful compound looks like what it is,—the path of a tornado. Great pines are snapped off and thrown down and other trees are uprooted. Only four houses are livable and these have all suffered. The academy buildings being exposed to the terrible second half of the storm are all practically without roofs. Chinese on the compound were killed and injured by falling buildings.

"Over 3,000 bodies have been taken up at Swatow and the number will probably reach 4,000; at Gua Sua probably 20,000; at Tsung Liu 4,000 or 5,000; at Tang Leng several hundred or perhaps thousand; at Chie-Chiu 1,700; at Chaoyang several hundred and at many villages thousands and hundreds and tens till I fear the total will be 40,000 or 50,000—about fifty times as many as in the great earthquake. The damage to mission property may not be greater than that of the earthquake for while roofs are in very much worse condition, walls are mostly standing. The Chaoyang chapel was battered down by a junk. Without the flood this typhoon was worse than the earthquake but the flood that came with the wind from the sea made it fifty times as bad. The water rose about ten feet in Swatow."

Letter from Dr. A. F. Groesbeck, of Chaoyanghsien, China, Dated August 8, 1922

"You have heard from the field by cable and probably from individual letters and know something of the terrible catastrophe that has befallen us. I shall not attempt to describe in detail what has

In his covering letter Mr. Baker of Chaowowfu says: "It has been a most awful and destructive storm and we are severely hit. I can't begin yet to estimate damage accurately. Materials and labor have gone up out of sight. Ordinary labor is asking $1 a day and materials are not to be had. All this with the financial situation at home makes it almost impossible to carry on. We are grateful that we have all been spared when some 50,000 Chinese have perished, many of them in most pitiable circumstances. The sea came in to an unprecedented height during the storm and whole villages on the coast have been wiped out. It is awful beyond description."

occurred but will give you in a general way enough for you to see the awfulness of it.

"In extent, the typhoon covered the coast from Ungkung to Chaoyang, the center of it being the same as the center of the earthquake a few years ago. The violence of the storm I think did not extend very far inland although I have not yet heard from Kityang, Hopo and Kaying. I only know that on my own fields the catastrophe was confined to the coast and did not extend far inland although I have heard that one chapel twelve miles away is down flat.

"The wind was the most violent of any typhoon I have experienced and with it came a sort of tidal wave several feet high that lifted steam launches and junks right out of the sea and left them on what an hour or so later was dry land. Three large steamers were driven out of Swatow harbor on the mud flats where one can walk around them at ordinary tide. Still another steamer was driven ashore just above the mouth of Swatow harbor. These I have seen with my own eyes; how many more there may be I do not know. Our launches to Chaoyang have been destroyed. I think three of the six Kityang launches are still in commission. Railroads and all other roads along the shore have been torn up so communications between places are only beginning to be established.

Destruction of Property Great

"The destruction of property is very large. I think it will take $10,000 to put Chaoyang in shape. Our large chapel, except the east wall and the foundations, is gone. The school building is unroofed. The compound walls of the two residences are down flat and it will require $500 or $600 to patch the roofs.

"In Swatow the new institutional church building was somewhat flooded but I think no material damage was done. Double Island was practically swept clean of houses of all description. The veranda and roof of our mission property there were destroyed although the walls in the main I think are still standing. At Kakchieh I believe all the main buildings are not down but the roofs of all of them are injured, ranging from almost entire destruction to injuries more or less serious. I have not seen these with my own eyes but I know that the few people living there this summer are finding it difficult to find a roof to cover their heads.

"As regards the loss of life. That is so terrible that I dislike to mention it even after a week has passed. The storm began in the evening and continued till day-break, an unprecedented length of time for a typhoon. The tidal wave came after midnight and after most people thought the violence of the storm was over. Coming down from Ungkung, I passed places where villages had been. There is absolutely nothing left now. In many places even the ground on which the villages stood is gone. Literally hundreds of bodies are floating about on the sea or lie on the shore unburied. The loss of life at Swatow has been great also, from drowning and falling buildings. One village of some 20,000 inhabitants on the Ungkung field lost in those few hours one out of every ten people. These rather incoherent statements will give you some idea of how terrible the loss of life was.

"We are glad to say that none of the missionaries or other foreigners lost their lives. How they came through it all

The Family Altar

AS goes the home so goes the world. Everything that is good in church or society is first planted and nurtured in good homes. The church must look for its spring and source in the spiritual life of the Christian home. Why shall we not expect the Christian home, as in former days, to be the nursery of true piety, where religious principle shall root itself deeply in the hearts of parents and children alike?

Two young people recently pledged their love for each other in the following beautiful prayer. Is it not a model for the beginning of the family altar? It is headed "A Covenant of Two Lovers," and is as follows:

"Gracious Lord and Saviour, we are thy children, and we fervently thank thee for the plain blessed home life in which we have been reared and for the soul-staying power of the sweet confidences of our many friends who believe in us and trust us. We bless thee for that unerring providence which has kept us to this happy hour. May the benediction of thy grace overshadow us as we enter into this holy covenant, pledging our mutual love for time and eternity. Help us to make it a true home which shall be the shadow of a great rock in this weary land to neighbor, friend and stranger passing by. Inspire us to live and love and serve as thou didst in dear Galilee.

"And when dark days come and fretting cares annoy or storms break upon us, shelter us, O Lord, in thine infinite bosom of love. And when the shadows of evening thicken about us in the dark valley lead us safely to dwell with thee in changeless love forever."

Opening of the Schools

Colgate University

The one hundred and fourth year opened Sept. 21, with the largest attendance in the history of the institution. Applications for admission to the entering class numbered approximately 425. Of this number 210 men were admitted. No larger number could be enrolled without overcrowding the class-room and housing accommodations. The total registration in the university approximates 700 men. Work on the new dormitory is progressing rapidly, one new fraternity house is nearing completion and a second fraternity house will soon be begun. The dormitory, made possible by the legacy of Richard M. Colgate, will house eighty-three men, and the new fraternity house will provide room for fifty more students.

At the convocation exercises, held in the Colgate Memorial Chapel, Pres. Geo. B. Cutten delivered the address, which was interesting and helpful preaching, and offered a prayer for the guidance of the Heavenly Father in the lives of the students and teachers and in the affairs of the university. A reception to the new men was held by the University Y. M. C. A. in the gymnasium on Saturday evening, which attracted the attendance of nearly the entire student body as well as many of the professors. Bible study classes have been organized in the churches of the village for the university students, and in the Baptist church, of which Rev. F. D. Elmer is pastor, a plan for affiliated membership has been established by which a large proportion of the young men will be closely related to the activities of the church during their period of study at Colgate.

In the Theological Seminary the opening exercises were held Sept. 26, and the address was given by Dr. John B. Anderson, whose subject was "The Mind of the Master." The registration in the seminary totals fifty-seven men.

The inauguration of Dr. Cutten as president of Colgate University occurs on the morning of Oct. 7. Representatives from approximately seventy-five colleges and universities will be present as well as a large number of friends and alumni of the institution. The program is as follows:

Scripture reading and prayer, Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, of Rochester Theological Seminary.

Presentation of charter and key of the University by James C. Colgate, Esq., '94, president, University board of trustees.

Acceptance by President Cutten.

Congratulatory addresses:

In behalf of the faculty, Dr. Albert P. Brigham, '79;

In behalf of the alumni, Mr. George W. Cobb, '94, president of the Alumni Corporation;

In behalf of other colleges and universities, Livingston Farrand, M. D., LL. D., president of Cornell University;

In behalf of the University of the State of New York, Hon. Frank P. Graves, commissioner of education.

Address by Hon. Edgar N. Rhodes P. C., D. C. L., ex-speaker, Canadian house of commons.

Inaugural address by President Cutten. Conferring of honorary degrees.

Benediction.

Informal reception and luncheon for invited guests and alumni. Gymnasium. 12:30 P. M.

Football game. Allegheny-Colgate, Athletic Field. 2:30 P. M.

The Baptist Training School

The Baptist Missionary Training school had its formal opening Tuesday night, Sept. 19. Dr. Carl D. Case, of Oak Park, gave the address of the evening. Following the service a very pleasant reception was held in the beautiful Harris Library. This is the beginning of the forty-second academic year of the school, and both faculty and students are looking forward to a splendid year of work. A cordial invitation is extended to all Baptists to visit the school at any time and see what is being done to prepare young women for Christian service.

Keuka College

Keuka College for Women opened for the second year with a capacity registration. The registration for the two classes is approximately seventy. The faculty has been increased by two, and work in all departments is being thoroughly covered.

During the summer, the Baptist Pastors' Summer Conference and the World Wide Guild House Party held their sessions at Keuka College. Both were largely attended and profitable.

The college is assisting in the Yates County Community School of Religious Education, of which the president is director and the vice-president, Dr. Homer C. Lyman, is dean.

The prospects for the college are all that could be desired, and the registration clearly proves that there is real demand for Keuka College in New York state.

Colby College

Colby College opened its one hundred and fifth year of instruction on Sept. 21. The entering class numbers 180, of whom 114 are in the Men's College and sixty-six in the Women's College. The total registration in all classes is not far from 500.

Several changes in the faculty are to be mentioned. Frank Lester Weeks, A. M., returns to his position as assistant professor of chemistry after two years of graduate study, and Carl Jefferson Weber, A. B., comes back as assistant professor of English after two years on the faculty of the U. S. Naval Academy. Rev. Herbert Lee Newman, A. B., B. D., a graduate of Colby in the class of 1918, and of Newton in the class of 1922, is the head of the new department of religious education. Miss Florence Elizabeth Duan, A. B., is instructor in English and Miss Corrinne B. Van Norman is instructor in hygiene, both in the Women's College. Other additions to the faculty are George Kenneth Burgum, A. B., instructor in English composition; Harold Calvert Tingey, A. B., instructor in chemistry; and Everett Fiske Strong, A. B., instructor in romance languages. Professor Henry W. Brown, M. S., of the English Department, has been granted a leave of absence on account of ill health. It is hoped that he will be able to resume his duties at the beginning of the second semester.

In accordance with the custom inaugurated last year, Sunday, Sept. 24, was observed as "Go-to-church" Sunday. Faculty and students met on the campus at ten o'clock and marched in a body to the center of the city, where they separated to the various churches of their preference. The Baptist contingent filled one-half of the auditorium of the First Church, occupying seats especially reserved for them.

He Could Not Return

BY A. F. UFFORD

In the early hours of a beautiful Sunday morning my foot-boat was pushing on toward Theomen, one of the outstations of the Shaohsing evangelistic field. Busily engaged in reading, I did not notice that anything had gone wrong until I was aroused by the boatman's cry, "A man overboard." Upon looking out I saw that an accident had happened about a third of a mile away.

We at once made all speed to reach the place. Upon arriving, we found many boats already gathered from all quarters. A man had fallen from one of the crowded passenger boats into the canal. He was a peddler, who, in his eagerness to reach the city as early as possible, had attempted to help row the boat. Not being an expert boatman he had fallen overboard. After a delay that seemed endless he was finally raised from the water and taken to the shore. There every effort known to the Chinese and the missionary was made to resuscitate him, but without success. Although brought up on the canal he did not know how to swim and so had been lost.

As my boat once more sped on its way toward Theomen, the frantic cries of the dead man's friends still rang out across the waters, "Paokong wae, Paokong wae"

("Come back Paokong, Come back Paokong"). But Paokong would not come back. Young, ambitious, eager to get on in the world, he had slipped from the seen to the unseen.

Was he a Christian? Had he ever heard the gospel? Did he know Jesus? No, not so far as we know. There is no chapel in his village. All about him the people believe that he was pulled beneath the waters by an evil spirit, known as the drowning devil. Soon the villagers, at the instigation of the Buddhist priests, will raise money to place a stone marker on the bank of the canal at the spot where he went down. On this stone there will be a Buddhist inscription, the belief being that this stone will keep the drowning devil from pulling others down.

The Buddhist priest acts at once. What is the Christian church going to do for this and hundreds of similar villages, as well as at least a dozen large market towns, in the Shaohsing plain where the gospel message has not yet been carried? After half a century of foundation work in this district we have a moral obligation to finish the task. This is not the time to mark time, but to press the battle. Who will "speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward"?

The Open Forum

THREE IN ONE

The Open Forum of THE BAPTIST contains from week to week many articles of interest. One cannot fail to be impressed with the kindness of the discussions, so different from the controversies often found in the columns of the secular press. I have been especially interested in the articles for and against tithing which have been written by Brethren Meigs and Albarn. Whether tithing produces, or fails to produce, spirituality I shall make no argument; though my own views are against a general church rule for tithing. I believe that we are now under grace and not under law; and that the command for us is to give as the Lord has prospered us. My main objection to tithing is that while it may raise by this method more funds, for a time, than now are raised, it would be an injustice to the poorer members of our churches; and thereby our well-to-do and rich members would escape their share of religious expenditures. As I stated in a previous article under that system the man with $4,000 income would have $3,000 to live upon, while the man with $1,000 income would have only $900 to live upon.

The Seventh Day Adventists and other tithing denominations are very largely composed of members of equal financial incomes. Should the system of tithing strictly prevail among the larger Protestant denominations of our country we would be, I fear, as religious people putting ourselves, consciously or unconsciously in line with those powerful plutocratic and liquor elements in the nation who are now as never before striving by all possible means to become supreme; and apparently to reduce the poor to the condition of serfs as in the middle ages, or as certain lower castes now in India.

We may be thankful that the number of altruistic men in our nation, such as Wanamaker, and others, is constantly and quite rapidly increasing. It is almost alarming to note how quickly after the Supreme Court decided the child labor law to be unconstitutional the cotton mills of the south began again to employ little children in their establishments.

A few years ago as we were travelling through Utah, a finely dressed gentlemen who proved to be a stockholder in a mine, told me in a Pullman dining-car when I had been commenting favorably on Frances Willard's efforts for temperance among workmen in the mines and lumber camps that he didn't care how much the workmen drank and spent their money, "for" he said, "unless they get broke they would not go again into the mines to work. We want dividends."

The editor of THE BAPTIST well says: "The red-blooded Christian minister will not attempt to shut himself from the industrial strife which is everywhere."

He also does well to quote and take pointers from Prof. Albion W. Small. It seems to me that every Christian layman should also interest himself or herself in this strife.

LOST BAPTISTS

Is there any agency in our denomination by which we can keep track of the people who move from city to city? A considerable number of the members of the church of which I am clerk, move out of town from year to year. As very few of these take letters to other churches, many of them must be lost to any church.

We have the addresses of some of our friends who have gone away and would be glad to refer them to the local church if we knew to whom to write.

Possibly this could be handled best by a "central exchange" to whom all of our churches could refer the names and new addresses of people who have left their home church. The "exchange" could in turn refer these names to the nearest church of our denomination, or in cases where there is no local Baptist church, to the nearest evangelical church, at the same time asking for a report as to what has been done and whether the person eventually becomes connected with the church.

There are many Baptists in the country who never see the inside of a Baptist church because, having left their home church many years ago, they have never formed connections with any other. Is there no way in which we can follow up these people that we may some day say with Christ, we "have kept those whom thou has given us"?

International Sunday School Lesson for October 22

JESUS TEMPTED
Lesson: Luke 4:1-30. Golden Text:
Hebrews 2:18.

Setting

When he was thirty years old, Jesus went from his home in Nazareth down to the Jordan, probably opposite Jericho, a walk of over fifteen miles, there he was baptized by John. The wilderness to which he withdrew following his baptism is the hilly desolate region west of and at the north end of the Dead Sea.

Lesson

Following the lead of the Holy Spirit, who had come to him in a special way following his baptism, Jesus chose to retire into the uninhabited regions that he might give himself up undisturbed to a consideration of the work his Father had for him to do. For forty days he was in the wilderness, fasting and praying. "And when they were completed, he hungered." Then the devil said to him, attacking him at what seemed to be the weakest point at the moment: "If thou art the Son of God, command this stone that it become bread." To which Jesus replied with a quotation from Deuteronomy: "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Divine answer to a temptation that must have appealed to his physical nature. Never did Jesus use his power to work a miracle to his own advantage. The second temptation was a promise of earthly power if Jesus would bow down to the tempter. And Jesus answered: "It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord, thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." The third temptation was the most wily because it was so worded that it might appeal to Jesus on the strength that here was an opportunity for winning at the very beginning of his ministry the faith of the people in himself as the Messiah. "If thou art the son of God, cast thyself down from hence," says the tempter after he has led Jesus up to Jerusalem and set him on the pinnacle of the temple, "for it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee and on their hands they shall bear thee up, lest haply thou dash thy foot against a stone." But Jesus chose the slow and painful and foreordained way of the cross, and his answer was "Thou shalt not make trial of the Lord thy God." "And when the devil had completed every temptation he departed from him for a season."

Leading Thoughts

1. Every temptation is another opportunity for victory. 2. If those who sell their souls for the satisfaction of appetite, and for power, would daily read the words of the temptation of Jesus, what would be the result? 3. "Tempted and tried in all points like as we are yet without sin—" what a Fellowman to love, what a Master to bow down to!

How to Increase Sunday School Attendance

BY ALBERT H. GAGE

(Mr. Gage is the director of religious education for the Chicago Baptist Association. He has been unusually successful in the work of the vacation Bible schools and in Sunday-school evangelism. Our readers will have the privilege of a series of articles by Mr. Gage on various phases of Sunday-school work.)

The first objective in the "bigger-better Baptist-Sunday-schools" campaign of the Northern Baptist Convention is "increasing attendance."

Any church can increase its Sunday-school attendance if it wants to. It all depends upon how much it wants to and how much work it is willing to do to translate a desire into a reality.

There are certain general plans, which, if a local church will adopt and faithfully carry out, will surely bring success in building up its school.

The autumn months are the natural months in which to stress increased attendance. Public schools are opening and there is a general interest in education of all kinds. The church could well avail itself of this general desire for education to interest its community in religious education.

Our Baptist denomination has entered upon a great campaign to secure larger and better Sunday schools. The Publication Society has undertaken the promotion of this work. Special literature has been prepared. In each state and in many cities there are Baptist directors of religious education who are giving special attention to the enrollment of every local Baptist church in their territory in this campaign. During the year seven great objectives will be presented. The objectives are: (1) Increased attendance; (2) trained leadership; (3) church school evangelism; (4) equipment; (5) the child in the church; (6) vacation schools; (7) summer assemblies. It will greatly help the local church in increasing its attendance to adopt these objectives and to join with other Baptist churches in a worthwhile program of advance.

The first step for any school is to arrange for a meeting of the teachers and workers. This meeting should appoint a regular monthly meeting of the Sunday school workers. At this first meeting the school should vote to enroll with the Publication Society, paying an enrollment fee of $1 to cover the cost of the literature which has been prepared for the campaign. Month by month the various objectives will be considered and worked out.

Any church that will follow the following simple directions can increase its attendance.

1. A survey. Every school should make a careful survey of its own resources to discover the weak places which need to be strengthened, the improvements which need to be made and the advanced step which could be taken. In addition to this, there needs to be taken a survey of the neighborhood. This can often be accomplished in cooperation with other churches in the community. But the Baptist church will get the information which it needs and get far greater results if it will survey every home within its own territory. This will always discover new families and many prospects for the school.

2. Stop the leaks. Why do scholars drop out of your school? What classes are sustaining these losses? Do you know the names and addresses of all who have dropped out or who are irregular? What is the use of getting in new scholars, if, at the same time old scholars are allowed to drop out?

The most frequent causes for the loss of scholars are:

- (1) Lack of a teacher. No group of boys or girls will continue week after week without a teacher.
- (2) Irregular teachers. If the teacher does not care enough to be present on time every Sunday, the scholars soon lose interest.
- (3) Poor or misfit teachers. A teacher may not fit a given class. A poor teacher can never hold a class of wide-awake boys or girls.
- (4) Disorder and irreverence. A noisy school which does not have a good service of worship cannot hold its scholars.
- (5) Lack of spirit. Some schools have a spirit which makes people happy, sets them to work and brings them back again. A church which has lost its morale will lose its scholars.
- (6) Internal quarrels. The penalty a church pays for indulging in a church fuss or quarrel, is the loss of its youth. Every time there is a church fuss, a generation of young people are lost to that church.
- (7) Failure to win for Christ. If a boy is not won to Christ early in his youth he is pretty apt to drop out of Sunday school.

3. Strengthen the weak places. If a class needs a teacher get one without delay. If a teacher is a misfit make a change. If the school does not have the right literature, get it no matter what it

The Chimney Corner

Indelible

ONCE upon a Time

There were people who were Black as ink,
And once upon that same time,
People who were
White as paper.

And White-As-Paper said
Complacently:
"How white and fair and lovely
We be!
Superior To Black-As-Ink
Who can do Nothing
But make black marks on us."

But the Lord God who Made all men
Of one blood
Looked down from heaven
And
He liked right well the marks Which
Black-As-Ink had made on White-As-Paper.

Consider, for instance,
The marks written
By
That poor little black child of slaves
Who Wore a prickly flax shirt
And wooden boots
And worked in salt mines
From before the rising of the sun
To the going down thereof.
Yet
Who so desired book-larnin'
That
He toiled by night,
Primitive-fashion, with Tables, and Alphabets, and Primers, and Maps.
Then, in a few years,
Tramped
Five hundred miles on foot
To Hampton Institute—
Sleeping
Wherever he could:
Once
Under a wooden sidewalk in Richmond, Virginia,
With White-as-Paper citizens.
Tramping
Over him all night,
Unconscious of what
One, small, green, black boy
Could become!
He arrived
Dirty.
So much so that the teacher
Had doubts,

*This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of
THE BAPTIST.*

And tried to turn him
Away.
But he would not Turn!
That is the kind he was!
So she set him a stunt:
"The recitation room needs Cleaning,"
Said she,
To prove him.
He swept that room
Once.
He swept that room
Twice.
He swept that room
Three times.
He dusted it
Once.
He dusted it
Twice.
He dusted it
Three times.
And lo, it was very Clean!
More so than in the whole
History of Hampton.
So this Boy-Who-Swept-The-Corners-Clean
Was admitted.

He studied.
He mastered lessons.
He mastered manners.
He mastered the mystery of knives,
And forks,
And spoons,
And bathtubs,
And sheets.
Especially sheets: but it took time—
First he slept on top of the two of them,
Then he slept under the two of them,
Until finally he mastered the Mystery
Of sliding between.
Sheets are a very little Thing,
But they are a step up
For Black-As-Ink.
Contented formerly to Sleep on straw.
Thus Booker T. Washington—
Five hundred miles from his little log cabin home—Made good.
And, going forth from Hampton,
Founded Tuskegee:
An institute as fine
Eventually
As his own Alma Mater.
Without ceasing he yearned over
Black-As-Ink boys and girls
In Tuskegee,

That they should go forth to make Marks
Readable
By White-As-Paper.
He succeeded.
And when men noted the exceeding Success of it, they said:
"Tell us the secret of your Influence,
Black man!"
And he who had once
Thought bitterly of White-As-Paper, Answered gently: "I Took my hate to Jesus Christ,—
That is the secret!"

So when he died
Men mourned his humble greatness, saying:

"Tuskegee will die, too."
But indelible marks are still Conspicuous in Tuskegee, for Robert R. Moton
Is president—
Modest,
Executive,
Zealous, Winning:
Honored by White-As-Paper.
Honored by Black-As-Ink.
In July 1922, he crossed a
New York street
And saw
A woman in peril of being Run over
By an oncoming truck and streetcar.
He plunged into the traffic,
Valiantly, Heroically,
And carried her to safety.
Crowds cheered.
A policeman, making note of it,
Asked his name to report at headquarters.
With gentle reluctance he merely Murmured:
"Just say a black man Did it!"
Indelible?
Yes! ! !

And time fails to speak
Of 500 black authors
Of 1279 black actors
Of 2,000 black lawyers, judges, justices,
Of 4,000 physicians and surgeons,
Of 2,500 trained nurses,
Of ministers, of teachers.....
Men of grit and purpose, busy right now
Indelibly writing the History
Which is
His-story of America:
Have you read
"The Vanguard Of a Race?"
(The new study book)
To prove to yourself the Gifts which Black-As-Ink

Has dedicated to the Upward progress
Of those of their own race who have not Yet learned
This new writing?
Read the book, and Rejoice besides
That 1,000 Negro inventors have been Granted patents;
That 22,440 Negroes are in Uncle Sam's employ;
That Negro landowners own land
Equal in area to Ireland;
That they own 500,000 houses, seventy banks
And publish 400 newspapers.
Rejoice
In our fifteen Baptist schools
Down South
Where Black-As-Ink can learn
The glory of color,
The glory of writing that color
Into the pages which White-As-Paper furnishes:
"That they, without us,
May not be made perfect."
And if you harbor a Sneaking inclination to

Be prejudiced,
Read Romans 2:11—
"For there is no respect of persons With God:
"But glory, honor and peace
To every man that worketh good."
And pray:—
"Oh Creator of all men everywhere,
Forgive
The disdain
The superiority
The prejudice
With which I have been Regarding part of Thy family!
Henceforth may it be Enough for me
That black is a color pleasing in Thy sight:
That thou didst delight to make it.
Teach me to prize the Indelible chapter which These splendid Black-As-Ink brothers
Of mine
Are writing all around me.
May I supplement their efforts
By dedicating to thee, through them,
My White-As-Paper blessings.
Amen."

The Young Reserves

The Towel's Party

THE clouds had given no rain for months.
The tree was very thirsty.
"I am pining for water," it said.
"Cheer up," called the rootlets, "We'll get you some."
And down they went, farther and farther into the earth.
Far below was water.
Said the water, "Let's go and help the tree."
Up, up, up it crept through the earth, until it reached the rootlets.

"I don't know about that story," said Beth, "water can't go up!"

The room was quiet and warm and Beth was sleepy. Her eyes closed and her head began to nod, when, suddenly! What was that? Surely the towel on the back of the chair winked at her! Yes, winked.

Beth started and slowly before her face and eyes a fold of the towel changed into a smiling mouth, then out came a nose, then a pair of twinkling eyes.

"What in the world is the matter with that towel?" thought Beth.

The smiling mouth opened and the towel spoke: "You're a smart child," it said. "Can't see how water gets through the earth? I'm going to have a party. You may come to it. Then you'll know."

"You're going to have a party!" repeated Beth. "I never heard of a towel having a party."

"No matter," said the towel, "I'm going to have one. It's a capillary attraction party."

"A what?" cried Beth.

"A capillary attraction party. Now be quiet, for I hear some one coming."

Beth listened and a kind of sliding sound reached her ears. The next moment in slid her mother's best lamp, while behind it rolled and rattled the burner and wick.

"We've come to the capillary attraction party, little girl," said the lamp, as it slid to the middle of the floor, the burner and wick hurrying after.

Then came a queer little voice from the

Lonely Song

BY HILDA CONKLING

(This poem was printed in "The Bookman," and was written by a little girl who will be twelve years old this October! She has already printed a book of verses, "Poems by a Little Girl," and her second book, "Shoes of The Wind," will soon be printed.)

BEND low, blue sky,
Touch my forehead:
You look cool . . . bend down . . .

Flow about me in your blueness and coolness,
Be thistledown, be flowers,
Be all the songs I have not yet sung.

Laugh at me, sky!
Put a cap of cloud on my head . . .
Blow it off with your blue winds;
Give me a feeling of your laughter
Beyond cloud and wind!
I need to have you laugh at me
As though you liked me a little.

sugarbowl on the table and a rattling against the lid. "Let me out, let me out," said the voice. "I want to go to the capillary attraction party."

Beth lifted the lid and out hopped a beautiful lump of sugar.

At the edge of the table it stopped, as if afraid, when up came a saucer, holding a little tea and slyly pushed it off.

"Shall I help you down, too?" said Beth to the saucer.

"Oh yes, if you please, miss."

Beth did so and away went the saucer after the sugar.

"What next, I wonder," thought Beth. "Oh, you're coming, are you?" she added, as an ink-bottle with large wings of blotting paper came flying in.

Beth was busy watching the ink-bottle when something large and soft hit her head. Turning, she saw a sponge.

"Here I am," said the sponge, cheerfully, and sat down.

All this time a basin of water on the floor was coaxing: "I want to go to the capillary attraction party. Why can't I go? Please let me go!"

"Be still," said the towel. "You're at the party now, you stupid."

"Now, my friends," cried the towel, "here's a little girl who doesn't see how water gets through the earth. Shall we show her?"

"Yes, indeed," said the oil.

"To be sure," said the water.

"That we will," said the ink.

"Then show her," ordered the towel.

In a twinkling the burner jumped to its place on the lamp; the wick dropped into the oil; the sugar into the saucer; the blotting paper wings into the ink, and the sponge into the water. The towel dipped its fringe into the basin, too.

"See here, little girl," said the oil as it crept up the wick.

"And here, little girl," said the tea as it crept into the sugar.

"Look at me, little girl," said the ink as it crept into the blotting paper.

"Look at me, little girl," said the water as it crept up into the sponge and towel.

"I've seen all that dozens of times," cried Beth. "I don't—"

She was stopped by a hand that gave her a good shake and a voice that said: "Come, come! wake up! Supper's ready." Beth rubbed her eyes and looked around.

Was it all a dream then?

On the table was the very lamp she had seen at the party.

"Mother," said Beth, "what's capillary attraction?"

"What does the child mean?" said her mother.

"Oh!" cried Tom, "she heard the teacher say that today!"

"I didn't," said Beth. "I heard it in my sleep."

"You did," answered impolite Tom.

"I didn't," said Beth.

"You did," said Tom.

It was lucky the milk toast got into their mouths just then and stopped the quarrel.

REVERENCE AND WORSHIP

By J. J. Ross

God is greatly to be praised in the assembly of his saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him. Psalms 89:7.

Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill? Psalms 15:1.

I. Reverence

In the Old Testament the term "reverence" is used as the translation of two words. The primary idea of the first word is "fear." It is employed to describe the attitude of respect or honor toward God himself, his day, his sanctuary, and his law. In this group of ideas, there is "fear," "awe," "respect," and "reverence." The root idea of the second word is "falling down" as the prostration of the body. This word is always used to express the bearing of one, or more, toward another who is considered superior. The group of ideas here, therefore, is "honor," "obeisance," "high regard."

In the New Testament, "reverence" occurs as the translation of three distinct words. In the first the primary idea is "modesty"; in the second, "fear," and in the third, the idea is that of the "self valuation of inferiority," and so sets forth an attitude toward another of doing him high honor.

According to the significance of these terms in true reverence for God, his day, his sanctuary, his kingdom, and his son, there are several elements. The first element is knowledge. God must be known both intellectually and experimentally in his personality, power, wisdom, mercy, and faithfulness, before due honor can be rendered to him. The character and degree of our knowledge of God determines the character and degree of our reverence for him. Growing out of our knowledge there must be supreme love for God. The human heart cannot revere that which it does not love with a filial fear. In reverence also, there is the element of trust which signifies to lean on, to stay upon, or to take refuge in. Without trust of God and in God, there can be no true reverence for God. But in reverence also there is the element of humble obedience. Disobedience of God, whether negative or positive, is rebellion against him. Where there is reverence, then, there is knowledge of God, love for God, trust in God, and obedience to God.

2. Worship

This leads to the second thought of our subject, namely, "worship." Many of the ideas contained in reverence are found in the term "worship" as it is used throughout the Bible. Where there is true reverence for God, there will always be true worship of God. We have not the space to study the various uses of the word "worship" as employed in the Bible, and so we will content ourselves with thinking about some of the qualifications for delightful and successful worship. A number of these qualifications are found in the fifteenth and the twenty-fourth Psalms where David asks, in little difference of form, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" He is asking about the qualifications for worship. In the answer given, we may discover the nature of true worship which God requires of his people. In the reply made, there are no forms or ceremonies, no incense or attitudes, no robes or postures laid down, or even alluded to. We conclude from this that our worship of God must be spiritual even as Christ said, "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

In the fifteenth Psalm, three things are spoken positively about the true worshiper—his walk, his work, and his speech. His "walk" is to be "upright," that is one of integrity and absolute honesty tending to nothing which he did not possess. The true worshiper also "worketh righteousness" or has all of his practice, or conduct, in life according to the perfect standard of righteousness as meant in the idea of God, and expressed in the Word of God. The "speech" of the true worshiper must correspond to the heart which utters it, carefully guarding every word, lest we say more than we mean and believe. There is a natural tendency in us all to color the truth, and to exaggerate the truth. These things go deep, they stir up the conscience, and humble us.

In the twenty-fourth Psalm, several things are demanded for successful worship of God. (1) "Clean hands"—obviously outward correctness of conduct which no man can question. (2) "A pure heart," behind and within, which enables the worshiper to have a glorious vision of God—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." (3) A soul, or personality, not set "on vanity," not on empty meaningless things, the passing show, the earthly good. (4) The true worshiper also is one who regards an oath or pledge with sanctity and has no dealings with deceit.

God would have us all hold him in reverence and worship before him, for thereby, we show our clean hands, pure heart, and despise all of that which is vanity; yes, and thereby, we manifest our honor of him, our love for him, our faith in him, and our obedience to him. Let us all as young people ascend into the hill of the Lord. Let us take up our dwelling place in his holy tabernacle in all the public services of his church.

*"Fear not to enter his courts in the slenderness
Of the poor wealth thou wouldst reckon as thine
Truth in its beauty, and love in its tenderness
These are the offerings to lay on his shrine.
O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness,
Bow down before him, his glory proclaim;
With gold of obedience, and incense of lowliness Kneel and adore him, the Lord is his name."*

THE COVENANT OF YOUTH

Hymns: "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord";
"Love Divine, All Love Excelling."
Scripture: Psalm 103.
Prayer, closing with Lord's Prayer.
Hymn, "Come, Thou Almighty King."

Discussion of Topic

All things belong to God. Read Psalm 50:10-12.

We belong to God. Read I Cor. 6:19b, 20a.

God has set us a wonderful example of giving. Read John 3:16.

Our Master gave his best for us. Read II Cor. 8:9; Phil. 2:5-8.

God wants us to give our best to him. II Cor. 8:5.

God expects us to give of our means to him. Read I Cor. 16:2; Mal. 3:10.

God is challenging us to prove our sincerity. Here is a pledge which gives us the opportunity to show our loyalty to Christ.

The Covenant of Youth

"Recognizing God's ownership of all that I have and am in Christ, I covenant with him to give as God prospers me and to devote at least one-tenth of my income toward the maintenance and extension of his kingdom on earth."

We have seen through our previous studies that God is the owner of all that we are and have; that he has faith in us as his children, that he has entrusted to us his possessions, making us thereby his stewards. Some of us have failed to measure up to his expectations. Instead of devoting at least a tenth of our income toward the maintenance and extension of his kingdom on earth, we have sought to provide for his kingdom by means of socials, sales, bazaars, and all sorts of money-making devices. In some cases we secured the money, but lost the blessing; but more often through failure to achieve our purposes we lost the blessing and crippled all possible advance of the kingdom of God. God never meant that his kingdom should advance by such methods. "The need of the hour is money for the kingdom, but greater than this is the need for that consecration which systematically, as a matter of worship, places money on the altar. Pledge your tithe as your declaration of loyalty in God's world warfare."

"What shall I render unto Jehovah for all his benefits? I will pay my vows unto Jehovah, in the courts of Jehovah's house, Yea, in the presence of all his people."

"Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord, I care not how,
But stir my heart in passion for the world!
Stir me to give, to go—but most to pray:
Stir, till the blood-red banner be unfurled
O'er lands that still in deepest darkness lie,
O'er deserts where no cross is lifted high.

"Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord. Thy heart was stirred
By love's intensest fire, till thou didst give Thine only Son, thy best beloved One,
Thine to the dreadful Cross, that I might live;
Stir me to give myself so back to thee,
That thou canst give thyself again through me."

What the covenant will mean to our church:
1. A deepened spiritual life.
2. A deepened interest in the kingdom.
3. More life service volunteers.
4. A willingness to follow Christ's leadership.

Have a period of prayer to bring each individual face to face with his responsibility to God for the progress of the kingdom.

Pass the pledges; urge all to sign.
Have the pastor offer a closing prayer of dedication.
Hymn: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."
Benediction.

Suggestions for Stewardship Reading Contest

BY BENJAMIN STARR

The reading contest can be made one of the most helpful features of a stewardship campaign. These suggestions offer nothing new. They are simply a few that have been successfully used.

First—Form competing groups. They can be Sunday school classes, societies,

Headquarters Station Broadcasting

Recommendation 8 as passed by the Thirty-first Anniversary Convention of the B. Y. P. U. of America reads as follows:

"That special consideration be given during the year to the worship services of the church and the need for the attendance and prayerful support of these services by our young people."

The topic for today is "Reverence and Worship" and the article is written by Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Chicago. Dr. Ross is a great pastor and his message will be read with much interest.

Recommendation 12

"That we pledge our utmost loyalty to our great Baptist denomination in all of its great forward movements for the extension of the kingdom of God throughout the whole earth."

October is stewardship month. This means that we will do all in our power to put the program over. Second, it means that we will pay up our pledges to the New World Movement. Third, it means that if we have not made a pledge, we will do so and that the size of it will be determined by the great need, and our individual responsibility, and ability.

Second—Set a definite time for the contest to begin and close. It will be most effective if conducted as part of the stewardship campaign of the church.

Third—Appoint a general director for the contest. Also a live leader for each group. The group leader will have charge of distributing the literature, compiling the reports and will do everything possible to keep up the interest of the group.

Fourth—Make a careful selection of books and leaflets and allow a certain number of credits for each one read. If several meet together and one reads aloud, count each listener as a separate reader. This plan encourages helpful discussion. Also encourage personal work by allowing each group credit for reading they get people outside any group to do.

Fifth—Each leader keeps a record of what is read and who reads it, and reports the standing of the group to the general director each week. The standing is secured by dividing the number of credits secured by the number in the group to secure the average number per member. This makes a fair competition between groups of different sizes. Have these standings announced every Sunday, and do everything possible to keep up a lively interest in the contest.

Sixth—Let every member who will, carry a few tithing cards and improve every opportunity to enroll tithing stewards. Send names, address, and church of which they are members to headquarters. They will be enrolled in the Baptist Tithers' League and receive a neat certificate of membership. Offer special credits for each tither secured.

Seventh—Interest might be increased by offering a prize for the best essay on stewardship to be presented before the end of the contest.

Eighth—Let the contest close with a dinner at which the winning group will be guests of honor.

Stewardship Plans

The First Baptist Church, Oakland, Cal., Dr. John Snape, pastor, uses a "ballot" as follows:

Name
Address

Please mark with a cross (x) the section below, which you are willing to fulfill:

- 1. I have practiced the giving of one-tenth for—years.
- 2. I will give to God at least one-tenth of my income.
- 3. I will adopt for a three months' trial the plan of giving one-tenth.
- 4. I will give henceforth a fixed proportion, though less than the tenth. (For those not using any of the above.)
- 5. I will begin at once to keep careful account of all I give away.

Dr. Snape's secretary writes: "We have used the ballots very successfully in our campaigns here for stewardship and find that some people who sign Nos. 3, 4, and 5, finally move farther up the line and begin to sign No. 2. We transfer the names on No. 2 to the regular tither's blank afterwards."

No man or country can ignore the responsibility of his privileges. The world is a place of continual and progressive judgment. As privilege increases in degree and value, so judgment rises in dignity. We should not ignore our greatest blessing—the responsibility of privilege. Privilege not properly used will ultimately disappear. It may be slow but it is sure. Christ's life was a wonderful example of privilege, not of money or rank but a life for the sake of others. Do we use our privileges to bless others? It is the basis of all Christian endeavor. The men who are anxious for privileges are the ones never worthy of them. No false levelling of men or of privilege will solve the world's difficulties. The redemption of the world lies in those whose privileges and powers are used for others.—ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

Our Own Folks

A New Association Plan

By J. F. ELWELL

California "boosters" often make the claim that "California leads the world," and we California Baptists have been trying for several years to set the pace for our brethren. One of the problems we have been working on was that of the association. Many of our people felt it had become a "fifth wheel," and that its effectiveness had diminished till it was of very little practical value, being only an "imitation state convention." Our Los Angeles Association officers have studied this question from many angles. We believed the association had its place, if it could only be made of practical value. At the 1921 session a special committee (as well as the executive committee, and also the resolutions committee) brought in a report recommending that hereafter the association take the form of a joint association and assembly. In other words, we would eliminate the "platform" features and in their place put study courses of practical value to our churches. After a full discussion this report was adopted, with only one dissenting vote.

This year the plan was put into execution, and the executive committee has received from all sides words of commendation for their efforts. The association was held at Long Beach, our famous beach resort, for one week, Monday to Saturday, August 21-26. Sessions were held each morning from 9:30 to 12:15, each evening at 7:30, and two afternoons only, the other afternoons being open for recreation. At 9:30 we had a fifteen minute assembly hour for devotions and announcements. At 9:45 the first study period was called. The association then divided into three sections, one class being conducted on problems of administration, another on intermediate work, another on missions—"popularizing missionary education in church and school," being the topic. At 10:30 the gong was sounded and the classes assumed another alignment, under new teachers, to problems of the local church and the denomination, and on "The Making of a Teacher." The last three days one of the classes of the second period was on the study of "Educational Dramatics and Pageantry." At 11:15 the association was again assembled in the main auditorium for a Bible study hour, Dr. James A. Francis giving us two addresses on the book of Ephesians, and Dr. W. H. Geistweitz, of the Third Church, St. Louis, captivating every one with four soul-stirring addresses on "Journeys in John." Before the address each morning a song or two was sung, a solo number was given and a collection taken. The evening sessions were of a semi-popular character for the masses. Lectures and musical entertainment of an unusually high order were presented, also a pageant on missionary night. One afternoon was given over to Sunday-school work, and one afternoon to strictly association business and a roll-call of the churches, this latter taking the place of the old-time church letter.

The above is the plan in outline. The details may not be of so much interest. The association voted to continue the plan for another year, there seeming to be great enthusiasm over the results accomplished. We had a registration fee of 50 cents for the study classes. There was no charge for registering the delegates who came only for the Bible hour and the purely association sessions. There were a few over 300 who registered and paid their fee for the study classes, and the teachers were a unit in their enthusiasm over the response of their students. The Bible hour attendance averaged a little over 1000 per morning, with full houses every evening.

Some of the subjects discussed follow: Problems of Administration, Building of a Program of Christian Education for the Modern Church, The Problem of the Young People, Elementary Sunday School Work, Story Telling, Popularizing Missionary Education in Church and School, The Making of a Teacher, A Study in Childhood, A Study of Youth, Qualifying as a Leader, Organization and Activities of the Local Church, The Denomination, The Correlation of Church and Denominational Societies, Educational Dramatics and Pageantry, The Book of the Ephesians, Journeys in John, Teaching and Inspiration of the Scriptures in the Church School, Our Country, Duty and Destiny, The Baptists of Southern California, Syria, The Story of Harmony, The World's Opportunities for Baptists, The Bible School's Greatest Magnet, The Master's Challenge to Men, The Challenge of Publicity, How to Deal With the Church School pupil of High School age in his Problems with the Bible and Science.

The following are some of the instructors and lecturers: George Ellingwood Joy, Miss Alice Jacobs, Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Rider, Dr. J. D. Springston, Hazel Thomas Wayne, Dr. James A. Francis, Dr. W. H. Geistweitz, Dr. W. F. Harper, Mrs. W. G. Burgess, Judge J. H. Merriam, Dr. F. G. Davies, Princess Rahme Haider, Mrs. M. Grant Edmonds, Miss Mary E. Greene, Rev. Frank Durham, Dr. J. Harvey Deere, Daniel H. Jones, Prof. J. H. Montgomery, Carl A. Bundy, Rhyner J. Ohlund, Willis Sanford, Gladys Skevington, Ruth Murphy, Mrs. Clara Walberg, Merrill Brininstool, Verner Olsen.

The outstanding feature of the association was the work of Dr. W. H. Geistweitz, of the Third Church, St. Louis. Dr. Geistweitz is greatly beloved on this Coast, and it was indeed a real privilege to have him as our speaker. Great credit should also be given for the success of the association to the dean of the institute work (the study periods), Mr. George Ellingwood Joy, director of religious education of Temple Church, Los Angeles.

Central Conference of German Baptist Churches

By THOMAS STOERI

The recent forty-second Central Conference of the German Baptist Churches of Illinois, Ohio and Michigan enjoyed the well known hospitality of the Oak Park German Baptist Church. An enthusiastic gathering of delegates and visitors heartily agreed with the main thought of the opening sermon delivered by Brother O. R. Schroeder of Cleveland, that the power of the Holy Ghost is the paramount need of the church and the children of God today.

The reports of the churches as a whole were encouraging. For different reasons statistics did not show the usual increase, though there had been over 200 baptisms reported. The present membership of the conference is 5576. The financial report was encouraging. For local purposes the sum of $110,494.93 and for all benevolences $72,510.17, a total of $183,005.10, had been contributed averaging $32.82 per member.

Br. J. G. Draewel of Detroit served as chairman, O. R. Schroeder as vice-chairman, H. Steiger as corresponding secretary and G. E. Kliese as statistical secretary. The reports of the different branches of our general work were gratefully received. Br. H. P. Donner, manager of our Publication society presented an encouraging report, and Prof. R. J. Ramaker gave us also welcome news of our seminary in Rochester.

We also were favored with visitors from foreign lands. Rev. J. Speicher from Swatow, China, spoke of the work so near to his heart among the Chinese. We were indeed distressed to hear of the calamity that had overtaken Swatow through the recent typhoon. Through Br. Carl Fuellbrandt, son of the veteran pioneer preacher, a business man of distracted Russia gave us a soul-stirring account of conditions and experiences in that country. He also showed the wonderful opportunity of evangelizing that country because of the great awakening and spiritual hunger of the masses of Russia. Many of our own faith and tongue are now starving and dying. Brother Fuellbrandt has visited as many of our churches in this country as possible and testified to a very hearty response.

The program of the conference was well balanced and well received. Special attention was given to the work among the young people.

Saturday evening the united choirs of the German Baptist churches of Chicago furnished a musical treat. Under the leadership of Prof. G. W. Berendt, with W. J. Krogman, organist, a fine program was enjoyed. Two numbers of this program were rendered by a young artist, William Carver Williams, cellist, accompanied by Betsy Knowlton Williams.

Work at the University of Wisconsin

By JOSEPH BAIRD GLEASON

It is an opportune time to tell of Baptist Young People's Work at First Church and the Baptist Student Headquarters of Madison, Wis. We are at the seat of one of the world's greatest universities and each year over 300 Baptist young people from all over the United States are enrolled as students in this institution. J. Sherman Wallace, pastor of the First Church, and J. B. Gleason, university pastor, consider it a privilege and opportunity to work with these young people and help them with their personal problems and hold them to the ideals and purposes of Jesus Christ.

A young people's cabinet heads up the work of the Baptist students who make the First Church their church home. This cabinet correlates the work of four Bible classes, two for young men and two for young women, the life service group, and the Christian Endeavor Society. It serves to prevent duplication of effort and it acts as a sort of supreme court of activities. The president for this year is J. Arlington Potts, a senior in the College of Electrical Engineering. Mr. Potts is an able executive, has the highest ideals, and is a splendid Christian. He is the fourth president since the cabinet was organized three years ago. F. W. Parker, Clarence Andree, Kathryn Mykel, all university students have been presidents. The president is elected by the young people at large. He is always chosen because of his outstanding leadership.

The work of the cabinet is divided into various departments. By the unit system calls are made on all the new Baptist students at the beginning of the school year. During the year a telephone list of all the young people is secured and in a systematic manner all are notified of various social and religious events. The Americanization chairman secures helpers in the work of teaching English to the Italians of Madison. The chairman of the choir assists the musical director in forming a young people's chorus choir, which sings at both morning and evening church services. The chairman of the devotional committee with her committee organizes the programs of the Christian Endeavor meetings. Most of the topics are original and the meetings are always inspiring and helpful. This committee is one of the hardest working committees of the cabinet. The foreign-student chairman tries to meet personally most of the foreign students and an endeavor is made to get a large number of our Baptist students personally interested in the youth from other nations. An attempt is also made to have the Baptist homes opened up and the boys are invited to Sunday dinners. Each year a banquet is given for these students and the bond of friendship is cemented between the American and foreign students, and Christian ideals are held up before them by inspiring addresses from our Christian young men. The finance chairman makes out a budget for all the organizations and pledges are taken instead of dues. This past year over $700 was pledged and distributed to the New World Movement, other missionary channels, music, social service, and other activities. The gospel team chairman makes out the program of the gospel teams in cooperation with the university pastor. The first gospel teams, composed of both men and women, ever sent out from the university were sent out two years ago. The teams made three-day trips to Verona, Delavan, West Allis, Darlington, and one-day trips to various other churches, during the past year. Two young women and three young men usually make up the team. All these young people are consecrated Christians and leaders upon the campus. "Gibby" Harold Gibson, varsity quarter-back, led the team at Delavan last year and as a result twelve young people made decisions for the Christian life. The publicity manager handles the advertising in the various papers and puts up attractive posters on the campus. The social chairman puts on the fall student reception, annual religious conference banquet, and correlates the social activities of all the groups. The cabinet cooperates with the Campus Religious Council of Wisconsin, an organization composed of all churches connected with the university, and the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. Our chairman works with representatives of other churches to conduct the annual religious conference at the university. Last year Rev. Charles Gilkey of Chicago was the speaker at the conference. The life service group was composed of thirty young men and women. Students for the ministry, social service, and missionary field, made up the group. They meet once a month for discussion of Christian service at home and abroad.

The young men's Bible class, called the Mixers, is composed almost entirely of university students and is taught by the university pastor. The young women's Bible classes, called Senior Philathea and Junior Philathea are taught by Mrs. J. Sherman Wallace and Mrs. W. L. Roach. All these classes meet on Sunday morning with the Sunday school of the church.

The Christian Endeavor society has a membership of about 200. It meets from five to seven-thirty every Sunday evening for home hour, luncheon, and devotional service. The Christian Endeavor also handles hikes for all groups. During the year the young people go to a number of beautiful spots around Lake Mendota and Lake Monona, where real old-fashioned weenie-roasts are enjoyed. Last year thirty-one social events including hikes and socials were sponsored by the cabinet.

All Baptists Students who are sick during the year at the university infirmary are called upon and flowers are sent to them.

The cabinet meets the first Friday of every month at the Baptist Student Headquarters. The wife of the university pastor serves a thirty-five cent supper and the cabinet enjoys a social and devotional, as well as business meeting. Written reports are received from each chairman each month and at the end of the year an election banquet is held and yearly reports given.

Just a word about the Baptist Student Headquarters. This home for the students was bought by the Francis Wayland Foundation of Wisconsin last year. From the opening day, Feb. 28, 1922, until June 26, 1922, 143 groups of students and young people used the house for their meetings. The total number of young people in these groups was 1420. In addition to these group meetings the house was in constant use by the Baptist students for reading, resting, consultation with the university pastor or his wife, and as a general meeting place for students. The house is composed of two flats. The upper floor is rented to a private family. On the lower floor is the university pastor's office, a large student headquarters room, and the apartments which are the home of the university pastor and his family.

Roumanian Baptist Convention

By V. W. JONES

Roumanian Baptists held their annual convention Sept. 1-5. Delegates from practically all the churches of America attended this convention at the Second Roumanian Baptist Church of Detroit. An excellent program had been prepared so that interesting subjects and problems were discussed systematically. This phase of work shows that the Roumanian Baptists of America are well organized and much interested in the advancement of the kingdom of God.

An interesting feature of this Assembly was the session of women's organizations. Each organization was represented in the convention, and reports were given, as to the success of their Christian work.

At different periods inspirational addresses were given by Dr. C. A. Brooks, of New York; Dr. C. H. Gleiss, president of the Baptist Union of Detroit; Rev. W. J. Appel, a missionary from Africa and Dr. F. L. Anderson, president of the Baptist International Seminary of East Orange, N. J.

The presence of a group of Roumanian Baptist students from different colleges and seminaries added much to the spirit and success of the convention.

Dr. W. A. Granger

Dr. Grose, though not a Colgate man, gave an excellent biography of my classmate. Our class, '74 Colgate, numbered twenty-two. Of these fifteen were Baptist ministers. Most of them have done faithful work in small fields. Three form a group by themselves. Dr. W. T. Henry was our intellectual leader. His one pastorate of over forty years and call to the presidency of Colgate justify our predictions. On the other hand Dr. G. R. Robins was the preacher to the poor as his twenty-five-year pastorate at Cincinnati proves. Dr. Granger had a larger circle of influence, yet none knew him but to love him. While the news of his passing brings a sense of sorrow, yet how fitting was the entire setting of the scene that Sabbath morning, as to place, time and those present. I was the youngest member of the class and am a layman, yet I feel sure that every member of the class, while having different estimates of one another, would have the opinion which I have given as to Dr. Granger. May God give us more such men!

MAINE

DR. J. W. BROWN resigns the pastorate of the Princeton church, and accepts the call to the church in Cherryfield. His brief pastorate at Princeton has been marked by a considerable progress on the part of the church and he will begin his work with the important church at Cherryfield under favorable auspices.

THE FIRST OF THE state promotion conferences, arranged by the general board of promotion, was held in Waterville, Sept. 18-19, and if the old slogan be true, "as Maine goes, so goes the Union," then these conferences will mean great good to the denomination, and great increase to its missionary purpose. The attendance included leading pastors and laymen from every section of the State. The team consisted of Dr. Lerrigo, Mrs. Goodman, Dr. Fowler, and Dr. Hill. Uplifting inspirational addresses were given, and the program was set forth so as to make it seem, not only possible, but reasonable, necessary, and imperative.

CUMBERLAND ASSOCIATION held a quarterly Meeting at Gray, Sept. 21. It might be called a promotional meeting. The basis of all Christian life, thought, work, hope and joy were strongly set forth in a sermon by Dr. Hudson. The program of the year in face of the world situation was presented by Director Whittemore, and the promotional committee of the association, Rev. J. B. Bryant, chairman, and Mrs. Geo. H. Ellis, secretary, made provision for carrying the missionary message to the smallest churches in the association. Dr. Lorimer, the moderator, gave a helpful exposition of the Letter to the Galatians, and Mr. Marriner, formerly of Hebron, gave an address on the Sunday school. Pastor-evangelist Evans, by sermons and address, turned the attention of the association to a vital theme.

LINCOLN ASSOCIATION held a quarterly Meeting at beautiful Port Clyde, Sept. 20. Pastor Howes included in his good work a royal welcome to the delegates, and his junior choir sang. Pastors Young, Griffith, Remick, and others participated in the service that will be of great value.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Sanford, observed the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its organization with appropriate services beginning Sunday, Sept. 17. The historical sermon was given by former pastor, Rev. E. S. Philbrook, of Randolph, Mass. Dr. I. B. Mower, executive secretary of the Main United Baptist Convention, offered the anniversary prayer and brought greetings from the state. In the evening another former pastor, Rev. H. L. Tilden, of Kennebunkport, spoke on the origin and mission of the church. The fellowship service on Thursday evening was an enjoyable occasion, the other churches of the town uniting. On the following Sunday Prof. F. L. Anderson, of Newton, spoke on "The Present Challenge," furnishing a vital and timely program for the church to follow in the next twenty-five years. In the evening Rev. George R. Stair, of Chicago, gave an inspiring message on "Getting a New Grip." The church was organized September 16, 1772. It has the distinction of being the oldest Baptist church in the state except the North Berwick Baptist church which is four years older. The first pastor was Rev. Pelatiah Tingley, born in Attleboro, Mass., and graduated from Yale College in 1761. He was afterward appointed delegate from Waterboro, Maine, to the famous convention held in Boston, January 10, 1788, for the purpose of ratifying the Federal Constitution. A long line of faithful men followed who laid foundations broad and deep for others to build upon. The present pastorate began in February, 1916. There has been a steady, wholesome growth and a deepening of interest. Financially and otherwise the church is in a prosperous condition. Missionary in spirit, it exceeded its apportionment in the New World Movement and is in close touch with the work of the denomination at home and abroad. A beautiful spirit pervades the entire life of the church.

CONNECTICUT

THE NEW LONDON ASSOCIATION met with the First Church, Montville, Sept. 13-14. The entire work of the denomination was presented at the association. The annual sermon by Rev. D. A. Pitt on "The Gospel of Love and Power," and the missionary sermon by Rev. C. H. Howe, were most helpful messages. Miss Jennie Crawford, of West China, and Rev. A. S. Adams, of Swatow, China, brought messages from afar. Rev. Harry S. Myers, of the New York office, gave the address on "Stewardship."

THE ONE HUNDRED THIRTY-THIRD annual meeting of the Hartford Association was held with the Calvary Church, Torrington, Sept. 20. The usual routine of matters connected with the denominational program were presented. Rev. D. A. Pitt preached the annual sermon, Christian Americanization was presented by Miss Marion W. Lathrop, an address on "The American Negro" was made by Mrs. Mary E. Bloomer of the Home Mission Society. Rev. D. B. MacQueen spoke on "Pentecost and Property." A drama, entitled, "Internal Revenue" was presented by seven girls from the Winsted Baptist Church.

THE SUFFIELD SCHOOL, the only Baptist School in Connecticut, opened on Tuesday morning, Sept. 19, most auspiciously. The indications are that the entire capacity of the school will be taxed. Dr. Allen K. Foster, of the Education Society, was present at the first chapel service, and spent three days with the school. Dr. Foster, with his virile message, and his knowledge of the problems boys and girls have to face, is an ideal man for the business in which he is engaged.

DR. CORNELIUS WOELFKIN, of New York, conducted the Retreat at the Hartford Theological Seminary, Sept. 18-19, for the ministers of Connecticut. Those who heard him have returned to their task with a stronger faith and a deeper love for God and humanity.

THE CONNECTICUT CONVENTION will convene Oct. 16-18, with the First Church, New Britain. Connecticut is co-ordinating the program of the Setting-up-Conference with the program of the state convention. This arrangement necessitates an extra session Wednesday evening, Oct. 18.

VERMONT

ORDINATION: Champney, Lewis W.—At First Church, Wilmington, Sept. 22. Moderator, Rev. W. A. Davison, state secretary; clerk, Henry H. Allen, of Wilmington. Sermon by Rev. Clark T. Brownell, of Brattleboro; other parts by Rev. C. T. Bishop, West Brattleboro, John M. Maxwell, Bellows Falls, C. O. Dunham, East Dover and Mr. Sharpe of Brookline.

MASSACHUSETTS

REV. CHARLES D. PIPER has accepted a call to the Fifth Street Church, Lowell, and is expected to assume the position Nov. 1.

REV. J. C. WILSON closes his pastorate at Norwood, after serving there two years. This is a good field, plenty of people, a fine well-located meeting house, twelve miles from Boston. As an opportunity, it ought to tempt a strong man.

WINTHROP STREET CHURCH, Taunton, has secured a sturdy leader in Rev. J. Earle Edwards, who was formerly superintendent of promotion for the New Jersey Baptist Convention. This seems like a wise and promising combination; for the Taunton church has long been a solid and outstanding institution in that section, and Pastor Edwards comes with strength and experience to work the field and wield its force.

WE ARE ALREADY HEARING notes of preparation for the great convention next year of the B. Y. P. U. A. Boston will make it a notable convention, and will draw a record attendance.

THE OCTOBER MEETING of the Social Union announces something new—"Physicians Night," with Dr. Howard A. Kelly of John Hopkins University speaking on "The Physician and Religion." Our Doctor-President Wilcox makes an unexpected though a befitting stroke, and we expect many physicians and considerable general health in mind and spirit.

THE CHURCH AT GROTON is finishing with a student supply, and perhaps will now settle a pastor. Groton is a fine specimen of the old-fashioned New England village—solid, thrifty, and beautiful, with marks of age and substance in its old trees, its spacious homes and its fine schools. Hard work would lift up that old church where it belongs.

BY A SHIFT IN THE management of our Publication Society's bookstore in Boston, we have been welcoming Manager Adair who comes to us from the store of the society in Toronto. We had much enjoyed the genial administration of the former manager, W. A. Kinzie. It is an important center of Baptist interest and information and affords an opportunity for large helpfulness

NEW YORK

Cattaraugus Association

The eighty-seventh annual meeting of the Cattaraugus Association was held at the Farmersville Station Church, Sept. 19-20. The attendance was large and the delegates entered into the work of the association with enthusiasm. The addresses were inspiring and helpful. Dr. H. C. Lyman, representing Kenka College told of the progress of the Girls' College—a grade A college and so recognized by the state of New York. Dr. E. B. Richmond of the state convention told of the new organization and the great hope of the future. He desires a representative in this association. The annual sermon was preached by Dr. Houser, the new pastor of the Olean church.

Rev. J. M. Harris gave an address on Sunday-school work and Dr. Stanley McKay gave an account of a visit he made to a Sunday school of his boyhood days and the splendid work they were doing there. Tuesday evening was young people's night and was in charge of Mrs. Howard Craig of Olean. Dr. David A. Mac Murray of First Baptist Church, Ashbury Park, N. J., gave an address on "Signs of The Times." It was a spiritual message of power.

Professor Robins on Wednesday morning spoke on Christian education. He spoke also at the woman's hour, giving his experiences during a recent trip to Eastern countries. Mr. Mac George, of Salamanca, gave an address on the subject: "What Can Christ Do for You?" Rev. Charles Briggs, from the Sunday-school department, brought the new plans of the denomination in regard to Sunday-school work and asked every school to enroll. Wednesday evening the evangelistic sermon for the benefit of the home church was given by Mr. Entwistle of Hinsdale.

The church letters were encouraging. They were optimistic and hopeful. Many have improved their property during the year. The Farmersville Station people know how to entertain.

WISCONSIN

IN RESPONSE TO A CALL issued by the First Church of Omro, a council convened Sept. 19, for the purpose of ordaining the pastor, Samuel R. Dunlop. There were present twenty-three messengers representing ten churches. Rev. U. E. Gibson of Neenah was elected moderator and Rev. F. L. Holden of Antigo clerk. The ordination sermon was preached by Dr. LaGrand of the State Convention. Mr. Dunlop received his training at the Moody Bible Institute and has been in the ministry in Wisconsin about eight years.

THE BAPTIST TEMPLE, OSHKOSH, rededicated its building, Sept. 24 after extensive repairs that entailed an expenditure of over $7,000. The building has been redecorated throughout, with new hardwood floors and new carpet. The pipe organ has been rebuilt. Large congregations joined in the reopening services. Rev.

Eugene G. Mintz and his people have reason to be proud of the results of their summer's work.

THE NEW JUDSON CHURCH located at Berkshire (Potomac) St. and Austin Bvd., Oak Park, Rev. J. C. Dent, pastor, will be formally recognized Thursday evening, Oct. 12 by the Chicago Association. The occasion is one of public interest and an interesting program has been prepared with prominent speakers, among whom are Mr. Edwin Phelps, moderator Chicago Association; Rev. S. Nelson, Rev. Carl D. Case, Rev. J. B. Thomas, and Rev. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago.

FIRST CHURCH OF WHITE HALL, Rev. L. E. Ellison, pastor, is a growing organization. During remodeling of our building all Sunday services are held in the Princess Theatre building, except elementary Sunday school which meets in the high-school gymnasium. We have the largest Sunday-school and church attendance in the city, but we will not be satisfied till we can reach many more. The brick work is already started on the walls of the new addition to the church building.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BAPTIST Old People's Home will be held at the home, Maywood, Tuesday, Oct. 10, 1922, at 8:00 o'clock P. M. Dinner will be served in the dining room at 7 o'clock sharp, at 75 cents per plate.

OHIO

Golden Anniversary of Linden Avenue

On Sunday morning, Sept. 17, the auditorium of the Linden Ave. Church, Dayton was filled to its capacity with members and friends, who came to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of this body, the first of a series of six services. Of the fifty-seven constituent members, there remain upon the church roll, the names of six, all of whom were able to be present: Mr. and Mrs. James H. Stevens, Mrs. Nancy A. Kiefaber, Mrs. Ella Weldy, Mr. Frank T. Huffman, and Mr. Torrence Huffman. In the evening, the anniversary sermon was delivered by Dr. E. W. Lounsbury of Aurora, Ill., pastor from 1883 to 1895, with a record of having held the pastorate longest of the nine men who have been here. Historical night was on Monday. The Bible school and the B. Y. P. U. were given special recognition on Tuesday evening, when there was a roll call of past superintendents. The church was formally organized on Sept. 20, 1872, and so Wednesday was the time of the final celebration. In the afternoon, the women gave an unusual program. The address of the afternoon was made by Mrs. Lounsbury, whose life meant so much to the women of church while she dwelt among them. The guests of special honor were Mrs. Kiefaber and James Stevens. Supper was served and then the evening was spent most happily in listening to the stories told by Dr. Lounsbury and the greetings brought by pastors representing the Baptists, other churches of the city.

This has been for Linden Avenue Church, a jubilee—a time of rejoicing. The past is rich in accomplishment. But no thinking person could go through these services without feeling the challenge to the present membership. For three years the church has been under the faithful ministry of Brother George W. Johnson, who has given the Gospel no uncertain sound, nor has he spared himself in his task. Linden Avenue grew out of the old family church into the neighborhood of community meeting place, but again it has changed to the city church with widely scattered membership. Its problems of today are not those of fifty years ago.

NEBRASKA

THE CHURCH at OXFORD has called to its pastorate Rev. F. C. Barrett of Kearney. Mr. Barrett has accepted the call and is already on the field.

Omaha Association

THE FIFTY-SIXTH annual meeting of the Omaha Baptist Association closed on Tuesday, Sept. 19. Rev. Fred Young of Fremont was elected moderator and Rev. Charles F. Holler of Omaha, clerk.

Resolutions protesting against race track gambling in connection with Ak-Sar-Ben races; expressing alarm at increasing Sabbath desecration; urging Baptists to vote only for "dry" candidates in the coming election; reaffirming loyalty to the Scriptures and Old and New Testaments as the Word of God; and recommending that differences between capital and labor be adjusted according to the principles of Jesus and the Golden Rule, were passed.

Reports indicated 382 new members in the last year, bringing the total to 4,192. Money raised in Baptist churches in the district, including Omaha, Fremont, Blair, Tekamah, Hermon and Silver Creek, totaled $27,717.85. Next year's meeting will be held in Herman.

Mrs. A. L. Bain of Valley, Neb., who spent 20 years as a pioneer missionary in Muaimvika was the principal speaker at the women's sessions.

KANSAS

THE STATE CONVENTION will hold its seventy-second annual meeting in Hays, Oct. 10-12. An unusually good program is announced and a fine attendance is anticipated. The report on state missions will show the largest year in the history of the convention.

JAMES FISHER, GRADUATE of Ottawa University and of Rochester Theological Seminary, has entered upon his labors as pastor of the Wellington Church. This is one of the prosperous cities and the people have recently built a beautiful and commodious church home.

THE WOODLAND PARK CHURCH, St. Paul, has started the fall campaign with a full program. The Bible school has doubled the past three years, with two young people's classes numbering 175 and several large classes in the teen age, besides the Boy and Girl Scouts. Not only has the capacity of the church building been taxed, but the time and energy of the pastor, teachers and leaders. To assist along the entire line, the church has secured the services of Mr. Richard Holland, now without less is one of the miracles of divine Providence. How many of the Christians lost their lives it is too soon to say. My principal evangelist was killed in his home by falling walls and his whole family went with him. The chapel in that place is down and in a nearly place the preacher escaped with part of his family when the chapel fell. The headmaster of the school here at Chaoyang, upon whom I had depended so much in the past and whom I had expected to put in charge during my furlough, has his home in the same village as the aforementioned evangelist. His home is an entire wreck and with it went seven out of the family of eleven. The headmaster and one son were here at Chaoyang, his brother was at Swatow and one child was rescued from the ruins. All the rest are gone. When he got the news of course he was entirely crushed by the blow. I am hoping he will recover and still be able to take charge of the field but this is all in the future. So you will see that of all places, Chaoyang is hit the hardest. The loss of property and life in many cases was caused by the junks being driven into the villages against buildings. Three heavy junks are responsible for the loss of our chapel here. If one of these had struck a dwelling house it would have been crushed.

"As to the future, we are already arranging to open the school at the regular time. We shall cover that part of the building for which we have the materials and will put up mat sheds sufficient to accommodate the rest of the pupils. Owing to the loss of boats, it is impossible to get sufficient building material, lime and tiles, to put our buildings in shape. We will have to build simply as these things become available. Prices of building materials have doubled and in some cases quadrupled. We had just begun the foundations for the new hospital building here. With the cost of building materials so high, it will be impossible to go ahead with it at the present time."

costs. If an officer or departmental head is needed, get one. If the school does not have a monthly workers' conference, start one.

4. Put in a good system of records. Keep accurate records. Have an educational system of records so as to grade a scholar on something besides attendance. Here is a sample of an excellent educational record card for juniors and intermediates. At the end of the quarter send to the parents a report card covering these points:

Department	Class
Date
Present10
On time10
Bible10
Offering10
Lesson studied15
Hand work10
Top record10
Church attendance	25
Total

Follow up all absentees. Never let a scholar be absent a Sunday without some form of adequate follow-up. Each teacher should look up the absentees in his or her class or arrange for some one to do

5. Put in New Classes or Departments. If the school has no cradle-roll start one. A large cradle-roll means a large beginners department. If the beginners and primary are meeting together, put them in separate departments in separate rooms. If the juniors have been meeting with the main school, put them in a room by themselves with their own superintendent. If there is no class for young men, young married people, men or adults, start one.

6. Set a numerical goal. Make it big enough to challenge the people and set them to work but not so high that it cannot be reached. Keep this goal before the school. Secure cooperation from all the teachers, officers and department heads. Create a happy, joyous, expectant spirit. Arouse interest and a desire to attain. But, above all, secure the cooperation of the scholars in securing new members.

Good trained teachers will hold the new scholars and win them to Christ and his way of living.

Any school can increase its attendance if it wants to. Does your school want to? "A diamond in the rough"

Is a diamond sure enough. For before it ever sparkled It was made of diamond stuff.

"Of course someone must find it. Or it never will be found; And then someone must grind it. Or it never will be ground."

"But when 'tis found, and when 'tis ground, And when 'tis burnished bright; That diamond's everlasting Just flashing out its light!"

Obituary
AN APPRECIATION

August 8, 1922, at Belpre, Kan., Rev. Samuel Judson Ruff passed joyfully to his reward at the age of more than score years and ten. Converted at the age of twelve he early felt called to the gospel ministry and entered Central College at Pella, Iowa, following this with theological studies in Chicago. His health broke down and he went to Kansas in 1873, where he gradually improved until he was able to become active in Christian work. He was ordained at Beloit, Kansas in 1875 and has been active in every good word and work throughout the rest of his life. He was married in 1874 to Mary J. Rairden and she and three sons survive him.

He was one of the most conscientious and devoted Christians. His life was an open book. His faith was simple and his zeal for Christ and his church never flagged. During his long and arduous life, as during his whole life, his ambition was to see his Lord honored and his kingdom advanced. Last year when our benevolent interests seemed to close so heavily on us and his wife made a journey of a good farm worth $5,000 to be out in that trying time.

His funeral services were held in the Belpre Baptist Church which he and his wife were instrumental in founding, by Rev. G. B. Haggard of Kansas City, a former pastor. Mr. Ruff had selected for the text of his memorial sermon the words of Paul, "For by grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God". All the world is poorer, but heaven is richer by his "home going."

Wednesday night is church night when the members gather at the church for supper at six o'clock, after which there is the period of Bible study and missionary program, followed by committee meetings. During the past two years the church has increased in membership over one-third. Growth in Biblical knowledge and spiritual realities is the present emphasis.

REV. W. E. WOODBURY, PASTOR of Trinity Church, Minneapolis, has been preaching at the Bohemian Mission, New Prague, once a month for some time. As this is the only English evangelical service in the town, the citizens appreciate his coming.

REV. J. A. CARLSON, of the Swedish Bethel Church, Duluth, has accepted a call to Oakland, Neb. Congratulations to Nebraska.

THE CONGREGATION AT BLUE EARTH is worshipping in the opera house while the church is being redecorated. The attendance at service is said to be the largest in the history of the church. The pastor gives week-day religious instruction in connection with the city schools.

REV. AUGUST BROHOLM, of Storden, has accepted a call to become general missionary in Denmark, and expects to leave his present field as soon as a new pastor is secured.

HARVEY PETERSON, a member of the Clarks Grove Church and now pastor in Michigan, was recently ordained at Clarks Grove. Pastor A. A. Warren was moderator, and A. J. Hoag, clerk.

THE FIFTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING of the Rocky Mountain Baptist Association was held Sept. 21, in First Church, Denver, with Rev. L. B. Crosby, moderator and Rev. H. W. Wilson, clerk and treasurer.

A NOTABLE OCCASION was the reception in honor of Dr. A. H. C. Morse, on the evening of Sept. 21, in First Church, Denver, commemorating the tenth anniversary of his coming to this church. Addresses were given by Governor Shoup, Mayor Bailey and others who voiced their appreciation of the man and his work. Dr. Morse is one of Denver's ablest preachers. The decade since the date of his settlement as pastor has been a constructive period. The membership of First Church ten years ago was 931; the present membership is 2,039. The average attendance in Sunday school in 1912 was 254; this year it has been 412. The total sum raised in 1912 was $15,273; this year, $50,000. Sums for missions and other benevolences in 1912, amounted to

New Tasks for Old Churches, by Roger Babson. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00.

A book that all laymen of the Church should read. It is full of interesting facts concerning the present industrial situation and the churches' relationship to this situation. The author is courageous in his suggestion concerning education and church organization. After suggesting many tasks for the church to do, if it is to survive, he finally says that the great task of the church is to convert men and women to acknowledge God and their dependence upon him and to think of others.

The Children's Bible, translated and arranged by Henry A. Sherman and Charles Foster Kent. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.50.

This book is written in the text of the Bible but in the language of a child, so that it may be read to younger children and by older. It consists of many selections, from both the Old and the New Testaments, made as a result of more than twenty-five years' observance and study. Stories from the Bible are put out in many volumes by many publishers, but this book in no way conforms to the ordinary type of books of Bible stories. It consists of more than 300 pages, 9x7 inches, is printed in the large, easy-to-read type that delights children, and its illustrations are literally works of art. There are fourteen full-page illustrations in full color by W. L. Taylor and Herbert Moore, and sixteen full-page illustrations in duotone. The child who is made the possessor of this book is fortunate, for not only will he spend countless happy hours over it, but his child life and, consequently, his entire future life, will be enriched by it.

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

NEWS FROM BURMA

Some weeks ago a most interesting letter came to this department from Doctor Nichols at the Sgaw Karen High School in Bassein in faraway Burma. The precise occasion for the letter was a request for aid in securing appropriate choral music. Of more general interest was the information about the work of the school in a musical way which was hinted at modestly in the letter itself. In this distant school has been built up an institute of over 1,000 pupils, on a self-supporting basis, offering a course of study which will stand comparison with any of our American schools and a school spirit which would rank with any of them! As usual I took more particular interest in the musical details given—and they were surprising in the scope and achievements shown. We have Mendelssohn's oratorio of "Elijah" given in its entirety; a school orchestra playing a good class of music in fine style, an enthusiastic chorus eager for the better things in music—this is proved by the type of choral music asked for; and, last, but not least, a lover of music and an efficient organizer at the head, Doctor Nichols.

Enclosed in the letter was a printed program of a reception tendered some months ago to the members of the Burma Reforms Committee. After an eloquent opening speech by Dr. Nichols, a musical program was given, consisting of piano pieces, songs, violin solos and choral music, all of a surprisingly good grade and variety. At the conclusion of this hastily grouped program came the introduction of the president of the Indian Legislative Assembly, the Hon. Mr. A. F. Whyte, and his address. I shall quote verbatim from the little program-booklet for parts of this:

"Dr. San C. Po, M. D., M. L. C., then formally introduced Mr. Whyte who, addressing the gathering, said that he wished to give thanks on behalf of the Burma Reforms Committee to those who had organized that beautiful welcome for them that night—a welcome which had been very different from that organized by some other persons in Burma! He assured them all the members of the Reforms Committee appreciated very highly both the thought which had prompted the Karens to organize such a welcome for them, and the remarkable musical talent which had been displayed that evening. The thought had come into his mind, as he was listening to the various items on the program, that he hoped there was some among them who would not be satisfied with merely the beauties of music, but who would so master the technique that they might some day be able to carry the Karen message to the western part of the civilized world, and show that the debt was not all one way.

"The debt of the Karen community to the American Baptist Mission was, as they were all aware, not a debt which was easy to measure. It was a fortunate day indeed, when the East India Company refused Dr. Judson leave to land in what was now the Indian Empire, and he came here, planting the seed which had grown into the great tree of the American Baptist Mission, whose branches had reached out into every part of the country. He doubted if there was any single agency for the betterment of human welfare in any part of the world that had achieved greater results; and he wished, if he might,—speaking simply as a citizen of the British Empire to the citizen of a friendly and generous power,—to convey his grateful thanks to Dr. Nichols and his compatriots for the sterling work they had accomplished for the people of Burma, and particularly for the Karens.

"It was, as he had mentioned before, a happy moment when the East India Company had refused Dr. Judson leave a hundred years before, to set foot in India and the work that had been accomplished because of that throughout the province in Burma was a work—if he might say so—which was only now beginning, splendid as had been the achievements already brought about. One thing he would like to say,—he did not think any citizen of the British Empire, listening to Dr. Nichols' opening words, could have failed to be touched by the tribute paid to the sincerity of his majesty's government in the attempt to marshal all people under the sway of the British Crown along the road of political freedom. It was no small thing for an American citizen,—perhaps that citizen, of all in any part of the world, who was best able to judge what was British political liberty and what was its mission, a person who could judge political liberty from his own history,—for an American citizen to come forward and speak of the sincerity of the mission of the British government was a thing which any citizen of the British Empire should be proud of. On that ground also he wished to thank him very heartily indeed for his words."

Above we make record of a series of splendid pieces for violincello and piano (or organ). The repertoire of such combinations, of mood and style appropriate to use in church, is not a very wide one. Therefore such material as we list above is that much the more welcome. The occasional change from an organ prelude or offertory to one involving the use of a solo instrument is often a wise move in the added interest gained for the service. The only trouble is that the repertoire of pieces suitable for such a purpose is not marked by plenty! So much of otherwise attractive material is fitted with piano parts that are so much in the piano idiom that they will not effectively transcribe for organ; or else the mood of the piece is not such as adds to the reverence of divine worship. All of the above named selections will be found of practical value, high musical rating and of melodic interest.

declared: "There is an impression abroad that premillennialism is accepted by the fundamentalists as definite truth. This is not true." The "Doctrinal Basis" of the "Baptist Bible Union of America" includes "His glorious second advent-premillennial personal and visible," as one of the "essential and clearly revealed doctrines" the hearty avowal of which is prerequisite to membership in the Union.

The new movement is also confined exclusively to Baptist churches, and includes in its "Doctrinal Basis" as a fundamental and vital truth "The baptism of believers by immersion." This feature of the movement is of interest in the light of the facts set forth in the article on the opposite page, and in view also of the fact that one of the most eminent advocates of the Los Angeles fundamentalist interdenominational program which Dr. Scarborough reviews, is also one of the most eminent among the signers of the "Call and Manifesto" of the "Baptist Bible Union of America," namely Dr. J. Frank Norris of Texas.

In connection with this response of ours to the request from the committee to give publicity to their "Call and Manifesto," it will be of interest to call attention to the fact that among the signers to the "Call" are three English Baptist brethren: "W. J. Ervine, Esq., London, president; James Mountain, D. D. London, secretary; John Thomas, M. A., London, vice-president; representing the Baptist Bible Union of England."

Although the "Call and Manifesto" reveals no special reason for the inclusion of these three English brethren in a call for the formation of "The Baptist Bible Union of America," we are able to supply from other trustworthy sources information which will account for their manifest interest in the new American movement. Last winter the Western Recorder published an article from Dr. A. C. Dixon of Baltimore, distinguished as the successor of Dwight L. Moody in America and of Charles Haddon Spurgeon in England. The article, which was entitled "Some English Baptists and Modernism," was reprinted in Christian Fundamentals edited by Dr. W. B. Riley (Jan-Mar., 1922, page 40).

Dr. Dixon evaluated, with a marked degree of moderation in encomiums, a number of eminent English Baptists; and then turned to another group whom he pronounced more trustworthy. Among these latter he named Dr. James Mountain, whom he described as standing "like a mass of granite against all winds and waves of apostasy," and as having been the organizer of "The Baptist Bible Union." Dr. Dixon went on to say: "This 'Baptist Bible Union,' in which are some of the rising young pastors, is what the Baptist fundamentalists in America, North and South, ought to support in every possible way. Its three-fold purpose is: (1) To 'Contend earnestly for the Faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints.' (2) 'To promote a deeper fellowship and a close cooperation amongst evangelical, biblical Christians of all denominations.' (3) 'To oppose the federation of the free churches, and any kind of organic reunion, upon a basis which would involve the sacrifice of principle, or would discredit the Bible and the Christ of the Bible.'" It is evident from this statement and counsel of Dr. Dixon, that the "Baptist Bible Union of America" is the American branch of the "Baptist Bible Union" organized by Dr. Mountain in England. The similarity of text in the statement of "Aims" extends even to the repetition of the peculiar English spelling in the American version. Doubtless the committee would readily grant that the relationship indicated accounts for the inclusion of the three English names among the signatures to the "Call and Manifesto."

The committee requests us to announce that "copies of the 'Manifesto' will be furnished by our secretary to those who make application for same." The address has been given above.

LAKE CHURCH, Salinas. This community has had the good fortune to have a ten days' revival service conducted by Evangelist H. O. Anderson of Berkeley, Sept. 3-13. Brother Anderson had just returned from the East where for some months he had been holding meetings continuously, the last two at Albert Lea, Minn., and Council Bluffs, Iowa. This is a country community where the church was disbanded some years ago, the members going to the Watsonville Church ten miles away. Upon request, Homer Newberry began ministering to the people eighteen months ago with a young people's society which has been well attended. The coming of Brother Anderson awakened a new impulse. Several publicly confessed Christ and believers were greatly strengthened and a blessed spirit of unity has resulted.

John Henry Bremer, organist of the Richmond Hill Baptist Church of New York, is now in charge of the organ and octavo department of the G. Schirmer, Inc., order department, and all orders receive his personal expert attention. This fact is of interest not only to Mr. Bremer's many friends, acquired during a connection of forty years with the house of Schirmer, but to others also who will be benefited through having the help of a trained organist in their selection of new music.

The Meaning of Stewardship

Stewardship is no passing fad nor temporary expedient nor unusual method. It is based on deep spiritual principles, takes into account the strongest instincts of human nature and has the Bible as its authority.

When we gave ourselves to Christ we made a complete surrender. Stewardship aims to make this complete surrender practical and carry it into every sphere of life.

We gave ourselves and all that we had and hoped to be to the Saviour. We are not our own. We are His. Our time is His. Our strength is His. Our Ability is His. Our money is His. Our children are His. This is the meaning of stewardship.

This is our remedy to strengthen the church that has become weak; to make stronger a church that is already strong; to revive enthusiasm in a church that has lost its spiritual passion. Nothing will so help to build up a church or more greatly redound to the glory of Christ in all the world! Hundreds of pastors who have sincerely tried this plan of stewardship would testify that this is true.

The month of October has been suggested for the promotion of a stewardship program in every local Baptist church. Copies of literature and all material needed will be furnished on application to any State Convention office.

THE above group of prominent Baptist ministers called upon President Harding, Monday, October 2, giving him a protest passed by the Northern Baptist Convention held in Indianapolis, which urged the President to take action against the massacre of Christians by the Turks.

Abernethy, pastor of the Baptist Calvary Church, the President's church; John M. Moore of Brooklyn, N. Y. and Carter Helm Jones of Philadelphia.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. R. A. Kenyon of the Temple Church, Minneapolis, has resigned. We have not learned his plans for the future.

Rev. J. L. Meads, for the past ten years pastor of the First Church, Benton, Ill., has moved to Chicago and will again engage in evangelistic work. He may be addressed at 849 Lill Ave.

As announced in "The Baptist" recently, the First Church of Marietta, Ohio, extended a unanimous call to Rev. U. S. Davis, pastor of the First Church, South Bend, Ind. The members of the South Bend church made such vigorous protest, that Dr. Davis has decided to remain in South Bend, where he begins his fifth year of service.

Fleming H. Revell, of New York, head of the religious publishing house bearing his name, with his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Sept. 12 at their summer home, Riverdale-on-the-Hudson. The late Mrs. Dwight L. Moody was a sister of Mrs. Revell, and her children, Will Moody, Rev. Paul Moody and Mrs. A. P. Fitt, were present.

The First Church of Bradford, Pa., called a council of the churches of the Oil Creek Association at Bradford recently to consider the propriety of setting apart to the work of the gospel ministry Miss Laverne Minniss. Rev. S. J. Arthur was moderator and Rev. D. L. Woods, clerk, Miss Minniss was a former missionary of the W. A. B. F. M. Society.

Rev. J. G. Little, pastor of the church at Carlinville, Ill., was so successful as director of the tuberculosis health campaign in Macoupin county last year that the state board requested him to become director of twenty-five counties this year. Mr. Little after consideration decided not to accept the directorship on account of the interference with his work as pastor.

The Fiftieth Anniversary of the first formal meeting of the eminent American scholars who constituted the American revision committee and whose persistent labors during the ensuing thirty years resulted in the issuance of the American Standard Bible, was celebrated Oct. 4. It will be recalled that Dr. Philip Schaff was the head of the revision committee.

Dr. Carter Helm Jones is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons at the First Church, Philadelphia, growing out of his experiences in Europe. The general title is "Impressions of a Little Journey in Changing Europe." He will speak on "England and Her Mighty Memories," "France Rising from her Ruins," "Czechoslovakia—the Epic Poem of Providence," "Preaching in the Romantic Republic" and the "Evangel in the Land of Hus."

A new national movement, the American Bond, having as its aim a campaign for a deeper and more genuine Americanism was formally opened at Norwich, Conn., October 1. The new organization is intended to foster in the heart of both the native-born and foreign-born in this country the highest and noblest traditional American ideals. Rev. Howard H. Russell, founder of the Anti-Saloon League has associated with himself in this enterprise Rev. Louis Albert Banks, Rev. Robert P. Carson, Rev. Henry M. Faulconer and Rev. Geo. E. Burlingame.

Dr. Donald B. MacQueen, pastor of the First Church, Bridgeport, Conn., has been called to the pastorate of the First Church, Rochester, N. Y. Before going to Bridgeport, Dr. MacQueen was pastor for nine years at Batavia, N. Y.

Rev. Jesse S. Boyden for sixty-three years a Baptist minister well known throughout the state died at his home in Kalamazoo at an advanced age. Dr. H. L. Stefson and Dr. E. L. Powell spoke at a memorial service.

A resolution for the removal of the Meadville Theological School from Meadville, Pa., to some university city was adopted at the annual meeting of the trustees. The matter has been under consideration for about ten years. There is a possibility of the school being located in Chicago.

The daily press reports that the old Third Church of Christ, Scientist, in 125th Street near Fifth Avenue, New York, has been sold and it is said will be used as a Baptist church. The purchase price is given as $185,000. We have received no information as to the identity of the church making the purchase.

"THE TERROR BY NIGHT"

Only one night of raging madness—months will be required to repair damage.

Mission churches flooded; school buildings unroofed; walls of missionary homes collapsed; ceilings crashed through floors into cellars; porches blown into kindling wood; chimneys masses of flying bricks; furniture and clothing destroyed.

Will you help repair a ceiling; clear wreckage from a cellar; replace a door; buy new furniture; rebuild a porch? At least $50,000 will be needed to repair the damage done by the Swatow typhoon. Big checks—little checks—all will help.

Shall We Desert the Armenians?

By SAMUEL Z. BATTEN

THE plight of the Armenians in Asia must appeal to every right thinking person. During the past decades these people have suffered unspeakable wrongs at the hands of the Turks. During the world war they were massacred by wholesale; and probably two millions have perished. In addition, thousands of Armenian women have been buried for life in Turkish harems; while thousands of girls have suffered untold horrors at the hands of Turkish soldiers.

Recent events in Asia Minor are full of evil omen for the Christian peoples of that section. From all accounts coming to us, many thousands have already been slaughtered, and at any moment another slaughter may begin that shall surpass in horrors, if that were possible, anything that has occurred. One item records the kidnapping of 1,300 Christian girls, students of the American College Institute at Smyrna. This is only one incident in a long chapter of horrors.

It is easy for us to lay the blame for all this upon the Great Powers that have been directly concerned in Asia. It is easy also to lay much of the blame upon Great Britain, and Britain is most blameworthy. The jealousies and greed of these powers have kept the Turkish government alive for the past century. Four times at least during that time Turkey was threatened; three times Britain intervened and upheld the Turk. This time it was the ambition and schemes of France, Britain, Italy and Greece that gave the Turks a breathing spell and enabled them to come back. Behind the shifting diplomacy of these Powers lie the schemes of bankers who hold Turkish bonds, the greed of concession hunters who want to exploit the resources of Asia, and the imperialistic ambitions of Western powers. European diplomacy in relation to the Near East is without a trace of morality or a tinge of idealism. Professor Gilbert Murray recently characterized European diplomacy of the past decades as "an outlaw's market."

But if we stopped here, as it would be easy to do, we should stop short of the whole truth. The United States must bear a large share of responsibility for this situation. In the decades we have recognized our obligations to the world and have protested against the atrocities of the Turks. Then during the World War we realized as never before, that we were a part of the world and owed some obligations to humanity. We entered the war to make the world safe for democracy. We fought that subject peoples might be free. We were all inspired by the hope of a better world after the war.

Then came the Peace Conference. Many problems confronted the diplomats there, and chief of these was the future of Armenia. For generations America has shown an interest in the Armenians; again and again we have made large relief contributions. On the other hand we were in a position to exercise a friendly watch-care over the Armenians. The Turks had confidence in our fairness and would have respected our authority. We were free from selfish ambitions in the Near East and could have rendered an unselfish help.

The mandate for Armenia was offered to us. We were given an opportunity to heal this open sore of the world. What followed? We all remember only too well the pitiful story. The question of Armenia, along with many others, was made a mere political issue. The people were misled by the politicians and did not see the questions at stake. At any rate we refused to protect the Armenians; we tried to wash our hands of all responsibility for world affairs. For the past three years we have been at work discrediting everything we did during the World War. We have said that America is for America and humanity is nothing to us. We have played the part of the priest and Levite and have passed by on the other side. We have allowed humanity to be crucified by the politicians.

Again and again our government has been urged to use its good offices in ensuring the safety of the Christian peoples in Turkish lands. The Northern Baptist Convention at its recent meeting, adopted strong resolutions asking our government to protest against the murder of Armenians and urging us to "adopt measures to secure united action on the part of the United States and European governments looking to the deliverance and security of imperiled Christian peoples in the Near East. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ held a recent mass meeting in New York City and adopted resolutions entreating "the United States government, the allies, the league of nations, and especially France, that measures be taken at once to prevent future atrocities and afford adequate guaranty and protection to the minority populations left under the rule of the Turk."

Our course is clear. We must make the people of our land realize their world wide obligations. We are a part of humanity and must bear our share of the world's sorrow.

To do our part we should write at once to the president, to the secretary of state and to our state senators. We should ask churches and all bodies to adopt resolutions along this line and send them to the president.

We may well hear and heed this word from the Scriptures:

"Deliver them that are carried away unto death,

And those that are ready to be slain forbear thou not to deliver.

Shepherding Our Thoughts

Our thoughts are sheep and we are their shepherds. Armed with rod and staff, we must lead our mystic thought-flocks up into the green pastures of nourishing reality. Threading the higher ranges of being, we shall constantly hear the still waters of peace murmuring all around us. When some wolf of untruth, some roaring lion of impurity springs out of the hidden lair, He who shepherds our changes—that Great Shepherd of the sheep—shall lend us strength to smite our enemy down, as we guard our white and precious fold from polluting taint.

Where is there a lovelier, finer vision than that of the fair company of mental good shepherds, who have led their flocks of thoughts forth to graze upon the shining pasturelands of truth, and to feed upon the gleaming hilltops, of the spiritual?

—DR. FREDERICK F. SHANNON.

If thou sayest, Behold we knew not this; Doth not he that weigheth the hearts consider it? And he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? And shall not he render to every man according to his work? (Prov. 24:11-12.)

Instead of a Church Centennial

Sept. 21 occurred the one hundredth anniversary of the organization of the First Baptist Church of Indianapolis. Very naturally the church expected to have a celebration worthy of such an anniversary and nearly a year ago a centennial committee was appointed to arrange a program. When the program was outlined it was found that to celebrate in a manner worthy of the church it would cost a great deal of money.

The past year had been one of financial depression and the church's quota of the New World Movement fund had not been reached. So the question arose: Have we any right to spend thousands of dollars upon ourselves in a celebration that will last a week and then possibly end with only a fragrant memory that we tried to honor the men and women of the past?

The consensus of opinion was that the First Church of Indianapolis with its splendid history could not afford to pass by such an event without doing something big to honor the heroic, unselfish men and women who built their lives in the work of the church in the earlier years of its history, and, at the same time, endeavor to meet present conditions. So Sunday morning, Sept. 17, the pastor, Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, at the close of his sermon proposed a centennial observance that would last six months beginning with October and ending with Easter Sunday. He proposed a celebration consisting of service and sacrifice and suggested the following goals to be attained:

The Centennial Year

First, the church to be permeated with the spirit of evangelism and at least 100 souls to be won to Christ and baptized into the fellowship of the church by Easter Sunday.

Second, that the average attendance at the prayer meeting service be increased to 250.

Third, that 250 new members be added to the church roll.

Fourth, that the average attendance at the Bible school be raised to 750.

Fifth, that at least 500 of the membership be enrolled as titheers.

Sixth, that the average attendance at the B. Y. P. U. meeting be made 150.

Seventh, that the church raise $100,000 this year for the work of the organizations in the New World Movement and at least $30,000 for current expenses.

The program as outlined was unanimously and heartily adopted by the great congregation present and a committee of 100 is being formed to carry its proposals into effect. The program will take the place of a centennial.

The members of the board of the Woman's Baptist Society have laid extensive plans for Woman's Day at the State convention at Centralia, October 16-17. Among the speakers are Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, Mrs. George Coleman and Mrs. E. S. Osgood. The key thought for the day and year is "Our Goals—My Opportunity."

The Recognition of Missions by Our College and Seminary Curriculums

ONE of the encouraging features of the religious life of our American colleges, universities, and theological seminaries is the establishment in recent years of courses or entire departments on missions. It is not yet twenty years since the first university chair of missions in this country, the one at Yale filled so ably by Professor Harlan P. Beach, was founded. Since that time there has been a remarkable spread of the idea. Christian educators have seen that missions have an important part in our modern life and that they are worthy of formal recognition on our curriculums. They have also seen that the task of the foreign missionary is so vital and so distinctive that special preparation for it is necessary and that it has the right to recognition on the programs of our institutions of higher learning. Thus the Yale department has a separate and well-equipped building, the largest missions library in any university in the world, two men giving full time on the teaching staff, a librarian giving part time and an assistant librarian giving full time to the great collection of books and magazines. At Drew there is a separate school of missions, and there is also one at Hartford in connection with the seminary, the Kennedy School of Missions. Union Theological Seminary has two men giving full time and others giving part time. There is a chair at the school of theology of Boston University, another at Cambridge Episcopal Theological School, and at the University of Chicago a man has recently been added to the faculty to organize the department. In at least one of the great Bible training schools, the Moody Bible Institute, there is a separate chair of missions, and at the Y. M. C. A. college at Springfield one man is giving his time to that and related fields. With two exceptions our Baptist seminaries are not so well off as some of these others, neither in teaching staff nor in equipment, but in the great majority of them special courses on missions are offered. It is to be hoped that the time will soon come when funds will be made available to set aside in each of our seminaries at least one man to give his full time to this field, and to supply adequate library facilities.

These above chairs are all of them for the teaching either of professional or graduate students. In providing courses for undergraduates, Ohio Wesleyan led the way some years ago in appointing a professor of missions, and after some years of experience, has not only a member of the teaching staff giving full time to the department, but a very excellent library and ample funds for research. Northwestern University has an extremely able man who is building up a department of missions and comparative religion and after only two or three years of service on the campus he has succeeded to a remarkable degree in popularizing his subject. Mount Union College has had for some time a chair with a similar aim. When one remembers the importance of the subject with which these men have to deal and its growing significance in these days of increasing international consciousness one is thankful that so many of our colleges are making such excellent provision for it on their curriculums. Such courses can have great influence not only in preparing more adequately men and women for the work of the foreign missionary and in arousing an interest in the subject on the part of those who are relatively indifferent at the time they begin their undergraduate courses, but they can also have a large part in promoting an interest in world affairs and in helping to make more Christian the branches of scholarship that deal with international relations and so in leavening with the Christian gospel the contacts between countries and races. A number of our Baptist colleges already have curriculum courses on missions, and for these they are to be congratulated. Our colleges have not begun, however, to set aside men to give their full time to the task. This has often, perhaps usually, been more from a lack of funds than from a lack of vision, but it is to be hoped that as the years pass more colleges will introduce courses on missions and that some will establish chairs in the subject. Certainly if we as a denomination are to measure up to our privilege and duty in helping to carry the Gospel to the world, we must have in each of our institutions men whose charge it is to be a center of missionary interest, to provide a sound basis for it in carefully planned, interesting, and scholarly courses, and to help prepare laymen and missionaries to take an intelligent and active part in this great work of the church.

Chasing the Bugaboo of Special Days

ONE of our pastors has figured out that whereas there are but fifty-two Sundays in the year there are sixty-eight "special days" to be celebrated on Sunday. In addition to all the scripture-sanctioned and time-honored festivals of the church, which no one would avoid, there is a great list of days, the list changing from year to year—all of them in celebration of good causes—Peace Day, Red Cross Sunday, Near Easter Sunday, Boy's Week Sunday, and all the rest. Some day a genius will be born who will lead us out of the flood of all these worthy demands to a point of vantage where we may serve them, but even then our churches will still be facing what has proved to many of them a baffling problem—to present adequately the messages of the great Christian festivals.

There are at least four big days celebrated principally in our Sunday schools that are too full of meaning to be overlooked—Rally Day, Christmas Sunday, Easter and Children's Day. But who shall be responsible for the programs on these days? Sometimes a pastor is gifted in pageantry, dramatics, chorus work and mass display; but pastors have a way of changing their fields of labor. The programs of special days should be left to pastors only as a last resort.

How many times has the Sunday-school teachers' meeting been disturbed by an unrewarded search for some one to care for one of these special days? It means work—hard work. It requires originality. It is piled on top of other regular and unending duties. Who shall do it?

The General Board of Promotion is counting on these special days, specifically Children's Day, Rally Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, Educational Day and Easter Day as times when the call of the World Task shall be made clear and definite. Therefore every church that would make itself strong in the kingdom enterprise should put forth its best effort to make these days attractive and rewarding.

There are two general suggestions that come with the endorsement of many achieving churches that should spell success for many who hitherto have failed. The first suggestion is this: That in the organizing of the Sunday school there be appointed some one person, adapted for such work whose only duty shall be to provide for the programs of these special days. The task is big enough to engage the best thought and all the time of one of the ablest workers in the church. As soon as one event is over, let him commence his study of the next, secure suggestions, organize his helpers and plan his advertising. This person should be called an assistant superintendent of the school. He should be watching for talent every Sunday and developing it unceasingly toward his ends.

Where such a leader cannot be found there is one other recourse to be had. At the first meeting of the Sunday-school workers, following Children's Day, let a committee be chosen for Rally Day. Immediately after Rally Day let one be chosen for Christmas and so on through the year. Let there always be a committee at work although the leadership must change.

These six special days should be utilized definitely to promote the interests of the New World Movement in every church. They serve to give each church a time for the presentation of the various denominational interests. To this end they may be made informational and inspirational and may stimulate the making of extra gifts to the various boards and agencies.

Children's Day has been set as the day for the advancement of the work of the Publication Society. This noble agency of our churches has been the pioneer in the establishing and equipping of Sunday schools for three-quarters of a century. No man can number the children whose lives have been redeemed and sweetened by the output and the effect of the Publication Society. The history of the society, if one will study it, offers many dramatic settings for Children's Day programs. The special offering on Children's Day thus becomes a meaningful gift in the interest of the neglected childhood of our land.

Thanksgiving Day is a day of which we have made all too little in our programs. We are now asked to make our prayers and our offerings on that day specifically for the work of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board. There is nothing that could be more fitting. Most of the Christian joys we know we owe to these leaders of the past, many of whom are still living but superannuated, who were instrumental in the conversion of our parents and the erecting of our church buildings and the creating of the atmosphere wherein we find our Christ so readily.

Our Christmas gifts are to go, most appropriately, for the work of our Home Mission Society. In a nation like our own which is nominally Christian, our whole task may be stated in terms of home. Christmas is the home day. More people are in their own homes on Christmas Day than any other of the year. Hospitals are at low ebb, sanitariums are empty, resorts are closed. Homes are bright and filled with people and with joy. Our Home Mission Society is interested in building Christian homes in the homeland among people of all races who are seeking a larger life under our flag. Our Christmas gifts will go directly to this end.

Educational Day is new to many of us. The very observance of the day is thereby made the easier, for no plan is old and overused. We are to advertise our colleges, academies, institutes and seminaries. Democracy is doomed without education. Our own denomination will lag and fail without the leadership that education affords. There are some young folks in our churches who are undecided whether they shall seek a higher education or not. The observance of the day will help. The special gifts of the day were never more sorely needed than this year.

Easter is the day of universal praise. On it we can think of nothing less than the whole round world. Christ rose to be the Saviour of all mankind. Before us pass the races and the nations, in their search for God, honoring their idols, practicing their false sacrifices, misguiding their lives by their mistaken philosophies. Our Easter message and program and gifts are to be made in the interests of our Foreign Mission Societies.

From the headquarters of each state will be sent suggestions and supplies for each of these great days of opportunity. No church can show finer loyalty to the New World Movement than to plan at once to make use to the full of the meaning and significance of the Great Days of the Year.

Supply and Demand

SOME men seem perfectly happy under the old economy of supply and demand. If the price of coal goes up to hitherto unknown heights it is explained that this is due to the limited supply and the pressing demand. These terms are used as if they had the same sanctity and permanence as the Decalogue. It is becoming clearer every day that a law of supply and demand which enriches one man or group of men and starves a thousand is not a divine law. The questions which we have been in the habit of calling purely economic are becoming essentially moral questions. Considerations other than the law of supply and demand will be found essential to their real solution.

Then What?

AFTER the Centenary, after the New Era Movement after the $75,000,000 campaign of Southern Baptists, after the Triennial program of the Reformed Episcopal Church, after the New World Movement—then what?

It is a most interesting study to follow the several denominations as they attempt to shape an answer to this question. In Portland, Oregon a feature of the first week of the General Convention of the Episcopal church, was the presentation of the proposed program of the church for the next triennium. Briefly stated, this program involves a budget which provides for the established work of the several agencies of the denomination upon the present level with provision for a slight increase. The plan then calls for a series of "extra-budget items" more than 800 in number in a fixed order of priority. In the words of the Living Church "In place of lumping work, hopes, wishes and dreams together in a general total as was done three years ago, we are now told that substantially the first $4,000,000 of each year will be used to continue work now being done through the national administration of the church and its cooperating agencies, and whatever is raised beyond that will go to the 'priorities' in the order in which they have been arranged in the published program."

The total objective of the program is placed at six, seven and eight million dollars respectively for the three-year period. That any cause is included in this extra-budget list does not mean necessarily that its needs will be met. Provision is made whereby individuals or churches may designate amounts expressly for items in the list of "priorities." In other words the plan for the extension work of the Episcopal Church provides in the budget, first, for the needs of the enterprises carried on through the several agencies of the denomination. The first fruits of the gifts of the churches shall go to further this regularly established work. Second provision is made for wiping out the deficit and, third, a slight advance is provided for. What we in our terminology call "specifics" will be listed and kept before the people with the distinct understanding that these so-called "extra-budget" items take second place to items in the budget. Having cared for the needs of the regular work of the several societies, the specifics will be used to stimulate unusual gifts. Using again the language of the Living Church, "We have laid out a system of specific opportunities for expansion to be carried into the budget as rapidly as funds will permit, making a work basis instead of a money basis, and we have made real inroads into the accumulated deficit the remaining portion of which is divided into three parts and is placed in the budgets for each of the years of the coming triennium." Those familiar with the efforts of our own denomination will note the great similarity in the two plans. To talk "work" instead of "money" will be a decided gain. There is a difference in calling attention to needs requiring a hospital which will cost $50,000 and asking for $50,000 to build a hospital. We can well afford to make more of the work basis in our appeals to the churches.

"Wherefore is the Southern Baptist Boast?"

UNDER this title Editor Gwaltney of the Alabama Baptist speaks editorially of a tendency he has discerned in some of his brethren. The Alabama Baptist has shown a disposition to look facts in the face and its conclusions are uniformly fair. We have in the North some brethren who assume that certain sections of our country breed better Baptists than some other sections. In a state convention meeting in one of our central states the writer heard at least a half dozen new pastors who were being introduced say, "I come from where they raise real Baptists," or words to the same effect. We do have our problems. Some of them are peculiarly our own but in the main the problems of Baptists are common problems and can best be worked out in an atmosphere of mutual trust and forbearance. We thank the Alabama Baptist for its message, which we print in full:

"The writer of these lines is a Virginian by birth, an Alabamian by choice and a Southerner by blood, instinct, training and tradition.

"And he yields second place to none in loyalty to the Southern Baptist Convention and to the tenets of the Baptists in the Southern states. Selah!

"But when the two conventions of American Baptists—the Northern and the Southern—are mentioned in contrast, we would like to ask, on account of what is the Southern Baptist boast? That there is a wee air of superiority in favor of the Southern Convention is seen from the public utterances of numerous writers and speakers among Southern men.

"There is no ground for this from the standpoint of evangelism, since statistics show that last year in ratio to their number there was one baptism in the South to every twelve of our members, and one in the North to eleven of theirs. Boasting seems further precluded when the fact is Northern Baptists gave more per capita than the Southern did to all of our benevolent objects. To boast of a doctrinal superiority is always suggestive to some of a certain Pharisee who thanked God that he was not like other men, and who unfortunately was not as good as he had supposed.

"If our brethren in the North have their peculiar problems, may we not in becoming modesty allow them to settle their difficulties for themselves? A number of their strong men have respectfully hinted that they might be permitted to do this, and for our part we are willing to grant their request."

The Charm of Luke's Gospel

Luke's Gospel has been pronounced the most beautiful book ever written. It is a Gospel of worship, a Gospel of sympathy and compassion, a Gospel of universality.

By C. A. DANIEL

LUKE is called by Paul "the beloved physician" (Col. 4:14). He is the only one of the four Gospel writers who was not a Jew. Paul expressly excludes him from those of the circumcision (Col. 4:10-14). He was undoubtedly a native Greek, perhaps at first a proselyte to the Jewish faith. His Gospel was very carefully compiled from material, which he had collated with extreme painstaking service and the result was one of the most charming and attractive narratives of the life of Christ. From a purely literary point of view Luke's Gospel has been pronounced, even by Renan, to be the most beautiful book ever written. Listen to this man's testimony: "The Gospel of Luke is the most literary of all the Gospels. Everywhere there is revealed a spirit large and sweet, wise, temperate, sober, and reasonable in the irrational. Its exaggerations, its inconsistencies, its improbabilities are true to the very nature of parable, and constitute its charm. Matthew rounds a little the rough lines of Mark. Luke does better: he writes. He displays a genuine skill in composition. His book is a beautiful narrative, well contrived, at once Hebraic and Hellenic, uniting the emotion of the drama with the serenity of the idyl."

"A spirit of holy infancy, of joy, of fervor, the gospel feeling in its primitive freshness, diffuse all over the legend an incomparably sweet coloring."

The Best Writer of Greek

Luke is the best writer of Greek among the evangelists. He uses over 700 words which occur nowhere else in the New Testament. He was a layman with nothing ecclesiastic about him. There is a freedom of movement here not exhibited in any of the other Gospels. The fact of his being a physician is seen frequently in his use of words and style. His writings exhibit the modesty of true greatness, for he nowhere introduces his own name, or records an act performed or a word spoken by himself. He hides himself in the Acts under the pronouns "we" and "us." (Acts 16:10.) Paul mentions his name with great affection. (Col. 4:14.)

We have been reminded that Matthew's Gospel was the Gospel to the Hebrews. It is the Gospel of the kingdom, of the heart, Christ regnant over human affection. He was wont to look back to see the fulfillment of the prophetic longings of the soul; it might be called the Gospel of the past. Mark's is the Gospel of the will, of energy, of action, of triumph—the Gospel of the all-conquering Roman, or the Gospel of the present. Luke's Gospel is that of reason, full of presentiment of coming good, who sees the harvest of God's purposes in what Jesus "began both to do and to teach;" it may be styled the Gospel of the future. John soaring above all the limits of time forehints and anticipates the everlasting issues, his is the gospel of eternity or eternal life.

Dean Farrar calls Matthew the preacher, because he records the great discourses of Jesus; Mark "the chronicler," for he gives a plain, straightforward tale; Luke "the historian," for he shows the development of events, and John "the philosopher and divine," for he gives the spiritual meaning of Christ's life and teachings.

1. Luke's is a Gospel of worship. He gives prominence to praise and prayer and thanksgiving. There are five great songs recorded, which form some very exquisite poetry lofty in thought and deeply religious: 1. The song of the angel's salutation of the virgin Mary called Ave Maria (1:28-33). 2. The song of Mary called the Magnificat (1:46-55). 3. The song of Zachariah called the Benedictus (1:68-79). 4. The song of the angels called Glory in Excelsis (2:14). 5. The song of Simeon called Nunc Dimittis (2:29-32).

These glorious lyrics, in which the holiest of Israel have hymned the nativity of the Son of God have been given to us by the Gentile evangelist Luke.

Luke is careful to note the religious life of the people and of Christ. The spirituality of Christ is depicted by him for he tells us of the boy Jesus, who with his parents went up to the temple in Jerusalem to the religious feast and how he was afterward found among the doctors or most eminent Rabbis of his time "hearing them and asking them questions." To him we are indebted for that significant utterance of Jesus: "Wist ye not, that I must be about my Father's business?" Luke gives us many glimpses into the prayer life of Jesus. At least seven crises of prayer are alluded to by him:

The Crises of Prayer

1. "It came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized and praying, the heaven was opened." (Luke 3:21.)

2. After having cleansed a leper and manifested his power—"He withdrew himself into the wilderness and prayed." (5:16.)

3. Before the calling of the twelve disciples "He went out into the mountain to pray and continued all night in prayer to God."

4. While Jesus was praying, his inquiries as to what men were thinking of the Son of man were met with that noble confession of Peter. (9:18.)

5. Luke only tells us, that the Transfiguration occurred while Jesus was praying. (9:28-29.)

6. Luke only gives us that compassionate prayer of Jesus on the cross: "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do," (23:34) and

7. he only records the utterance of prayer, which came from Jesus' lips as the last breath "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (23:46).

We note also from the narrative of Luke several discourses on prayer—besides the so-called "Lord's prayer," which Matthew also gives. Luke tells us of the Friend at midnight (11:1-13), of the parable of unceasing prayer typified by the widow before an unjust judge (18:1-8), of the Pharisee and publican, who went up into the Temple to pray (18:9-14).

As gratitude is a part of worship, we include here seven allusions by

Gracious Service

"And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?"

SERVICE may be flung to people as coins are flung to beggars. Moses was doing a gracious deed, but he was not doing it graciously. A good deal of intended usefulness is spoiled by this flunkeyism of benevolence.—Harry Emerson Fosdick.

Luke only, to the glorifying of God:

1. Of the shepherds returning and glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen . . ." (2:20).

2. Of the healed sick man of the palsy, who arose—"departed to his house glorifying God" (5:25).

3. Of the people, who were filled with fear and glorified God as Jesus raised the young man from the dead at Nain (7:16).

4. Of the woman, whom Christ had healed of eighteen years of infirmity, who glorified God (13:13).

5. One of the ten lepers, who had been healed returned, gave thanks and glorified God (17:15).

6. Bartimeus upon receiving his sight followed Jesus glorifying God (18:43).

7. The centurion under the cross is overwhelmed by the humility, patience and majesty of the suffering Christ and glorifies God, saying: "Certainly this was a righteous man."

2. Luke's is the Gospel of sympathy and compassion. The keynote of Luke's Gospel is found (19:10) in Christ's own words: "For the Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost." How vividly does Luke depict the humanity of Jesus, his tender mercy, his sympathy, his compassion and love! Jesus was in touch with humanity at every point and with Deity at all points. This is the Gospel of compassion and tenderness. This is seen and felt when Jesus meets the mourning widow, whose only son had died; it is deeply felt, when he looks upon the woman bent and stooped by eighteen years of infirmity. "Ought not this woman being a daughter of Abraham to be loosed from her infirmity on the Sabbath?" It is present, when Jesus perceived that power had gone forth from him to heal the poor woman, who had touched the hem of his garment; or when Jairus is comforted by the words of Jesus: "Fear not, only believe and she shall be made whole." This compassion and love, which regards and saves the despised Samaritan, the outcast namely: the harlot, the publican, the prodigal, the dying robber is characteristic of Luke. It is to Luke, that we turn for illustrations of love and tenderness to all. He is the poor man's friend.

3. It is also a Gospel of contrasts. It is significant to note the doubting Zachariah and the trusting Mary; the churlish Simon and the loving sinful woman; the bustling Martha and the quiet adoring Mary, the proud Pharisee and the humble publican; the grateful Samaritan and the unthankful nine, the selfish rich man and the poor man Lazarus; the penitent and the impenitent robber; the obstinate, stubborn elder brother and his younger brother steeped in sin and shame; the beatitudes for the poor and the woes for the rich; the good Samaritan and the pious, self-possessed Levite and priest; the tears and the hosannas. These incidents give a peculiar charm to Luke's Gospel.

4. It is the Gospel of Universality. In Luke towards every age, towards either sex he is considerate and tolerant, for from his Gospel we find the esteem for infancy and childhood and the ennoblement and transformation of womanhood enhanced. Christ is the Saviour of all. "Towards all nations and professions, towards men of every opinion and every shade of character our blessed Lord appears in Luke's Gospel as the Christus Consulator, the Good Physician of bodies and souls; the Gossellor of the poor, the Brother who loves all the brethren in the great family of man, the unwearied healer and ennobler of the sick and suffering humanity, the "Desire of all Nations," "the Saviour of the world," "who went about doing good." (Acts 10, 38.) Such are some of the characteristics of that most beautiful of books: The Gospel according to Luke. Chicago, Ill.

The Silent God

By WILLIAM M. BAKER

O'ER all the world the church spire rocks,
As swing the bells and strike the clocks
To peal the passing of the year!
On God's great clock tower in the skies,
Profoundest midnight silence lies;
No clangor from its bells arise;
No faintest sound we hear.

Our coarse contrivances alike
Mark time with noisy tick and strife,
Loud peal or solemn toll.
But noiseless on its axis turns
The earth. The sun how silent burns
Through heaven! A silent God, who learns
His lessons to the soul.

No cry rings, therefore, from His lips,
When time is marked by sun's eclipse
On Heaven's illumined dial plate!
No sounds the seasons make as they Succeed each other. None as day
Falls full on earth. Nor soars its spray
When night's dark deluge doth abate.

O still, small voice! Thy whisper wakes
More surely than though thunder breaks
To tell the year has fled!
By Thee, from death aroused, I cry,
Give now my after life, that I
May serve Thee now as when, on high,
Unmarked the years shall live and die,
And time, with death, be dead.

Missionary Education

By WILLIAM A. HILL, Secretary of Missionary Education

MISSIONS furnishes the moral equivalent for war." To take the world for Jesus Christ means an organized effort to bear the Christian message to the ends of the earth. The missionary motive is inherent and dominant within the New Testament which cannot otherwise be rightly understood. The New Testament is never itself when it is not missionary.

Missionary education holds a peculiar relationship to our denominational work. It is expected to do three things: to conserve from the past the materials and methods which have proved of value; to provide such materials as may suit the denominational program needs of the hour; and it is expected to see far enough into the future to project a program which will be of value to the oncoming generation. By its very nature it must continue. Whatever changes may occur in denominational procedure, whatever new agencies are constituted and old ones annulled, missionary education must continue if the missionary enterprise continues.

Through the long and splendid history of our missionary societies, much fine educational work has been done. For periods the individual societies have promoted their own missionary education. For other periods, cooperative efforts have been made for a joint promotion of educational method and materials. When we consider that by far the largest amount of money requested and given by our people is for missionary objects, it is indeed strange that so little comparatively has been spent in missionary education or cultivation. It is an anomalous situation difficult either to understand or to justify. It would seem to be a logical process that if we promote a world program of great financial objectives, we should also support a large educational program somewhat commensurate with those objectives. As a denomination we have shown a tendency to place our missionary education upon a promotional basis; in short, to suit our missionary education to the needs of the hour. We are convinced that on the part of churches and individuals, their gifts to our missionary enterprises are commensurate with their programs of missionary education.

An illustration may be in point to indicate our past procedure as a denomination in this important matter. In the earlier days of our country's expansion, when railroads, towns and cities had to be built, with growing industries and multiplying business enterprises, our fathers turned to the virgin forests which provided unlimited supplies of timber. The story of that onslaught is a sad one, for in cutting down trees to get resources for immediate needs, they neglected to plant new forests, until reforestation projects are now urgently held before our people as vital to our nation's physical existence. Present-day criticism of those days is severe because of the neglect of our fathers.

We have shown a tendency to promote such plans as would bring immediate results, using high pressure agencies to meet immediate situations. While this was necessary, yet we did not sufficiently care for our missionary reforestation. The most important thing after all was to equip our youth for the discharge of these same recurring and enlarging obligations. "Give to our boys and girls a friendly acquaintance with the peoples of the world, whom they will recognize as God's great family and it will prove in later years a foundation for the great superstructure of world peace and Christian missions."

The department of missionary education, reorganized three years ago, is seeking the missionary cultivation of the churches according to the following definition of its task:

1. The general cultivation of the sense of the importance of missionary education.
2. The personal cultivation, through correspondence with individuals and churches, of the ideals and aims of missionary education.
3. Initiation and pursuit of cooperative efforts to stimulate attention to missionary education in other societies.
4. To correlate existing plans into an effective unity of program.
5. To produce and promote such materials as present programs and activities require—a near objective.
6. To lay foundations for a larger acquaintance with the materials of missionary education for the oncoming generation—a far objective.
7. To develop and cultivate the leadership necessary to carry out these objectives.

What Constitutes A Missionary Church?

A missionary conference at Grand Island, Nebr., conducted by Secy. W. A. Hill, gave the following answers:

1. It should have a program of missionary education.
2. It should have a missionary committee or department.
3. It should be interested in the entire kingdom.
4. It should have a missionary pastor.
5. It should practice the habit of praying for missionaries.
6. It should encourage visits of missionaries.
7. It should have a missionary budget.
8. It should have missionary education in the Sunday school.
9. It should have missionary education in the young people's society.
10. It should have missionary education for boys and girls.
11. It should have study classes for all church departments.
12. It should have missionary reading courses for all grades.
13. It should have a missionary library.
14. It should have a missionary magazine table.
15. It should have missionary programs.
16. It should have a Missions magazine club.
17. It should use missionary dramatics.
18. It should give a stereopticon missionary lecture.
19. It should have a missionary room.
20. It should send delegates to summer conferences or assemblies.
21. It should hold life service meetings.

It is very important that we shall see to it that our people are made so sympathetic with the New World Movement aims and objectives that they will wish to give to the utmost, that His cause may not suffer. Every educational and promotional device should be employed to achieve these results. In the doing of this, shall we not also have in mind the task which our denomination shall face at the expiration of the New World Movement period? Must we not now set ourselves to the task of making a new denominational constituency? The boys and girls, young men and women, rightly interested and directed now, will not fail to support our great missionary enterprises tomorrow.

Acting upon the realization that missionary education must be wrought into the life of the denomination more securely and recognizing the twofold task of serving the present needs and building for the future, the department, after careful study of its course, has built its program accordingly. Missionary facts must be learned and absorbed by the same method employed in the acquisition of any other facts—they must be studied.

The success of other denominations operating great missionary enterprises, strengthens our conviction that the reading and study of missionary literature is the surest and safest route to take to reach our desired haven. We do not minimize the value of and necessity for the inspirational message and the machinery for financial promotion. We do wish to emphasize the necessity for a painstaking process of missionary cultivation and education, which will make people not only willing but anxious to discharge their full stewardship. It is unfortunate that among Baptists we seem ever to need two campaigns, one to make men Christian, and after that, another to make them missionary.

The materials and methods of missionary education are elsewhere dealt with in this issue. We would like to call attention to the fact that the program and the materials have been built from the point of view of the needs of the local church. The program is a correlated one and calls upon us for a new acquaintance with our splendid, almost inexhaustible missionary literature. It emphasizes the need of missionary education in the Sunday school and has provided excellent materials. It sets this forth in the national missionary reading courses and model missionary libraries. It asks us to build mission study classes and church schools of missions in the local church. It suggests teacher training institutes for the training of teachers to teach study classes, believing that we need a trained leadership more than we need anything else. Successful models are available. It outlines a program of missionary education for the young people's societies, both B. Y. P. U., and Christian Endeavor. It has constructed this correlated program about the current study class themes, the "American Negro" and "India." It has issued special materials for all these programs and has edited supplementary books as an aid to the presentation of these great themes to Baptist people.

Successful Church Schools of Missions-1921-22

Methods That Stimulated Interest

Dr. J. N. Lackey, pastor of the South Baptist Church, Hartford, Conn., also president of the Connecticut Convention, has recently closed a most successful mission study campaign of six weeks. The parish was divided into eight districts, and eight group meetings were held in which intercession was emphasized, and the necessity was impressed of giving a definite period of time to intensive study along the three lines of stewardship, missions and evangelism.

After considerable publicity, the first classes were held on Jan. 27. The church met for supper at 6:15 p. m., and went into the various classes at seven o'clock. The class in "Stewardship and Missions" was conducted by Rev. H. B. Sloat, who used his own syllabus based on "Stewardship and Missions" by Cook, "The New Christian" by Cushman, and "The Acid Test," by McConaughy. The class began with fifty-five present and increased each week, closing with an attendance of 120. Two classes in mission study followed. Mrs. H. B. Sloat conducting the women's class and Dr. Lackey the class for men.

In the women's class, Mrs. Sloat used the Bible-school classes of girls, one class each night, to prepare a surprise box which was opened at the close of the lesson. This greatly stimulated interest and increased the attendance. She also dramatized certain parts of the book, using the girls in the Bible school, dressed in the costumes for that purpose. She even got the choir women interested in the study by having the soloists take part in the program, and Mr. Sloat gave a stereopticon lecture. She began with eighty-two and with a continual increase, closed the sixth and last night with 158.

Dr. Lackey adopted other means. He brought in outside talent by way of soloists and missionary speakers from the Kennedy School of Missions, using natives from the Philippines and India. He began with a class of twenty-nine, which increased each week, until eighty-four were present on the last night.

Following the mission study classes the men and women merged once more for the study of evangelism. The attendance of this class was large, although some left because of the hour. The total number of women participating was 580, of men 290. There was a little wholesome rivalry between the men and women which greatly stimulated interest in the program. The men challenged the women to secure twice as many women for the study as the men could secure; and the women made good on the challenge.

The interest was so great that the people asked that the program be continued indefinitely, but after careful consideration, it was decided to close the campaign at "high tide," and as a means of continuing the interest of as many as possible the pastor will continue his talks on evangelism, taking for his topic, "How Jesus Trained His Disciples."

Results That Speak

The First Baptist Church of Redlands, Cal., has held such a school for four seasons. The first and second sessions used the regular study text-book, while the third used "The Survey." The first school had five classes; the men averaging

The Church School of Missions

What Is It?

The church school of missions is the new idea of great promise in mission study. It is the whole church membership organized into graded classes, studying simultaneously for a period of from six to ten weeks, the whole world field.

It is not a theory. It is a clearly conceived and successfully operated plan of missionary education which seeks to include the entire church in its classes. It has passed beyond the experimental stage, and is being commended on every hand.

It has been tried by many churches large and small, city, suburban and rural, in our own and other denominations throughout the United States, and all are enthusiastic about it.

It is adaptable to local conditions. It works, as the following results show.

thirty-five, women forty-four, senior B. Y. P. U., forty-five, high-school B. Y. P. U., twenty-three, junior twenty-three. In the second school there were eight classes, and the total attendance each week ran 268, 275, 263, 276, 287, 294. The third session of five weeks with seven classes averaged 196. Results noted were: Reading of missionary literature was increased; the men organized for mission study; a desire to do as well as study Americanization brought a group of Japanese children into the Bible school. The fourth session closed recently. The largest attendance was 321, and the lowest 252. The allotment of this church for the New World Movement was $67,250. The church subscribed $68,185, added 187 members during the year, and reports at present a total membership of 663.

A Winter's Night College

The First Baptist Church of Indianapolis conducted a church school of missions which it advertised as "A Winter's Night College," and had seven classes studying the "Baptist Survey" for nine weeks, with the following record of attendance: Enrollment: Men seventy-nine, women one hundred and forty-two, senior girls twenty-seven, senior boys twenty-five, junior girls, forty, junior boys, thirty-two, primary, forty-eight, a total of 393, with average attendance of 266. Classes were attended by official boards. The enterprise was directed by the young men of the church. The New World Movement allotment was $290,000, amount subscribed $301,782.

Effect Upon Prayer Meetings

The First Baptist Church, Lynn, Mass., had a most successful school, using "The Survey" as their basis of study. They met at 5:30 when a cafeteria supper was served. At 6:30 they went into their classes which were followed by the prayer service. The testimony of the pastor was that they had never had such prayer meetings as following these sessions studying the needs of the field. This church more than made its quota in the New World Movement.

Leads to Life Service

First Baptist Church of San Bernardino, Calif., held three sessions of school of missions, meeting Sunday evenings at 6:30, the attendance ranging from 100 to 164, with a large proportion young people. The last evening each class put on a special demonstration of the work covered in the course and four young men made a confession of Christ and united with the church the following week. Five young people offered themselves for Christian life service and led in very generous pledges of money toward the New World Movement.

This school also has one worth while missionary play each winter, and is now planning to give "The Heroine of Ava" as appropriate to follow the study of "The Bible and Missions."

Getting the Missionary Task Before the People

The First Church of Everett, Wash. held its third school of missions during October and November. The school ran for seven weeks with an average attendance of 183. There were eight classes in all, one for men, one for women, one for young people of senior age, one for those of intermediate age, two for juniors, and one for children of primary age. One class for juniors met at eleven o'clock, all the others at 6:15 in the evening. After a study period of forty-five minutes the evening classes assembled for a closing period of fifteen minutes. This was the largest and best school the church has had, and we are still more firmly convinced that the church school of missions is by far the most effective method of getting the missionary task and achievements of the church before the people.

Did Not Want to Close

A successful school of missions at Seattle, Wash., closed early in February with a feeling on the part of many that they would like to go on for another six weeks. The total attendance was 129—adult, seventy; senior young people, thirty-nine; junior sixteen; intermediate, four.

The classes met at 6:15. The B. Y. P. U. which had not been functioning as well as usual of late, has taken on new life and is planning more aggressive work. They hesitated about having the school of missions at that hour, but are unanimous in declaring it a great success, and were much interested in the study.

The text books are all fine books. There are seventy-four of the contest books in the missionary library of the church, and they are being used.

Men Interested In Missions

The Baptist Church of Wilkesburg, Pa., celebrated the conclusion of a most successful school of missions with a missionary banquet on Wednesday evening, March 1. Dr. Harvey Bartle served as toastmaster and six men and six women represented their respective classes with informal responses. Representatives of the junior class assisted in serving the guests.

The school was held on Wednesday nights, the classes meeting for three-quarters of an hour before prayer meeting in their respective groups and then uniting for the devotional service. The average attendance was eighty-five and the prayer meeting was splendidly reinforced.

Miss Luella Adams, superintendent of the Rankin Mission, conducted the course for boys and girls, using as a basis the book, "A Noble Army." Mrs. Florence L. Carr, the pastor's wife, led the women's class, basing the lessons on the textbook, "The Kingdom and the Nations." The resources of the Pittsburgh Carnegie Library were drawn upon for reference books and mounted pictures of the various countries. Interesting curios were also secured from the Board of Promotion. About twenty men joined the pastor in the study of "From Survey to Service," and became deeply interested in the various aspects of the home mission task.

The Wilksburg Church is contributing $10,000 annually to the New World Movement. The denominational quota of members for the Stewardship League has been nearly reached—one-fifth of the membership.

First Baptist Church, Creston, Iowa

There were five classes—for men, women, young women, older boys and girls, and Crusaders, between eight and twelve. Classes were held on Sunday evenings at 6:30 o'clock, the hour before evening service. The B. Y. P. U. voted to give up its regular meetings and form a class. Class leaders were trained in a course of study conducted by the pastor. The missionary committee of the church was in charge.

The classes used maps, pictures cut from Missions, posters, mottoes, bulletins. These formed an exhibit.

Average attendance for course was 102. Smallest attendance eighty-seven, largest one hundred and twenty five. A general closing assembly was held, where class reports were made.

Children In the Church School of Missions

Rev. J. Hamilton Woodsum, of Creston, Iowa, writes the following concerning the results of their church school of missions held earlier in the year:

"Our church is now in the midst of a quiet revival. Twenty have been recently baptized and five more will probably be baptized next Sunday. Five others have come into the church by experience. Still others are interested and we look for them to confess the Saviour soon.

"The revival interest that now prevails has been credited by some directly to the influence of our church school of missions. It would be more correct to say that our present interest is due to the fact that early last fall our church adopted a program for the year adapted from the one recommended by the Northern Baptist Convention. Since the new year, we have been strenuously carrying forward our plans that included the church school of missions, the stewardship campaign in February, a pastoral evangelistic campaign beginning March 1, and functioning largely through the B. Y. P. U. and Sunday school, and also the denominational continuation campaign.

"As a direct result of the church school of missions, we have two organizations—a junior B. Y. P. U. and a junior W. W.

G. I have conducted a Saturday afternoon children's class, preparatory to baptism and church membership, and I have been greatly interested by the missionary character of the prayers that the children have offered."

A Church-Elected Cabinet Carries Out the Venture

The First Baptist Church of Jacksonville, Illinois, makes report of its first school of missions. At the suggestion of the pastor, Rev. A. P. Howells, the church elected a cabinet for the carrying out of this venture, with one representative from each of the church organizations. The school opened on the first Sunday night of the year and continued for six successive Sunday evenings. Each night there were two sessions, consisting of the study hour from 6:30 to 7:30, and the lecture period, which was the hour immediately following. Four classes were held nightly. The adult class, taught by Mrs. C. O. Swift, completed the mission book, "Why and How of Foreign Missions." Miss Caroline Abbott taught the book, "World Friendship, Inc.," to the World Wide Guild. "Making Life Count" was the text book of the intermediates, with Miss Carrie Spires as instructor. In the senior B. Y. P. U. session the pastor taught the interesting mission volume entitled, "Playing Square with Tomorrow." All classes met for an opening exercise of fifteen minutes in the lecture room.

During the lecture period, which was the time of the regular evening service, the following novel missionary features were introduced: A stereopticon service entitled, "Where Did My New World Movement Money Go?" a song service called, "A Song Story of a City Mission"; a missionary play, "Aunt Polly Joins the Mission Circle," by the Women's Missionary Society; another missionary play, "An Afternoon in a Chinese Hospital," by the World Wide Guild; a World Wide Guild stereopticon service, one slide of which was a flashlight picture of the local W. G. composed of thirty-eight Jacksonville girls; and the closing event which was "A Missionary Mock Trial," given by the Baptist Young People's Union. Miss Elizabeth Long, the school secretary, reports that the attendance at the study classes reached 454, while the number of persons attending the lecture period was tabulated at 891, making a total attendance for the six weeks school of missions of 1,375. The results that are to be seen are a new interest in mission study, dedication of young people for life service, enlistment of old and young in tithing, a broader view of world needs, and a spirit of prayer for the coming of the kingdom.

First Baptist-Peddie Memorial Church, Newark, N. J.

Feb. 16-March 23, 1922

Purpose: To enroll a large number of our church and community for an intensive study of missions.

The school will meet six consecutive Thursday evenings. Supper will be served for members of the classes.

Supper 6:15 to 6:45

Study Period 7:00 to 7:45

Prayer Meeting 8:00 to 9:00

At each prayer meeting of this period there will be short talks by the pastor on Baptist history and principles. The Study Books to be used are as follows:

Women: "The Kingdom and the Nations," North. Mrs. W. H. Farmer, member of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention, teacher.

Young women: "Playing Square with Tomorrow," Eastman. Mrs. P. A. Beck, Eastern N. Y. director of the W. W. G. teacher.

Men and young men: "The Bible and Missions," Montgomery. Deacon E. A. Sherwood, teacher.

Results: Average attendance for six nights: Men, thirty-one; women, fifty-four; young women, fifty-five. Out of this school has grown a men's missionary society with charter membership of thirty-two. This society is meeting monthly for the study of missionary books. It has studied "The Bible and Missions" by Montgomery, and "The Call of the World" by Doughty. The class is conducted by Deacon E. A. Sherwood. The organization is to be permanent.

Peddie Memorial is planning two new church schools of missions for 1922-23—one in October, using the home mission study books, and one in the later half year, using the foreign study books.

A Church School of Missions on Sunday Evening

From Port Allegany, Pa., Pastor W. A. Billings writes: "Our first attempt at a church school of missions has been a great success. Ours is a church of 207 members all told. We had an enrolment of seventy-three, average attendance of sixty-six. We met for eight weeks on Sunday nights at 6:30 sharp. The boys and girls studied 'Stay at Home Journeys' and engaged in handwork to illustrate. The young people studied 'Playing Square with Tomorrow.' They wish for another class. The men and women studied 'From Survey to Service,' and the interest was well sustained to the end. We seemed to have no trouble to get all to buy the study books and we did not spend a cent for advertising the school. The school also helped the evening congregation, for the greater part stayed. For the next session we shall take up the foreign studies in all three departments, and manage the school on about the same lines. What our church has done, it seems to me could be done by any church if the whole plan could be understood by the people and they were made to think it worth while."

First Baptist Church, Bradford, Pa.

Rev. Frederick R. McArthur, reports: "Our school of missions came to a close last evening. The total enrolment was 114, with an average attendance of eighty for the six nights. The largest attendance was ninety-nine and the smallest, sixty-eight. We maintained ten classes throughout the school and had three general sessions in the church auditorium following the class hour. At one of these sessions I gave the stereopticon lecture, 'The Golden Jubilee.' At another Dr. William G. Russell gave an address on the New World Movement, and at the third Rev. C. P. Collet, of Bengal-Orissa, spoke on India. The attendance at these general meetings was approximately 100 each night."

The Church in Europe

As seen in the summer of 1922 by one of a group of college students traveling under the care of the European Student Relief Department of the foreign work of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A.

By L. H. MAYES

THE Passion Play was drawing towards its close. Those wonderful people of that little Bavarian town of Oberammergau were trying in their charming way to reveal to us the soul of Christ and how his heart went out to the people of his day. The scene opened with Christ and his disciples walking among the rocks above the city of Jerusalem which lay stretched far below them. Then Christ opened his lips and spoke those sorrowful words as recorded in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" And if we only knew, I believe that we might well see Christ looking down from the heavenly mountains and weeping over Europe today and saying, "O, Europe, Europe, thou that killest thine own sons and hast starved thine own fathers and mothers, how often would I have gathered all thy nations under the fold of my understanding, but ye would not!" We people of today delight in speaking of the grave problems of Europe and saying that we want to see them "solved." Our economists want the economic problems of Europe to be solved; our statesmen do well to hope for an early solution of the political problems of Europe; our sociologists eagerly look for the day when racial hatreds will die out between these countries. That is well, but Europe today has a larger problem facing her than these economic and political and sociological problems, and that is her spiritual problem. Europe is numb from the war; she will tell you so. Her people are dazed and do not know what way to turn. Mistrust, hate, envy, nationalism are found on all sides. These are the real problems of Europe and there is not an economist, or a sociologist, or a statesman, as such, who is big enough or powerful enough to lift Europe out of its present state.

We were a group of forty college students from every part of the United States, spending the entire vacation of this past summer in Europe and especially among the Central European countries. Our travels took us through Holland, Germany, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria, Hungary, Switzerland, France and England. Traveling under the care of the European Student Relief Department of the foreign work of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., we were given the most cordial welcome in all of the countries visited. The governments were especially anxious that we should get the opportunity to see the true conditions and for this reason we had the rare privilege of meeting such men as Chancellor Wirth in Berlin, as well as Simon, their former Minister of Foreign Affairs; Chancellor Seipel in Vienna; Count Apponyi and Regent Horthy of Hungary; as well as the American ambassadors, ministers of education and cabinet members of the various countries. Out of these exceedingly rich experiences we were able to get some first hand impressions as to the religious conditions of the people and what relations these bore to the general conditions of the countries.

One of the striking impressions which one receives in going to Europe today is the old culture to be found among these people whom we have been prone to call "bunkies," "polocks" or some other such epithet. The churches themselves are one of the finest examples of this old culture. We visited Westminster Abbey, and St. Paul's in London. Nor did we overlook Spurgeon's Tabernacle, where Dr. Jowett was preaching that Sunday morning. At Cologne we saw the marvelous old cathedral, towering far up toward the heavens. In Vienna we visited St. Stephen's Cathedral with its beautiful gargoyles and the Empress' Eagle built into the roof. In Warsaw we saw the churches surrounded with so many beggars. We visited Huss' chapel in Prague and Calvin's and Knox' old churches in Geneva. Everywhere we were told of the historic or artistic importance of the structures. But it was seldom that we saw many people worshipping and never did we see a large work carried on for young people in these churches on the continent.

Somehow the people have allowed their religious life and every-day life to get into separate compartments. In Haarlem, Holland, those cultured Dutch students carefully arranged a special organ recital for us but they had no religious service. When asked as to the condition of their church they said that it had little grip on the heart and soul of the people as it should. In Vienna an economic professor in the university was speaking of the terrible straits in which Austria finds herself. We asked him if the people realized that in their religion they should be able to solve a great many of their problems. Again we received the time-worn reply, that the people do not realize that there is any connection between their religion and the economic and political problems. What little connection there has been is the unfortunate one of having the working man leave the church because it takes sides with the capitalist.

Renaissance In the Church

The renaissance movement or the breaking away from the Roman Catholic Church is one of the most significant movements going on in Europe today. It is also encouraging to notice that these movements are strongest in those countries which are progressing most and taking off the cloaks of Nationalism to put on the new garb of World Fellowship.

In Czecho-Slovakia is possibly found the best example of this breaking away from the old faith of the fathers. There is springing up a new state Catholic church which will be entirely separate from the Roman Catholic church, and will be much more democratic. The Baptists of Czecho-Slovakia are also reaping a rich harvest during this period. The ranks of the Baptist church there have increased about 300 per cent during the past three years.

American Student Party at "Belvidere" Queen Anne's old Summer Home in Prague, Czecho-Slovakia. This is now owned by Masaryk, President of Czecho-Slovakia, and it was here that he received the party at tea.

One of the most impressive sights that we saw in Europe was the baptismal and communion service in the Prague Baptist Church that Sunday afternoon. Dr. Franklin, of our foreign board, Dr. Carter Helm Jones, Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, were all there and addressed the fine people in that church where Mr. Novotny built up the work and which Mr. Tolar is carrying on. There were three sermons besides the ordinances, so the service lasted three and three-quarters hours. Those Bohemian people were hungry for the Word and never thought for one minute of getting tired. Their membership is about 800 and is being added to daily. It was very typical of the new movement in Czecho-Slovakia that the forty who were baptised were adults and most had been Roman Catholics.

America's Attitude

What is to be the attitude of the churches of America toward this marvelous revival which is sweeping over Europe? Already in Russia the Methodists and Southern Baptists are laying deep the foundations for their work. And the Methodists and Baptists are working hard in Czecho-Slovakia. There seems to be no doubt that the Protestant churches of Europe need that stimulus which can come only from the churches of America. There is some criticism of the fact that too much denominationalism is creeping into the work there. These critics say that we should work through the old churches. But to many of us this seems useless for the real need seems to be a complete new foundation upon which to build their faith rather than a remodeling of the old.

Religious Solution Necessary

Every well-read American knows something at least of the present problems of Central Europe. The mark and crown have fallen below the lowest point we could conceive. England has her terrible unemployment question; France fears her financial problem and Germany on her border; Germany in turn hates France with the bitterest hatred; Poland hates Russia with all her heart; England is getting "fed-up" on France as she says; Austria and Hungary are bitter because they have been deprived of so much of their old territory; Czecho-Slovakia is trying in a noble way to carry on amidst all of this strife.

Economists and statesmen are admitting that they by themselves cannot solve these problems. The church and the Christian people of America are the only forces today which can give these people the incentive and spirit in which to carry on. One of the most heart-rending phases of the summer's experience was to be addressed by such men as Stephane in Prague, or Count Apponyi, that grand old man of Hungary, who would each present the need of his country and then would end with a stirring appeal for aid from America. Above all, they ask for the spiritual force which America can give and which alone seems able to wipe out the awful hates between these peoples.

Frank A. Vanderlip, that great international banker, and so well known as the former president of the National City Bank of New York City addressed us a few hours before we left Switzerland. After speaking at length about the fall of the mark and the condition of Germany and Austria and Hungary as well as France and England he made this most significant statement, "Although I am an economist I have come to believe that the fundamental trouble of Europe is underneath the financial, economic and political. It is a spiritual one, a lack of brotherhood." There is nothing that could challenge us Christians of America more than this. Great powers have been placed in our hands and we must not fail Him.

If I Were Pastor

An address by a layman at a meeting celebrating an anniversary of the pastor's service

By D. H. OTIS

A PASTOR who has the necessary training and is endowed with the knack of leadership is dependent for his success upon the hearty and intelligent cooperation of all the membership of the church.

If I were pastor and properly qualified for the job there are a number of things that I would expect from the church. Among them are the following:

I should expect a loyal church membership. No church has the right to call a pastor unless it expects to stand back of him and cooperate with him in advancing the interests of the church. I should expect this loyal support to continue as long as I remained pastor.

I should expect a business-like church, one that prepares a budget large enough to meet the reasonable requirements of the church and which would be in proportion to the ability of the church to raise. I should expect the entire budget to be raised before any expenditures are made. I should expect those in charge of the financial affairs of the church to see every new member as soon as received, acquaint them with the financial problems of the church and give them sufficient facts to enable them to judge what would be their fair contribution to the expenses of the church and its benevolent obligations.

As pastor, I should expect a church with a membership willing and anxious to work and I should not be entirely satisfied until every member was not only contributing to the financial support but was also giving time and energy to the spiritual development and growth of the church. Two years ago the First Baptist Church of Madison prepared a time budget. The officers of the different departments were asked to indicate the number of workers needed to have the departments run at 100 per cent efficiency. The church has a membership of 600. The result showed jobs for 556 persons, averaging a little over two hours per week. This is equivalent to 148 days per week or 6,852 days per year of eight hours each. What a power for good would be such a corps of workers under proper organization and intelligent leadership, and the average time per person would be only about two hours per week! Is this more than a pastor should reasonably expect?

I should expect a spiritually-minded church. I should expect the members to give prayerful consideration to the development of the spiritual life of the church and the community. I should not give undue concern to their pious professions on Sundays but I should be vitally concerned in the manner in which they practiced Christianity during the week. I should expect them to stand unflinchingly for the development and recognition of men and women of character both in and out of the church.

No pastor can meet with complete success without a substantial group of alert, enthusiastic, and spiritually minded young people. It is hard to change the habits and the ways of thinking of old people but there is no way of measuring the good that will come from enlisting the active support of the young people. They are the source of great power in any church. The young people should realize that they are an indispensable and important factor in the success of any pastor. This is particularly true in a college or university town. The bulk of the members of the church join the church as young people. Young people are the most effective instruments in reaching young people of the same age. It is hard to overestimate the importance of the work of the young people in measuring the success of any pastor.

If I were pastor I should want a church imbued with the spirit, applying religion to the problems of life. A pastor who preaches as he should will put a large amount of energy into the preparations of his sermons. He does this not to entertain but to bring home a message from God's truth that we can apply to our own lives. It is not enough to tell the pastor that he preached a good sermon. We should be able to show him how we applied that sermon to our own lives and how we used the message to help better our fellowmen and our community. "Faith without works is dead." As a pastor I should want a church membership who would think for themselves. I would not ask them always to agree with me but I should want them to weigh the message and be frank and honest in their disagreements. Whenever they are convinced of a right course to pursue then I should want action, in the application of the truth to the problems of life.

In viewing this subject as a layman it seems to me that it would be the height of a pastor's ambition to have always a loyal church, a church whose business is conducted on business principles, a working church, a spiritually-minded church, a church with active and spiritually-minded young people, and a church whose membership is imbued with the spirit of applying religion to the problems of life. It would seem like approaching heaven itself, and yet it is nothing more than any church ought to be.

Correlated Program of Missionary Education

All of the above materials are being brought into a "Correlated Program of Missionary Education for the Local Church," which is available on request.

Dramatic Sketches of Mission Fields

The department of missionary education announces a series of thirteen pamphlets under the title: "Dramatic Sketches of Mission Fields." These have been written by Miss Helen Wilcox, and are intended to help meet the growing demand for dramatic expression in missionary education. No. 1 of the series is an introduction, which deals with the whole subject of dramatics in missions, and is of special value for those using the sketches.

The series includes the following:

1. Introduction; 2. The Auspicious Day, China; 3. The Feast Day, Burma; 4. In Congo Land, Africa; 5. Prince and Peasant, Russia; 6. The Peasant's Choice, Russia; 7. The Cross in the Sky, Italy; 8. The Home-Coming, France; 9. Brothers, France; 10. The Need of Central America, Central America; 11. The Hut in the Great North Woods, U. S.; 12. School Days in Oklahoma, U. S.; 13. In Washington Square, U. S.

To defray the cost of production, a nominal charge is affixed, as follows: Single copy, 15 cents; per dozen, $1.20; Complete set of 13, $1.30; quantity prices on application.

These sketches are now ready and may be ordered through the General Board of Promotion and its branches, also from the Department of Missionary Education.

Costumes of the Mission Fields

The department of missionary education recognizes the dramatic element in missionary materials, and undertakes to cooperate with those desiring to secure full benefits from its use. The visual presentation of missionary fact and story often gives life, color and reality to the missionary message. The department has an equipment of over 500 costumes and 200 flags of mission lands, from which selections may be made. This is the most complete outfit of missionary costumes in the city of New York, and is being used by all denominations.

The costumes may be used for pageants, plays, episodes, entertainments, dialogues, choruses, speakers and missionary meetings.

A Church Incurably Missionary

There is a small church in a rural community in Massachusetts which has demonstrated to a remarkable degree the fruits of missionary cultivation. According to all human calculations, this church should have died long ago, but a missionary church does not die.

This church is at West Royalston. It was founded in 1768, and is in a scattered rural community eight miles removed from the railroad. Its people are entirely dependent upon lumbering and agriculture. Its resident membership last year numbered twelve individuals, while its Sunday school had a total of seventeen pupils. The church has never had more than fifty members at any one time during a period of fifty years.

Yet this church, because it was a missionary church, has the following record which many larger churches might justly covet:

It gave to Country: Nine soldiers in the War of the Revolution; sixteen soldiers in the War of 1812; thirty-one soldiers in the Civil War; three soldiers in the World War—all returned.

It gave to Education: 168 school teachers.

It gave to Religion: Twenty-six ministers of the gospel; six ministers' wives.

It overgave its quota in the Victory Campaign.

It overpledged its allotment of $1,874 in the New World Movement campaign, and according to the Massachusetts Annual for 1921, recording the figures to April 30, it gave $455 as its yearly quota.

ings. They may be rented to churches on a nominal charge.

A Good Selection of Missionary Biography

"Fifty Missionary Heroes Every Boy and Girl Should Know," Johnston; "Livingstone, the Path-Finder," Matthews; "Frank Higgins, Trail-Blazer," Whittles; "The Story of John G. The Missionary Magazine Table

The following list of magazines will be found of special value in the intensive study of missionary questions. These should be in every town and village as well as city and library. Ask your local librarian to make them accessible to your people: Missions; Missionary Review of the World; International Review of Missions; Student Volunteer Bulletin; Moslem World; National Geographic Magazine; Everyland.

Christmas Pageant

A Christmas pageant, "The Birth of Christ," has been prepared for the closing exercise of the home mission period in the Bible schools. The scene is laid in and around Bethlehem on the first Christmas Eve. Unwilling pilgrims, resentful and bitter against the tyranny of a foreign power, are going up to "the city of David" to be taxed. The birth of Jesus, heralded by angels and marked by a star, comes as a divine response to their longing hearts. The shepherds visit the manger and then arouse the village. The people come, behold and wonder. The Wise Men of the East are led hither by the star. At last, the most reluctant yield allegiance to the new-born King.

The author is Dr. Charles N. Arbuckle, who prepared the pageant used for Easter a year ago. Dr. Arbuckle has given the Christmas pageant in his own church in Newton Centre, with marked success, and the department of missionary education considers itself fortunate in being able to secure it for general use in the denomination. The pageant may be secured for 10 cents.

Enroll Your Study Class

The department of missionary education has issued a "Baptist Mission Study Class Enrolment Card," and will be glad to supply free helps to the leaders of study classes who enroll their classes. Special packets of valuable materials have been assembled for the use of such leaders and teachers and the department is prepared to give special attention to requests for special assistance in planning study class programs.

Mission study class standards have also been determined and for the reaching of the required number of points, the local church is entitled to a certificate of attainment.

For general and specific information concerning all of the helps and materials, write the Department of Missionary Education, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Missionary Education Briefs

An Epidemic of Reading in Vermont

A carefully planned program of reading of missionary books was planned last year by the state secretary, and the following results reported:

60 churches entered the reading contests; 900 individuals participated; 4,000 missionary books were read; one church with forty-one readers reported 145 books read. Another church in a small rural town ten miles from a railroad, with forty-seven resident members, reported one hundred seventy-seven books read.

The Reading Habit In Oregon

At Enterprise, Ore., is a small church which had forty readers who read 325 books, attaining in points a total of 2,174.

The young people gained an entirely new vision. The public librarian was delighted. One man got so excited over the "Life of Paton," he took it to a millman, not a Christian, who was so impressed that he asked for more books like it. The demand for books began to exceed the supply. This reading laid the foundation for a woman's society. They never have had a woman's society.

Reading Results in Waterbury, Connecticut

The First Church of Waterbury, Conn., won the state contest. Two competing teams were at work, known as the blue team and the pink team.

103 women of one team read 343 books;

84 women of the other team read 302 books; that is,

187 women read 645 books.

Encouraging Results

The department of missionary education reports the following results of its activities for the past year:

There were 5,567 mission study classes, exclusive of those in the young people's society, not reported. This represents an increase of 1,128 classes of the year. Six hundred ninety-eight were among the World Wide Guild groups.

In addition to the above, there were 1,725 adult groups and 400 junior groups which used the study books as a basis for program meetings, making a total of 8,820 groups studying and reading the mission study books.

There were 332 church schools of missions reported, representing an increase over a year ago of 69 per cent.

Influence of Good Reading

Judson read "Star in the East," and it sent him to Burma.

Lincoln read the Life of Washington, and it directed his course.

William Wilberforce read "The Dairyman's Daughter." It changed his life, and he in turn awakened Thomas Chalmers, who founded the Free Church of Scotland.

"Nearly all the enquirers in Moslem lands have first been led to Christ by means of a book or tract."—DR. S. M. ZWEMER.

The Missionary Impulse

"The missionary impulse is the response of the Christian's heart to the truth of God as seen in these three aspects:

1. What the Gospel is to God who gave it.

2. What it is to us who have received it.

3. What it is to those who have not yet received it."

My offering for the Kingdom must be:

A loving gift to carry the love of Christ. An intelligent gift, for my prayers must go with it.

A generous gift since God has given to me so generously.

A personal gift to Christ since he asks me to do it for him.

A willing gift since no other is acceptable to him.

A disinterested gift since heathen women and children can make no return.

A joyful gift since it carries good tidings of great joy.

A speedy gift, for the time is short and the need pressing.

A gift through which I go myself to tell of redemption for the world.

of missionary education includes the following, in addition to the writer: Miss May Huston, assistant secretary; Miss Alma J. Noble, executive secretary, World Wide Guild; Miss Mary L. Noble, executive secretary Children's World Crusade; Miss Helen E. Hobart, newly elected field secretary of the Guild and Crusade.

Missionary education secretaries have been appointed in thirty-one states, working in closest conjunction with the woman's state and district organizations and the state conventions. Many associational secretaries are also at work and by means of conferences, state, associational and local, the plans and materials are being consistently promoted.

The department of missionary education is enjoying excellent cooperation with the missionary education movement, and is largely represented on its board of managers and educational and executive committees.

The department has continued its cooperative work with the American Baptist Publication Society both in the creation of new educational materials and in the promotion of the same. Effective cooperative work is being done in summer assemblies, schools of religious education, young people's area and the Sunday school. Agreements have been reached tending to regulate and coordinate the promotion of missionary and religious education with the states.

The department in its varied activities has enjoyed the most cordial relationship with the missionary societies, to whose counsels it is greatly indebted. Brief reports of missionary education activities have been submitted on request to three of the missionary societies for incorporation into their annual reports. The department is also much indebted to Missions for the generous use of its space and the fine attention which has been given to its work.

That churches in increasingly large numbers are paying new attention to this prerequisite of giving, is cause for gratification, and we look forward with hope and expectation to a Baptist constituency more largely and genuinely concerned with its missionary and spiritual cultivation, which eventuates in normal and hearty financial support, than in devices and expedients and high-pressure methods, which, however excellent as such, react to make more difficult the very object which we seek to achieve.

A growing volume of correspondence reaching from coast to coast is the silent but convincing witness to the fact that churches all over the land are realizing that missionary cultivation is necessary for the carrying out of a large denominational program. Much of this correspondence has also confessedly shown how utterly inadequate have been the plans and devices employed in many local churches for conveying missionary information. The department is much gratified for this changing attitude about missionary education on the part of hundreds of churches; but is also increasingly impressed with the importance of the task yet to be accomplished.

In the light of the fact that the young people of the denomination as represented in such organizations as the Baptist Young People's Union, the Christian Endeavor Society, the World Wide Guild and the Children's World Crusade, have so quickly and enthusiastically responded to the missionary appeal of the denomination, both in respect to its educational and its financial features, we should not fail to utilize to the utmost every educational means to minister to that growing part of our constituency which must carry the responsibilities of our missionary societies, and from which must come our denominational leadership and support.

It is the conviction and purpose of the department of missionary education to regard its program for the young people as fundamental to the building of a new Baptist constituency.

International Sunday School Lesson for October 29

WORLD WIDE PROHIBITION
(WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY)

Lesson: Isaiah 61: 1-9: Golden Text:
Prov. 14:34

Introductory

The twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah has so often been used as the text for a temperance lesson, that it is rather unexpected to find this later passage used. But it is fitting for the idea of the progress of prohibition. Just what this progress has been to date would form an interesting part of the World-Wide Prohibition lesson. What is the attitude of other countries toward the progress of the temperance cause in the United States? How has that attitude changed in the last several years? Are steps being taken in other countries to enforce prohibition?

Lesson

Isalah gives the vision of the work which he felt he had been called to do and in which the spirit of the Lord rested upon him: What a mission! "To preach good tidings unto the meek; to bind up the broken-hearted; to proclaim liberty to the captives; and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to comfort all that mourn; to give unto them the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for heaviness."—It was these first verses that Jesus read when he took the book in the synagogue, ceasing his reading before the clause pertaining to the "vengeance of our God," and laying aside the book with the words; "Today hath this scripture been fulfilled in your ears." Following the description of his mission under God to men, Isalah gives the pictures of the restored Zion, the result of the carrying out of the mission—the waste places built up, men of other nations performing the unpleasant tasks, the wealth of the nations at their disposal, a wronged people recompensed and under an everlasting covenant with Jehovah.

Leading Thoughts

1. So long as there exists an opponent to prohibition, the fight is still on. 2. Eternal vigilance is less exciting than a fixed battle, but it is more important. 3. Sanity of life is based upon temperance in all things.

Illustrating the Lesson

It would be an excellent plan for every teacher in the Sunday school to study something along the line of simple psychology. All successful teachers have this knowledge, often because it is innate and they would work along psychological lines whether or not they had ever seen a book on the subject, for the facts of psychology existed long before there was any textbook on the subject.

Two simple psychological facts that every teacher should bear in mind are that some children will understand better through a visual presentation of a subject; others through an auditory. The majority are of the former class, they learn more quickly through the eye. In all cases the use of both methods will help to clinch facts. For this reason pictures and object lessons mean so much to children. They can see something before them; an abstraction is made concrete. The story of Christ and the children will be carried home to them more sweetly and surely if they see the picture of Christ blessing little children. This emphasizes the use of pictures in the primary room, the class room, the adult assembly room. A lesson may be carried home in that way which will be given in no other.

Especially with a class of primary and intermediate boys and girls is the object lesson of use. The teacher who every Sunday carries something to class with him to make the lesson concrete will not have a dull or disinterested class. His children will be on the alert to learn what is the special object of interest for that day. But the "concretizing" of the lesson must not be carried to such an extreme that the beauty of the scripture text is lost sight of. That should be dwelt closely upon, and objects of illustration should be used only so that they may serve to emphasize the scriptural lessons. The Great Teacher makes frequent use of the commonest and homeliest details of life as illustrations to the lessons he taught.

Baptist Church Schools On the March

There was a very well known but unpopular word current during the war. It denoted those who could march but preferred a sitting posture. There are few "slackers" among the Baptist church schools; most of them are on the march in these busy fall days.

Enlistments are pouring in upon headquarters. State directors write "Our schools are eager for just such definite program as this. They relish the idea of a great Baptist advance, participated in by every school, yet elastic and free enough to suit the most independent of our leading churches." Others say, "You have struck just the idea. Each church is given the task of ascertaining its own peculiar needs without outside dictation or any financial tax beyond the dollar for the literature of the advance program. Yet all our churches moving toward the same definite goals at the same time brings a feeling of comradeship and wholesome rivalry throughout the state."

One church complains "Our people return from vacations too late to begin the advance with the rest of the country. Are we therefore barred?" Another pastor writes, "Our rally day came early in September before the 'Bigger and Better Baptist Church School Advance' material was in our hands. Could we enter now?"

Rally day was only an incident, a chance to give publicity to the advance. Any school can enlist with the state director of religious education or with headquarters, hold the workers' conference, the booster banquet, and swing away with the rest of the schools toward the goals of 1922 and 1923 advance.

The East and the West are running a close race on enlistments. The North Central states were a little slow in getting under way, but are racing toward the front. The order now stands:

The Hills of God

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help."
—Psalm 121:1.

THE Hills of God stand firm and strong
Above the vales of sin and wrong;
Majestic, peaceful, noble, grand,
Age after age they, moveless, stand.

When pressed by cares, we lift our eyes
Unto the hills; whence fresh supplies
Of grace come down, our souls to bless,
From him who rules in tenderness.

When Peace departs, we gaze afar,
Where reigned a peace sin cannot mar;
And, like a gently flowing stream,
Flows down a peace earth cannot dream.

When joy takes flight, and hope seems dead,

And lifts no more her cheery head,
We view the "Everlasting Hills,"
And hope with new life throbs and thrills.

When strength gives way, and life ebbs low,

And fevered is the pulse, and slow,
Our help, it cometh from the Lord,
Because we rest on his sure Word.

Symbolic are these mighty steepes
Of him who slumbers not, nor sleeps;
Whose might can make the mountains fall;

Whose love is brooding over all.

Bear on your message, Noble Hills,
Till every soul with courage thrills!
Breathe on each storm-tossed, troubled breast

God's precious gifts—his peace, and rest.

The heathen invasion deals with foreign cults or religions now making advance upon American soil.

I. Bahaism

Can Americans worship a Persian polygamist as God? A few months ago the then head of the Bahaist movement died. He did not hesitate to claim absolute deity, and was worshipped as such by his followers in the East and in America. He was the successor of a Mohammedan who introduced the cult in 1844.

"Bahaism is a very different thing in its own home in the Near East than when masquerading in Western garb. Its cardinal doctrine is that truth is progressively revealed, and that each age or cycle must have a new revelation, and this can be had only by a fresh 'manifestation' or incarnation of God. . . The greatest obligation of men is to recognize that 'manifestation' as he appears."

There are several congregations of Bahaists in America.

II. Mohammedanism in the United States

Islam is the religion of many millions of people, covering much of Africa, India and the Near East, and extending into China and the islands of the Pacific. The Koran is its holy book, and Mohammed its great prophet and founder. It is one of the most fanatical of all religions, "unbelievers" being despised and regarded as legitimate prey for "believers." From time to time Mohammedan leaders have proclaimed a "jihad" or "holy war" against "unbelievers," resulting in terrible massacres. It is commonly reported that an effort was made to precipitate such a war in Moslem lands in an endeavor to break the foreign power of Great Britain and the other allies in Egypt and the East, but the attempt was unsuccessful.

Mohammedanism teaches the supremacy of Allah, but it lacks the moral code of Christianity. It teaches the inferiority of women, encourages polygamy, and holds forth the hope of a paradise of sensual enjoyments.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Islam began its spread by the sword. Conquered peoples were compelled to chose between the creed and death. Whether or not the warlike spirit of the religion is changing, or whether attempts at such propagation are no longer attempted because of military weakness is a question.

There is, however, one sect that seeks to convert the world through preaching. A year ago a missionary of that sect came to America with the avowed purpose of converting America to the faith.

There are already many Moslems in America, mostly immigrants from North Africa, India, Persia, Arabia, Turkey, and Albania. They have settled chiefly in the large cities, especially Chicago, but are also found scattered through Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Wisconsin. Their number is not accurately known. Where they have settled in communities they have their places of worship and societies for mutual help.

III. Mormonism, the Islam of America

Mormonism bears many striking resemblances to Islam. It grew out of a "revelation" said to have been made to an obscure young man of questionable character. It grew with surprising rapidity, and it rules its adherents with a rod of iron. It is startling to know that there exists in the United States an empire whose citizens owe first allegiance not to our country, but to the vast, powerful, and relentless organization of the Mormon church. Dr. Josiah Strong wrote: "The Mormon church is probably the most complete organization in the world . . . and so highly centralized is its power that all these threads of authority are gathered into one hand, that of the president."

Practically every male member in good standing is a member of the priesthood, and thereby holds office in the church. In 1902 the number of such officers was given as 62,445.

Every Mormon is required to pay tithes to the church, thus creating a vast fund, which is used by the president as he pleases.

"He receives between two and three million dollars a year in tithes, gives no accounting of them, and has no responsibility for them except to God and his own conscience. He is able to use this sum, in bulk, at any given point, with a weight of financial pressure that would overbalance any other such single power in the community. As 'trustee in trust' for the church, he has an added income from stocks and previous investments; and he has practical control of the wealth of all the leading men of the church to assist him, if he should call upon them for assistance. He uses his financial dictatorship to support monopoly against the assault of Gentile opposition, and he compels the Gentile to pay tribute as the Mormon does."

The Advancement of Mormonism

Every Mormon boy attends Sunday school as soon as he is old enough to lisp his song of adoration to Joseph (Smith), the kingly prophet, and to the Saviour with whom Joseph (Smith) is early associated in his mind. At fourteen or even earlier, he stands in the fast-day meeting and repeats the Mormon confession of faith.

"At fourteen he becomes a deacon of the church. Between that age and twenty he becomes an elder. Very soon thereafter he becomes 'a Seventy,' and perhaps a high priest. He takes upon himself 'covenants in holy places.' He becomes 'a priest unto the Most High God'—frequently before his eighteenth year. Usually before he is twenty he is sent on a mission to proclaim his gospel, the only one he has ever heard in his life, to 'an unenlightened nation' and 'a wicked world.' For, in addition to being taught that the Mormons are the best, most virtuous, most temperate, most industrious, and most God-fearing of all people, a thing that is dinned into his ears from the pulpit every Sunday in the year, he has been convinced by equal iteration that the rest of the world is a festering mass of corruption."

What Can We Do About It?

The American Baptist Home Mission Society supports ten missionaries in Utah. There are also strong Baptist churches in Salt Lake City and Ogden, and also churches at several other points.

Baptist young people can help stem "the heathen invasion," first of all, by a renewed personal consecration, a sincere endeavor to put first things first. A truly alive young people's society will attract and hold other young people who have not yet found the stability and joy of service. It is one of the tasks of the society to get hold of the casual churchgoers, and to help them see by personal experience the realities of a Christian life of service—Adapted from Service.

A Letter from a Traveler

Paris,
Aug. 19, 1922.

My dear Friends:

Such a task as to attempt to describe all the many wonderful sights I am seeing daily would be impossible, so I shall give you a few impressions which occur to my mind as outstanding.

By way of explanation, I might say that our trip is primarily a tour of Baptist mission fields, but as most of these that we shall visit lie in the Orient my letters for several months will contain nothing about them.

One of the greatest contributions to the world along religious lines is the cathedrals. Since we have seen a number of these it has seemed to me that a letter telling something of these churches might be of interest.

Notre Dame

Our first cathedral visit was to Notre Dame church at Montreal, Can., our port of embarkation. Ornate in architecture and with evidences on every hand of superstition dominating its worshipers, the impression which it made upon me was not altogether favorable.

A contrast to this was the Shrine of St. Joseph which we ran across by accident on the same day. This chapel, the foundation of a cathedral to be, is situated on a slightly elevation in a remote district of the city. Here pilgrims from all parts of North America come to receive healing. The crutches and canes of those who have believed themselves cured of infirmity line the walls of the chapel by the thousands. The sight of the kindly Father going about his mission of healing and the long line of pilgrims ascending on their knees in prayer the great flight of steps leading up to the shrine was indeed impressive. Though we may disagree with the superstition of their religion yet there is much to be learned from the earnestness of their devotion.

Chester

Of all the churches I have visited in England, save that of Canterbury, Chester Cathedral has more than any other filled me with a feeling of deep reverence and spiritual inspiration. Its greeting to the visitor ran something like this:

"No man entering a house ignores him who dwells in it. This is the house of God and he is here. Pray then to him who loves you and bids you welcome and awaits your greeting. Praise God for his gifts of beauty in painting and architecture, handcraft and music. Give thanks for those who in past ages built this place to his glory, and ask that we who now live may build the fabric of the nation in Truth, Beauty and Goodness, and as we draw near to One Father through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ we may draw nearer to one another in perfect brotherhood."

Such was the atmosphere which Chester Cathedral radiated, and one cannot help but receive an uplift from such an environment. The cathedral dates back to 1093 A. D. when it was used as a monastery and was later turned into a cathedral of the Anglican church by King Henry VIII. Its richly carved choir is adorned with hundreds of figures no two of which are alike. Quaint Chester, the town in which the church is located, is the oldest remaining walled city which was used at one time as a Roman garrison.

Durham

Another outstanding cathedral is that of Durham, which occupies a most beautiful position on the banks of the River Wear—the view of it is unsurpassed in all England. Adjoining the church is a castle, and from a distance one sees the face of the high cliff atop which rise the castle walls and the towers of the great church. Rich masses of greenwood cluster below and at the foot the River Wear winds in a broad stream between its steep and verdant banks. In truth, the picture fixes itself indelibly upon one's memory. The building is a grand specimen of Norman architecture, while several of its additions manifest exquisite early English construction. The fine old

Special

Mr. Horace J. Nickels, a member of the Life Service League of the B. Y. P. U. of America, left Minneapolis, with his father and mother, just before the St. Paul convention, for a trip around the world. The editor of this page asked him to write an occasional letter to the young people at home. His first letter appears in this issue. His description of the cathedrals is most interesting.

library contains a number of MSS. of the Gospels made by the monks with infinite care and illustrated in rich colors and pure gold. Durham like most of the cathedrals in England was Roman Catholic before the Reformation. One has a feeling in this church that its simple beauty and grandeur leave nothing to be desired.

There are many interesting tales related of these various places but space will not allow me to relate them.

York Minster

York Minster is another superb house of worship. Each cathedral is distinguished in its own special way. For instance, York, which was built in 1100 A. D., is noted for its stained glass. There is more in this cathedral of the really old glass than in all the other churches of England put together. Most of it dates from the fourteenth century, and the gorgeous display of the great east window, 76 feet high, and 32 feet wide, is over-awing. The mellow shades of coloring give forth a richness which is totally lacking in modern stained glass. The interior of York Minster is more attractive than the exterior. It is 525 feet long, 250 feet across, and 200 feet in height—a marvelous work of Gothic style.

St. Paul's and Westminster

St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey in London are, of course, the most outstanding churches in England. Each is a marvelous place, though to me Westminster was the most impressive. Perhaps this is due to its historic associations for indeed the service at St. Paul's was fine. The afternoon service which we attended at the Abbey was witnessed by four or five thousand persons. The great grey walls, the ancient monuments, the splendid altar, the tomb of the unknown soldier, the worshipful atmosphere, presented the scene of a life-time.

Canterbury

The cathedral at Canterbury appealed to me more than any other church I saw in England. Over thirteen centuries ago the first church was founded upon the present site, but the cathedral has had many vicissitudes. During the reformation a great deal of its decoration was destroyed, and through the years it has suffered much from restoration. Yet today it stands a stately, beautiful house of worship. Here for many years stood the shrine of Thomas Becket and pilgrims by the thousands climbed the steps ascending to it on their knees. The crypt of the church was the scene of the scourging and fasting of Henry II for his part in the murder of this saint. Here also the persecuted Huguenots sought refuge and were allowed to set up their looms and conduct their services. A small chapel is still used by their descendants whose services are held in French.

The interior of Canterbury Cathedral is 516 feet long, the choir itself 191 feet. We happened to arrive at the cathedral in time for service. It was just the usual evening prayer, but the notes of the organ, the most magnificent we heard in England, swelled through the great building at the touch of an organist whose very soul was in the music. The choir of forty well-trained voices added to the beauty of the service, and we left the cathedral refreshed and inspired.

I should like to describe some of the fine monastic ruins that I saw in the heart of Britain which displayed glory of former days. I should like to tell you of the Notre Dame and Magdalen churches in Paris with their splendor and of Saint Chapelle with its marvel of stained glass. But I am sure that you will be most interested in hearing about the little Baptist church in this great French city.

Our French Baptist Church

Through some error in the newspaper notice we were misled as to the time of the service there, so unfortunately missed it. But we had a nice visit with the young pastor, M. Caudron. He told us of the history of this little mission church situated in a remote district of Paris. How his father-in-law, M. Vincent, had begun the work twenty-five years ago which has since grown and grown till, in the midst of this atheistic and Romanist environment, the little church of 300 members is now thriving and self-supporting. There is a Sunday school and Bible

Fiddle D. D.

'GUSTUS had risen to the glory of being a waiter. A waiter in the Tortonelli restaurant, where a sign over the door announced: "Parties, Teas, Dances. Regular Table D'Hote Dinners Daily." You who do not know 'Gustus can never appreciate what seven-league boots must have brought him all the weary miles from 'way down south in Dixie up north to Pennsylvania to this restaurant-de-luxe, where one's footfalls sank noiselessly into soft-piled carpets and where crystal chandeliers and small rose-shaded lamps made the table silver gleam like fairyland. It was a heaven in 'Gustus's eyes, where the most marvelous thing of all was his wearing a swallow-tail coat by day and by night, with a great white polished shirt front and a stiff starched collar. How should you ever comprehend the full glory of being such a waiter, you who have never run around barefooted 'way down south in Dixie? The only trouble with poor 'Gustus was that he was not yet a regular waiter, he merely filled in on rush occasions like Saturdays or when other waiters failed to come—which meant only part pay, of course just when he was longing with all his negro heart for handfuls of greenbacks in order to bring the rest of his family up north.

"'Pears like I'se gwine to be powerful slow shobbeling them dollars bills into my pot o' gold," sighed 'Gustus, "'pears like that there pot jest natcherly am nebber gwine to grow hebbly!"

And at night he dreamed grand dreams of sidewalks paved with greenbacks, which he picked and picked and picked; but you know yourself how unsatisfactory such money is to spend the following morning! So, when Miss Angelica Forsyth Van Rensaeller came to Tortonelli's, 'Gustus was ready to do almost anything to lay his hand on genuine daytime money.

Personally, I have nothing against Miss Angelica Forsythe Van Rensaeller, for she was all that her name implies; she belonged to the very best family in town, and wore the very best clothes in town, and had all the very best beaus in town, too! And, say what you will, beaus are not to be listened to with deaf ears, especially such a chief high favorite as the one with whom she was to lunch at Tortonelli's.

"Angelica," said he, "you are carrying too much money in that silly little gold mesh purse. My dad's a banker, and he says nobody has any business putting such temptation in other people's way; anyhow, not if you yourself pray daily, 'Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.' Come, now, own up, do you know for a fact how much money you've got?"

"No, you Man of Wrath, I don't!" sighed Angelica bewitchingly, "how should I know how much money I carry? It just comes and it goes, as far as I'm concerned."

Her escort frowned disapprovingly: "No man in his senses ought to have anything further to do with you, madam. Nevertheless, let's order something to eat!"

And, of course, it took time to settle on their menu; so while they debated about oysters and salads and ices, there stood 'Gustus with envious black eyes fastened on that small gold purse stuffed full of money, money that the young lady acknowledged she had never counted. And you may be sure he wished all the wishes that there were about that money! But there it lay on the table hopelessly not for him.

But twenty minutes later, when he came back from a trip to the kitchen, there under Miss Van Rensaeller's chair lay the purse, half-opened; presumably knocked off the table by her elbow, and unmissed. 'Gustus softly knelt to pick it up and returned it to her with a graceful flourish. She thanked him with an absent-minded smile and thought no more about it. But 'Gustus thought about it. And something thrilled him everytime he remembered what was lying deep down in his trousers pocket—something he must wait to look at until he should have returned to the secrecy of his own small room that evening.

But when at last he had turned the key in the lock and lighted the gas and pulled down the window shade, then he fished that something up from his pocket, and—hardly breathing—spread open its greenness and cried in sheer delight to see a letter V in each corner: "Five dollars!" he exclaimed, "O praise de good Lord!" But no sooner were the words out of his mouth than the air was full of the sound of strange, soft music, playing—

*"Yield not to temptation,
For yielding is sin;
Each victory will help you
Some other to win;
Fight manfully onward,
Dark passions subdue,
Look ever to Jesus,
He'll carry you through.
Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort, strengthen and keep you,
He is willing to aid you,
He will carry you through."*

'Gustus dropped that five-dollar bill as if he had been shot, and gasped brokenly; "Oh, Lord, shorely you knows as how I only took that money 'cause why I needs it so dreffully for my poor old mammy and pappy. Shorely you knows I ain't no thief, leastways not a reggalar one. Oh, Lord, why for you send that angel music on me so quick when you ain't nebber caught me doing this-a-thing before? And that lady was so powerful rich, Lord; why, she don't eben know how rich she am, Lord. And 'Gustus am such a poor ducky, Lord. Not even a reggalar waiter yet, Lord, jess one of them ebry-onct-in-a-while waiters."

'Gustus stopped praying, if this could be called a prayer, and through the stillness of the night sounded once more the voice of the wailing angel. "Oh, Lord you'se shore got me this time," groaned 'Gustus, pushing the five-dollar bill far away from him as he listened to the music which preached so directly to his guilty heart, "Lord, tomorrow morning you'se gwine to see 'Gustus gib this money to the proprietor at Tortonelli's, 'deed you am! 'Gustus won't touch one penny of it, Lord, 'deed he won't!" Then, just as he was sobbing, there came the scraping of violin strings and the sound of merry voices which were anything but angelic. Just plain, everyday boy voices, laughing.

'Gustus tiptoed to the window and raised the shade. And there, across the narrow alley, he faced an open window, which framed three negro boys, one of whom was tuning up a fiddle.

"You don't need to practice no more," one boy was saying appreciatively. "I reckon you'se far and away the best player in the orchestra, anyhow."

"Oh, go 'long!" demurred the boy with the fiddle, modestly, "last Sunday I done spoil ebry hymn I played, 'deed I did. So the director gib me this here hymn to practice for tomorrow; I reckon I got it right good at last."

"I reckon you has," said his friends.

"I reckon he got me right good, anyhow," echoed 'Gustus, groaning as he gazed guiltily at the money he had pushed away with a stricken conscience when he had thought the Lord was speaking to him. "I reckon that fiddle done preach me a reggalar sermon; I reckon that fiddle done make stolen money seem stolen." And with very mixed feelings 'Gustus crawled into bed!

The next morning was Sunday and he felt decidedly curious about that fiddle, wondering in what orchestra it was to play. So he posted himself in the alley to wait for its owner's appearance, then silently he shadowed this unknown youth through several streets to the door of an inviting building into which were filing many Negro men and women, boys and girls.

"I reckon I'll jess step in and hear my fiddle play in a reggular orchestry," said 'Gustus to himself, as he ventured to enter this building with the others.

I have no words to tell you of the thing that happened to him there. But if Dixie is a lonely way from Pennsylvania, then you may guess the joy it was to have somebody clap him on the shoulder with a hearty welcome, he who had been welcomed nowhere else—not even at Tortoneilli's restaurant, where the other waiters sneered at such a greenhorn straight from Dixie. But here there was a welcome, warm and kind and friendly, so he sat with other young fellows of his own age and heard the orchestra tune up for Sunday school. His heart beat uncomfortably fast as a strangely familiar tune was played; he listened to the hearty, mellow voices nearby singing all the verses of

For yielding is sin,"*

and after every verse he echoed the refrain:

The Young Reserves

Molly Cotton Tales

THE Little White Prince was sick. Sick in bed; which is perfectly horrid for birthdays, when the King had to go to his counting-house down on Main Street and the Queen had to be in the Kitchen of Mrs. Smith Jones baking bread and honey. If it had not been for Molly (and the handkerchief!) the poor Prince wouldn't have had any sort of a birthday or liked his present suitably.

"I abominate it!" he growled in a really terrible voice.

"I don't see anything the matter with it," said Molly, pleasantly, "it looks like a very nice sensible handkerchief. Anybody with a nose ought to be delighted to receive it. And anybody with a cold in his nose ought to be de-ee-lighted to receive it!"

The Little White Prince gave a disgusted sniff: "I never said I didn't have a nose. And I guess most everybody has heard what a perfectly dreadful cold I've got. But a birthday comes only once a year and a handkerchief is a perfectly abominable present for a boy. Indeed it is!"

Molly picked it up. Something would certainly have to be done about this handkerchief business . . . this was no way to feel about a present when any moment the King might come home from his counting-house and expect to be properly thanked.

"Mercy on us!" Molly cried, "if it isn't the Handkerchief-That-Grew-on-a-Bush!"

"Huh?" grunted the Prince, startled.

"Yes, my dear, indeed it did. It's a magic hanky, and there's a regular story back of it. No wonder your daddy, the

*"Ask the Saviour to help you,
Strengthen, comfort and keep you;
He is willing to aid you, L
He will carry you through."*

When the hymn was over he turned to the young man beside him and said: "I reckon this must be a powerful fine church."

"It's more than just a church for Sundays," the youth replied, "it's a Negro Baptist Community Center, built so we all can spend our lonely evenings here, with classes of all sorts, and good times, and concerts. It's ours, you know, and I reckon fun and music is as good as many a sermon to keep a colored fellow going straight, up north here."

"A-men!" said 'Gustus fervently, with his eyes on the fiddle that had saved him the night before. "I reckon I'd jess natcherly like to join, if you'd be so 'bliging as to point out the way."

So the man "pointed." And 'Gustus "joined." And I'm wondering when we ever did a better job than in planting such a center in that town for men and boys like 'Gustus! For all he needed was that one, first, intimate touch to start him straight—up north.

"It makes them sound very clean and white, anyway."

"Doesn't it? Although as a matter of fact they were black as ink. Very clean, you know,—but black."

"Oh—Negroes?"

"Exactly. Half the time it's Negroes who pick cotton off the bushes, Prince. They get up early in the morning, and go out to the cottonfields. Even Baby Borax has a little bag to be filled with cotton, for there's really nothing to it, Prince; you just pick off the fluffy cotton and poke it in your bag; pick and poke, pick and poke, pick and poke. The sun beats down on your back, you crawl along from plant to plant, dragging your bag after you. Little Borax can pick from six to eight pounds a day if you keep waking him up often enough; but the sun is so hot—he keeps dropping off to sleep. Sapolio is only five years old, and she is dreadfully apt to get sleepy, too, but they keep shouting to her: "Wake up, 'Polio, wake up, honey," and then, if she falls asleep too often they say: 'Get a move on, 'Pollo, ain't you shamed, you lazy li'l gal, you dressef li'l sleepy-head! Hustle now, hustle.' So even Sapolio picks thirty pounds of cotton; but Leander, who is ten, picks one hundred pounds."

"I am ten years old today, myself," said the Prince, gravely, "do you think I could ever pick a hundred pounds of cotton in one day?"

"I'm afraid you'd have to," Molly sighed, "if you were black and your mammy made you! But think how many monotonous bendings and stuffings must be made to bag one hundred pounds of a fluffy mass like cotton! Think of the emptiness of your mind if you were busy gathering nothingness from blistering August to bitter December. For of course you couldn't go to school much, so you would grow up ignorant and stoop-shouldered, and sullen. So you see, Prince, then when your father gave you your handkerchief he had to engage a great many people to pick it off the bushes for you, and I think you ought to feel properly grateful, and also . . . listen, Prince, wouldn't you like to make a law forbidding little Sapolio and Borax from picking cotton until they have had a real childhood? And been to school? And learned enough to help them grow up into earnest happy Negro citizens? Prince, let this handkerchief be a document pleading the cause of the little Negro children in this country! Let this handkerchief remind you that until every child that works has the same privileges as yourself this country can never be the country God wants it to be. Do you promise to remember?"

The Prince reached out his hand and took his handkerchief solemnly between his fingers: "I promise!" he said.

So that when the Queen came home from baking bread in Mrs. Smith-Jones' kitchen and when the King came home from his counting-house on Main Street, the Little White Prince thanked them properly for the birthday handkerchief!"

"I tell you what I think," he said, "I

Our Own Folks

Maritime Baptist Convention

By A. C. CHUTE

Recently this convention held its annual sessions in Wolfville, the seat of Acadia University, where it is to meet for the most part in the years to follow. The delegates were well entertained at the college, seminary and academy residences. There was held for a week, prior to convention opening, a summer school for pastors, at which courses of lectures were given by Dr. George E. Horr, of Newton; Dr. H. C. Vedder, of Crozer; Dr. E. M. Keirstead, of McMaster; Rev. W. C. Machum, of the Maritime Provinces, and the writer as a representative of Acadia. Public evening lectures were delivered by Doctors Cutter, Horr, Vedder and F. W. Patterson of Winnipeg. This school, according to the testimony of the body of men in attendance, was a great success, and a forecast of a still larger attendance and an equally good program a year hence.

Rev. C. W. Rose, of Amherst, N. S., was chosen president of the convention in the place of Rev. Z. L. Fash who retired. The number of delegates was large, and an excellent spirit characterized the gathering throughout. The convention sermon was preached by Rev. N. A. McNeil, of Marysville, N. B. There was a special interest in the convention this year because of the fact that the important matter of the proposed amalgamation of Maritime Colleges into one central university was before the body for consideration. Addresses on the subject were delivered at a mass meeting by our retiring college president, Dr. George B. Cutten, Dr. DeWolfe, of Acadia Seminary, and Dr. A. Cohoon, long our college treasurer. These all recommended that instead of reaching a decision on the question at once, we wait for another year until we understand more definitely what are the proposals of the Carnegie Corporation. The sentiment of our people in general is decidedly opposed to any such union as is suggested, but in the judgment of these speakers it would be preferable, instead of coming immediately to a complete settlement of the case, to refer it back to the governing board so that action might be taken a year later in view of the fullest information. This was the course that for the present was settled upon.

While the convention was still in session, Dr. Cutten bade adieu to the Baptist people in these parts, and went from us to take up his new duties as president of Colgate University. The convention adjourned in a body and attended him to the railway station thus making a farewell for him, after his twelve and a half years oversight of the Wolfville institutions, that was quite notable in its character and one not to be forgotten. The warmest good wishes attend him and his family in their new sphere.

The missionary meetings, both home and foreign, were of more than ordinary interest and abounded in inspiration for the year to follow. At the evening service in the interests of foreign missions there were on the platform Rev. H. Y. Corey, who has just returned from India, Rev. S. C. Freeman and wife who are just going back there, Miss Mabel Archibald and Dr. Zella Clark whose furlough is now closing, and two sisters who go abroad for the first time, Miss Evelyn Eaton to India and Miss Evelyn Slack to Bolivia. This service was in charge of Rev. H. E. Stillwell of Toronto, general secretary of the F. M. Board, who gave a pictorial lecture dealing with our stations in Bolivia which he has visited. The Grande Ligue Mission was presented in interesting fashion by Rev. G. R. McFaul. Contributions from the Maritime Provinces for this work were between eight and nine thousand dollars.

On one occasion at the summer school for ministers, Dr. F. W. Patterson gave an address, and on two occasions he afterwards appeared before the convention, the last time on Sunday evening when he had a great audience. And it began soon to be whispered about that he seemed to have in him qualities desirable in a college president. Then speedily it got abroad that he was to succeed Dr. Cutten. But this was a trifle premature. However, it was not long before we were reliably informed that he was actually coming to the headship of our university. Dr. Patterson has been general secretary of the Baptist Union of Western Canada and editor of the Baptist Outlook with headquarters at Winnipeg. He went from New Brunswick to the West in 1900, so that he is now about to return to where he belongs. He is an excellent speaker and a man of experience in executive work. He made a fine impression when lately among us, so that our people are glad over his decision. His work here will not begin until the opening of the second term of the college year, that is about the first of February. Meanwhile college affairs will be in the hands of a special committee of the faculty. May the administration of President Patterson be altogether worthy of Acadia's past history. That is the hope, the prayer, the expectation among the constituency.

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. COON

Grand Island College

The school opened Sept. 10, with a good attendance, almost keeping up to the increase expected. President Wells has been in Wyoming on two speaking tours endeavoring to awaken new interest in this institution. All of the professors continue with the exception of the athletic coach; that position is filled by Prof. Ross E. Connelly, Waterloo, Iowa.

Ordination

Rev. R. P. Hamlyn was ordained at Chambers, August 18. Rev. T. M. Pyle of Columbus was moderator, Dr. Wilson Mills preached the sermon, Mr. Pyle gave the charge to the church, Rev. E. E. Brock gave the right hand of fellowship and Rev. J. L. Blakely offered the ordaining prayer, the last two from Springview. It is said "the service was one of inspiration." The item of greatest interest, if not of greatest importance, the examination of the candidate was made elsewhere. If a minister passes a creditable examination for ordination the congregation of which he is pastor should have the privilege and benefit of it.

Pastors Coming and Going

Rev. F. C. Barrett has just resigned as pastor of the Eudell churches, thus leaving a large country field without a leader. Bro. Barrett well commends himself by his work. Rev. J. F. Taylor goes from Battle Creek to be pastor at Ragan and Brainbridge, with good prospects of advanced work. Oxford is waiting for some pastor to occupy the new parsonage. Wilsonville is flourishing, doing real community work with a new community house in sight and their pastor, Rev. J. W. San De Fur, a community leader. Rev. H. F. Smith has resigned at Ansley. This church with 300 members should not be pastorless many months. The two churches at Holdrege have entered into a plan for union work which should be of great advantage in that thriving city. Rev. Harry Wolcott, so long pastor at Sumner is pressing a good work at Smithfield and the country around. Rev. C. F. Dueholm has resigned as pastor of the Grace church, Omaha, a missionary field of strong foreign population. The church has had a steady growth during its existence. At Obert, by the help of Director Benjamin, a new house of worship has been built. Rev. L. A. Mantle has become pastor. Rev. H. F. Gilbert is just well settled at Norfolk, a very important field. The Negro church at Norfolk has recently dedicated its house of worship, finished by the help of its missionary, Rev. M. H. Wilkinson. Rev. H. C. Planck has moved from Palmyra to Union, and Rev. Sam Miller has moved from Union to Prairie Union, where he was pastor formerly. Rev. J. B. Taylor resigned at Nebraska City and moved to Seattle, Wash. Rev. E. E. Barkey, student supply at Sumner, has gone to Upper Alton, Ill., a student in Shurtleff. Rev. E. M. Owings closed his work as pastor-at-large and becomes pastor at Wayne. Rev. G. L. Sharp resigned as assistant state secretary and becomes pastor at Benson. Dr. W. I. Fowle, state secretary accepts the call of the church at Greeley, Colo. While conducting Sabbath services at that church he continues his work in Nebraska for the present. Rev. C. E. Kirkwood has resigned at Stella and goes to Guide Rock. Rev. A. D. Smalley will become pastor at Blair. Rev. W. O. Samuelson resigns at Chapman and goes as pastor to Valley.

Resignations

Some explanation should be given because of the number mentioned in the above list; but we can't give it. We venture two suggestions, which, if followed, might stop this awful waste. The church official board could urgently confer with its resigning pastor, the church agreeing, and thus avoid a separation. We know of one case where demanding advice availed, and the man remained five years longer! Or the state or national convention might formulate some program by which representatives from nearby churches, ministers and others should meet and help to start out the new pastorate and also meet to consider closing of that pastorate, if thought desirable. Our conventions could do that without going beyond the jurisdiction they now exercise. If neither of these may avail we move that a new office be created, filled by one of our best men, preferably a layman, and that we honor him with the title P. L. P. B. M., Promoter of Long Pastorates among Baptist Ministers. Here as elsewhere as a rule, "Permanence is a virtue."

The Italian Baptist Convention

BY ANTONIO MANGANO

For twenty-four successive years the Italian workers of the United States have met in the various cities of our country, in an annual convention, to discuss the problems of Italian evangelization and to inspire each other with a holy zeal for the great task which the Baptist denomination has placed upon them. The last gathering was held in Buffalo Sept. 12-15. While the invitation was extended by the Rev. G. Basile, pastor of the Second Italian Church of Buffalo, who worked unceasingly to make the convention a success, the host was in reality the Baptist Union. Chief among those who worked side by side with Mr. Basile, were Dr. Dutton, secretary of the Buffalo Baptist Union, Rev. G. Castellini, pastor of the First Italian Church and a host of devoted ladies who saw to it that the fifty or more delegates were well cared for. Special mention should be made of the generous hospitality shown the convention by the Prospect Avenue, the Hudson Street, the First Church and the two Italian churches.

It was the unanimous verdict of all those attending the convention that the Baptists of Buffalo are a generous body of people who are really interested in the foreign born and who know how to take strangers in and make them feel at home. No wonder the Baptists of Buffalo are doing the finest piece of missionary work of any denomination within the area of that city. There is a reason. It may be of interest to the readers to know that Buffalo has the unique distinction of having the First Italian Baptist Church to be organized in this country. This was brought to pass in 1896, through the energetic efforts of the Rev. A. B. Beltondi, while he was still a student in the Rochester Theological Seminary. But this splendid accomplishment would have been impossible had it not been for the loving and loyal cooperation of the Baptist Union.

Our denomination is now doing work in seventy-five different centers, maintaining fifty-five men and as many women. The total membership of our churches is near 3,000, with over 4,000 children in our Sunday schools. The thirty-six churches reporting show 325 additions by baptism and contributions to the amount of $25,000. But even these encouraging figures do not tell the whole story. Wherever our workers go they do a two-fold work. On the one hand they work intensively, leading people to accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour; on the other hand they establish points of contact with hundreds of people who do not unite with our churches but whose point of view relative to religion, and to America is radically changed. These are results which cannot be tabulated, but which are of very great value to the future of Protestantism and therefore to America.

The following are some of the important subjects discussed by our pastors at the last convention: The Gospel for the new times; denominational loyalty; Italian work, in our southern states; training the new generation for service; objectives and purposes of Christian Centers; progress toward our goals; training the women of our churches; Roman Catholic propaganda.

There was one outstanding impression which the writer personally received as he attended every session of the convention, and that was that as a denomination we have in the Italian pastors a devoted and loyal group of men and women who feel a deep sense of responsibility for the development and extension of our work among the people to whom they are sent.

Detroit Baptist Doings

BY ALBERT H. FINN

September was designated by our denominational program as rally month—facing the task and organizing the forces for the season's work. This has been very much in evidence in the metropolitan area. Churches and Bible schools have shown resourcefulness and enthusiasm, seldom if ever equalled. The Workers' Conference at the First Church Sept. 25, was the most successful of any similar gathering ever attempted. The ministers gathered at 10:30 for their Monday morning conference and every active pastor in the area was present. Dr. J. W. Hoag gave a stirring address on "The Minister's Passion" which was followed by a revealing heart-to-heart talk by Rev. Jacob Speicher, who has spent twenty-seven years in South China during which time he developed scores of local churches and became a great Christian statesman, translator and editor.

After lunch the afternoon program opened by two addresses on "Woman's Work in the Home and the Church" by Mrs. C. A. Hill, wife and associate pastor of the Ferndale Church, and Mrs. Phelps, pastor of the church at Wayne. Following came a Sunday-school symposium in which John R. Glading assistant superintendent of the Jefferson Ave. school, Allen B. Crow, superintendent of the First Church school, and S. H. Myers, the associate pastor at the Woodward Avenue Church, took part. These splendid talks were followed by an illuminating talk by Rev. A. F. Phelps, home from his field in Burma.

At six o'clock came a delicious dinner in the great dining-room, followed by three short talks under the presiding genius of Pres. Wm. S. Power of the Detroit Baptist Union: "The B. Y. P. U. as an Auxiliary to the Church" by President Comrie of the City B. Y. P. U.; "Spiritualizing the Sunday School" by Assistant Superintendent George Sauerwein of the Temple School; "The How and Why for Reaching Men" by Judge Marsh, teacher of the great men's class at the Woodward Avenue Church. This was indeed a happy, helpful feature.

Repairing to the auditorium of the First Church, the mass meeting was addressed by Mrs. W. T. Elmore of Lincoln, Neb., who, with Dr. Elmore, spent fifteen years in India. Her theme was "The Call to the Impossible," followed by an address by Rev. Jacob Speicher of China on "The Spiritual Basis of Success." Rev. Robert White of the Hudson Avenue Church presided. This was the climax of a great day.

Thursday Evening, Sept. 28 at the Woodward Ave. Baptist Church, the Baptist Young People's Union of the Detroit area gathered in mass meeting to meet and hear their honored international president, Rev. Mark T. Sanborn, of Minneapolis, who was the guest of honor and the speaker of the evening. Those of you who have seen Detroit Baptist Young People in action know that it was a great and enthusiastic gathering and one worthy of the occasion.

For Thursday evening, Oct. 26, the Baptist Forum has arranged an outstanding event: Ladies' Night at Temple Church, with Rev. Ray Petty of Judson Memorial Church, New York City, as guest of honor and chief speaker. These fall social gatherings have become an institution with Detroit Baptists. This year will be no exception.

We have been greatly honored by our distinguished guests of late: Dr. P. J. Lerrigo, home secretary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, dropped in upon us on short notice Sunday, Sept. 24. In the morning he preached at Temple Church, Rev. L. Brown, pastor; at noon he was with Dr. Hoag at the Woodward Avenue Church and before the great Sunday school; in the evening he preached for Pastor Bowyer at the Warren Avenue Church with important conferences in between. It's great to be a secretary.

Then the Woman's Interdenominational Mission Study Institute had secured our own inimitable Mrs. Elmore to instruct them at their institute at the Y. M. C. A. all the week of Sept. 24. Sunday afternoon she spoke at a mass meeting at the Woodward Avenue Church and before the young people of the First Church at 6:30. On Monday she spoke again before the Baptist Workers' Conference at the First Church at eight o'clock. She has been greatly appreciated.

Last but not least, Rev. Jacob Speicher, who for twenty-seven years has done a wonderful work in South China, preached at the First Church on Sunday morning, at the First German American Church in the evening, Sept. 24, and on Monday spoke twice before the Baptist Workers' Conference at the First Church. He made a profound impression. We have richly enjoyed the presence of these God-chosen leaders.

The Washington Assemblies

The East Washington Assembly was one of the best ever held in that convention field, though the attendance this year was not as large as in former years. The assembly closed with a fine spirit and without a deficit. The program was unusually strong. The Bible study was conducted by Rev. W. E. Mondeck, pastor of the Baptist Church at Pullman, Wash. B. Y. P. U. work was directed by General Secretary James Asa White of Chicago; Sunday-school work, by Rev. S. L. Roberts of Philadelphia and Mrs. W. A. Kemp of Spokane. The course in missions, using the home mission text book, "The Trend of the Races," was given by Dr. J. L. Peacock, of Shaw University, Raleigh, N. C. Other special lecturers were Rev. John R. George, field missionary, Rev. A. F. Colver and Mr. W. A. Kemp, all of Spokane. Prof. G. R.

Schlauch of Linfield College McMinnville, Oregon, Rev. W. P. Lipphard, associate secretary of the Foreign Mission Society, who gave two stirring addresses on his experience with, "Fill the Ship with Fellowship."

The problem confronting the young people of East Washington is the purchase of a permanent location for their summer assembly work.

Western Washington

The Western Washington Summer Assembly was held at Burton, Aug. 8-18, with an attendance, which, including registered visitors, totaled over five hundred. A strong program was given as follows: Bible study Dr. W. B. Hinson, of Portland, Ore.; young people's work, Secretary James Asa White of Chicago; missions, Dr. J. L. Peacock, of Raleigh, N. C. and Rev. Charles Rutherford, South India, while Rev. Sumner R. Vinton gave two of his famous stereopticon missionary lectures; Sunday-school work, Rev. S. L. Roberts, of Philadelphia and Mrs. Frieda C. Davidson of Seattle.

Mrs. Edker Burton of Centralia, gave a special course for intermediate girls. Mr. Roberts gave one for intermediate boys. Junior boys and girls were taught by Mrs. W. W. DeForest of Seattle. The primary boys and girls by Mrs. F. B. Matthews of Seattle. The director of music was Lawrence Arlander of Seattle. Special addresses and sermons were preached by Rev. Duncan McPhil of Bellingham, Rev. F. E. Dark of Seattle and Secretary White. A pageant was presented one night by the Seattle District W. Y. P. U. The last message of the assembly was given by Dr. Hinson and in response to his appeal sixty-five young people went forward and dedicated their lives for definite Christian service.

At the close of the service the Life Service League of the Western Washington Baptist Assembly was organized. Miss Helen Pettit was elected president and Miss Antoinette Black secretary. One of the pleasing features of the assembly program was the reading by the director, of letters of greeting to the assembly from President Harding and Secretary of Labor Davis, while Secretary C. E. Hughes expressed greetings in a telegram.

Progress is being made from year to year in the beautifying of the Assembly grounds. This year a large and attractive auditorium was erected. The success of the Western Washington Assembly in the past three years is due in a large measure to the faithful services of Mr. Carl B. Forland president. He declined to serve further and Mr. Clarence P. Sanders, of Seattle, was unanimously elected as president for the coming year.

Michigan Associational Meetings

Marquette

Marquette Association was held with the Escanaba Church, and the most interesting feature was the "Forward Look." There seemed to be little glorying in the past and no boasting about the present, but in every church report there seemed to be a determination to face the future with courage and faith.

The second impression made was the hunger for fellowship on the part of the ministers and Christian workers. With churches hundreds of miles apart it is a rare treat to meet the brethren. Arising out of this were two suggestions, (1) The holding of a summer institute for the U. P. (a strong committee was appointed to consider this), and (2) the lengthening out of the associational meeting from one day to two.

The chief ground for hope was in the presence of large delegations of young people. The meeting was full of enthusiasm because of their presence, and to further encourage this feature, the Soo B. Y. P. U. has offered a "banner" for the B. Y. P. U. having the largest delegation according to mileage next year.

There seemed to have been an ebbing of missionary vision and giving, but everybody felt that the flow had again set in. The same presentation of denominational outlook and loyalty by Dr. Bachelor and the strong messages of Dr. Collett helped this.

Grand River

Grand River Association was held at Lyons Church, Sept. 14-15, opening devotionals being conducted by the moderator, Rev. W. A. Biss of Belding. Pastor Webb gave the welcome address. A discussion was led by V. C. Webb, and others followed on the topic: "Can the Associational Organization be Revitalized?" Should it be? The thought brought out was that the churches ought to be of greater help to one another throughout the year. Rev. G. W. Lawrence brought a message on the theme, "Playing Fair with God." Rev. J. H. Perry of Greenville led in the discussion of "What shall we do with the midweek service of the church?" The annual sermon was preached by Rev. Lyle H. Hatfield.

The church letters carried messages of encouragement and progress. New pastors were welcomed by the moderator: W. T. Woodhouse of Ionia, J. H. Perry of Greenville and H. P. Hoskins, stated supply pastor at Portland. Dr. F. B. Bachelor urged the support of Kalamazoo College by all Baptist families. Dr. Grant M. Hudson, general promotional director, brought a message on denominational outlook and loyalty, stressing the program of the Board of Promotion and the goals to be attained.

The Women's Hour was presided over by Mrs. M. L. Osterhout of Belding. Mrs. W. H. Dorrance of Detroit gave the address on the subject, "The Kingdom of Heaven to extend to all parts of the earth."

Rev. M. L. Williams spoke concerning Religious Education and said the biggest business of the church is nourishing Christians (teaching). The B. Y. P. U. took charge of the evening service.

Osceola

Osceola Association met at Reed City where the Chase Baptist Church entertained. The attendance was good. The singing was conducted by Rev. A. J. Graham of Big Rapids. Mr. Hugh Jameson of Cadillac was elected moderator but was unable to be present and Rev. W. E. Orton of Evart was chosen as moderator pro tem. Rev. H. S. Grandholm of Cadillac preached the annual sermon, and Rev. F. MacGirr, of Boon, the doctrinal sermon. Speakers from outside the association were Mrs. Dorrance of Detroit, Rev. Morgan Williams of Lansing, Rev. Grant M. Hudson, Rev. Geo. Lawrence and Rev. F. L. Currey, all of Lansing. Dr. Bachelor told of the work at Kalamazoo College. Rev. A. H. Harnley of Saginaw was unable to be present to fill his place on the program except in the closing address. The years' work of the church has resulted in 63 baptisms.

The contributions to the New World Movement have been considerably smaller this year than last. This is due we believe not to indifference to the cause of missions, but to the depressed business conditions of the year ended. The association will meet next year at Evart.

Saginaw Valley

The Saginaw Valley Association met with the Alma Church, Sept. 12-13. The attendance was not large, a number of churches being without representation, except by letter. The letters indicated a fairly active and fruitful year. A number of the churches reported substantial accessions by baptism.

The financial showing on the whole, was gratifying. The sessions were all interesting. The conference on Sunday School methods conducted by Morgan Williams was especially helpful. The outstanding messages were the annual sermon on loyalty to the Bible, by Rev. Fred Davis of Saginaw, an address on virile spirituality by Rev. Fred Allen of Bay City, and the doctrinal sermon by Dr. Morgan of Mt. Pleasant.

Southern California Ministers' Retreat

By A. W. RIDER

Such deep and lasting influences had resulted from two annual retreats, previously held, that the attendance this year was larger than ever. Over ninety Baptist preachers spent nearly three days—Sept. 11-13—in conference at Camp Baldy, which is between four and five thousand feet up the side of Mt. Baldy. The isolation from the great city's life and activity was conducive to an uninterrupted time for prayer, self-examination and fellowship. No formal program was followed. A topic was briefly opened and some message from the Word, bearing upon it, studied. Then in a free conference heart experiences were bared and requests for prayer presented which drove all to a period of intercession. Out of it all came a fresh realization that the Bible is a great storehouse of truth, sufficient to our every need; God, a present helper, with all power to meet successfully all our problems, and prayer an efficient channel by which this power reaches our hearts and solves our problems. The result was that, with all barriers down, there was a mutual understanding of each other's problems and longings which formed the basis of the finest fellowship we have ever had. No theological differences were allowed to divide us, but a loving comradeship—in a loving, living Lord, united us.

We did not talk so much of the tasks of the year ahead, as we sought to have the preparation of heart and life to fit us for whatever awaited us at the foot of this,—our mountain of privilege. It gave the finest kind of a preparation for the opening of a year's work in evangelism, stewardship, education and intercession through refreshing "the inner man of the heart."

In days when more organization and more machinery are seemingly needed, we do well to turn aside and seek the added power by which this machinery is to be operated.

MAINE

Rev. J. B. Coy has accepted the pastorate of the Federated churches at Stonington, Maine. The Congregationalist, Methodist and Baptist churches have united in his support. He began his work Oct. 1. A large industry in Stonington is showing new activity which will affect the churches and other interests favorably.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE FRANCONIA CHURCH entertained the White Mountains Association Wed. Sept. 27. The principal addresses were by State Secy. D. S. Jenks on "The Coming Kingdom," and by Miss Linnie M. Holbrook of Tura Assam, on the mission work in that field. The three sessions of the day were opened with devotional periods conducted by Rev. Linnie B. Treadwell, who spoke on "Consecration to Prayer, Bible Study, and Christian Service." Discussions of timely topics were opened by Dr. Gertrude Walker, Rev. E. M. Fuller and Judge Bowker. The meeting closed with the annual sermon by Rev. A. N. Chandler, who spoke on "The King's Secret." The moderator and clerk of the session were, respectively, Rev. E. M. Fuller and Rev. A. N. Chandler, who were elected for the coming year. Berlin was chosen as the place of next meeting and Rev. E. M. Fuller to preach the annual sermon.

THE ONE HUNDREDDTH ANNIVERSARY of the Second Church, Sanbornston, was celebrated Sept. 9-10. Members and friends came from far and near. Rev. Elijah Newell had charge of the music which was excellent. The address of welcome was by Rev. H. H. White, pastor of the Laconia Church who ministers to this people in the afternoon each Sabbath. Deacon Walter D. Woodman gave the historical address, which was full of interest. During the century 338 persons have belonged to this church; over twenty pastors. There are less than forty resident members now. Rev. E. C. Goodwin, pastor 1895-1908 delivered a most helpful address followed by Rev. T. J. Cate, a child of this church. Sunday morning Rev. Elijah Newell, pastor 1915-1919 preached a strong sermon. Sunday evening, Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the state convention, spoke most helpfully on "Spiritual Values." Rev. W. J. Sanborn, also a child of this church, of Bradenton, Fla., spoke on "The Value of the Church in the Community." The entire anniversary exercises were characterized by earnestness and all felt that they wanted to do better. The banquet on Saturday evening was bounteous. This church is located on the most beautiful spot in New England. Like many of the New Hampshire rural churches it has suffered from the abandoned-farm movement, but the people are determined to carry on. A fifteen-acre farm, a good parsonage, a most excellent people ought to be an "open door" for some pastor.

THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY of the First Church, Manchester, held a most successful opening fall meeting Sept. 21. Nearly 100 were present. A sketch entitled "The Clinic" prepared by Mrs. C. P. MacGregor, proved effective in presenting the mission study books for the year. A Japanese tea was served by a group of college girls in Japanese costume.

Rev. C. L. CHAMBERLAIN closes his pastorate at Lebanon, Oct. 15.

Rev. F. J. LILJEGREN, pastor of the Swedish churches in Concord and Manchester, closes his pastorate Sept. 30 and at once takes up the work of pastor with the Harlem Street Swedish Baptist church, Worcester, Mass.

THE TEN ASSOCIATIONS of the state held their annual meetings during September. The state anniversaries met with Exeter Church, Oct. 2-4.

NEW YORK

THE CHAUTAUQUA ASSOCIATION meeting was one of peculiar interest as it was in observance of the one hundredth anniversary. It was held in the beautiful auditorium of First Church, Jamestown, where Dr. Guy L. Brown and his people proved most hospitable hosts.

FIRST CHURCH, SCHENECTADY, observed its one hundredth anniversary, Oct. 1-8. Dr. R. E. Farrier preached morning and evening Sunday, Oct. 1. This church also entertained the Hudson River North Association Oct. 3-4. Dr. G. H. Baker has proved that the church can accomplish great things for God.

THE ONTARIO ASSOCIATION was held Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 26-27, in the Clifton Springs Church. This church has just called Rev. R. S. Chalmers who has done efficient and constructive work in the Phoenix Church. Mr. Chalmers will begin on the new field in October.

THE GENEVA CHURCH HAS extended a hearty call to the Rev. J. C. Hendrickson of Cortland First. Mr. Hendrickson has taken the matter under prayerful consideration, but has reached no definite conclusion.

THE REV. W. S. P. YEAPLE is entering heartily into the work of his new field in Groton and the people are heartily co-operating with the new pastor.

Rev. J. ROY WEAKLAND who has been assisting Dr. H. Wyse Jones in state evangelism, has begun his work as pastor of the Harseheads Church.

THE RANDOLPH CHURCH was left pastorless. The parsonage had a debt of $1,700 which seemed a heavy burden for the few members. Rev. G. Frank Johnson, associational missionary, led the people in a joyous victory of meeting this indebtedness.

THE NEW YORK STATE Council of Churches became a reality, Sept. 21, 1922, at Utica, N. Y., and will become a working reality by June, 1923, if the hopes of the Utica meeting of delegates are realized. The organizing secretary is Dr. O. J. Price of Rochester.

NEW JERSEY

MT. PLEASANT CHURCH, Newark, reports good attendance through the summer, and very good supplies during the pastor's absence. Among those supplying were Rev. Daniel H. Clare, of North Adams, Mass.; Rev. J. Francis Behrens, of Philadelphia; Rev. R. D. Craig, of Des Moines. On the first Tuesday after Mr. Powell's return, following the prayer meeting, an informal reception was tendered. The pastor was taken to his study, which had been entirely renovated during his absence; new rugs, floors newly varnished, new pictures, and his desk covered with beautiful flowers. This was the work of the Women's Guild of the church. The following Tuesday evening, Pastor and Mrs. Powell received the members of church and congregation in the study and refreshments were served. Sunday Sept. 17, at the evening service, the new crimson cross was dedicated. The cross is of white enamel, about three feet in height, and contains seventeen crimson electric lights. It has been placed over the pulpit and will be used in connection with the evening services, particularly in the closing exercises; after the sermon when an instrumental selection is rendered and the choir closes the service with a vespers hymn, followed by silent prayer and benediction.

Rev. EDWARD W. MILLER, Flemington, has just celebrated his first anniversary with his people. The anniversary program bears the pastor's message to the people: "We have been wonderfully blessed during the past year, as pastor and people, in all lines of work. There have been forty-nine additions to the church, twenty by baptism and twenty-nine by letter. To our Hungarian brethren, we extend an especial welcome. Their Sunday-school and preaching services in the junior department rooms each Sunday afternoon have been well attended. Rev. Liptak and his wife have been faithful in giving themselves to this work. The current expenses of the church have been paid up regularly, and we have given over $4,000 to the General Board of Promotion, upholding our motto: 'In business for a new world.'" Mr. Miller graduated last year from Crozer.

THE ANNUAL RALLY DAY services of North Baptist Church and school, Camden, were held Sunday, Sept. 24. Pastor Morrison started the ball rolling with an inspiring message at the morning service on "The Gathering of the Clans," urging the forces of the Christian Church to rally to fight the new paganism as evidenced in the tendencies of the present day in the love of pleasure above all other things and the utter disregard of law. The services of the Bible school were presided over by Mr. F. W. Ayer, superintendent. Admiral Louis M. Nulton, commandant of the Philadelphia navy yard was the guest of honor and brought a word of testimony as to the value of Christian training in the development of right thinking citizens of the nation. Special music was provided by a cornet soloist and the school orchestra of twenty-one pieces. The processional and pageant of banners was one of the features of the program. The Rally Day services were brought to a close with a musical program at the evening service. Mr. Rollo Maitland, Fellow American Guild of Organists, rendered the program assisted by the church chorists.

One Hundred Seventy-Fifth Anniversary Founding Scotch Plains Baptist Church

AUG. 4, 1747, fifteen persons, members of the now Stalton Baptist church, New Jersey, organized the Scotch Plains Baptist church. The church will celebrate the one hundred seventy-fifth anniversary October 15-22, closing on Dr. James Manning's birthday. Dr. Manning who was baptized, licensed to preach and ordained at Scotch Plains was the first president of Brown University. There will be three services Oct. 15, and three Oct. 22, when addresses will be made by Dr. Devan of Plainfield, Dr. Sweatland of Peddie Institute, Dr. Emory Hunt of Bucknell and Dr. Helen Barrett Montgomery of Rochester, N. Y. Monday, Oct. 16, Dr. Faunce of Brown will speak. Wednesday, Dr. Joseph Taylor of West China will be the speaker. Friday evening, Oct. 22 will be social and community night. All former members of church, Bible school and congregation are urged to attend or send greetings. There have been seventeen pastors. Chaplain J. Madison Hare, now in his ninth year is present pastor. The first three pastorates were as follows: Benjamin Miller thirty-four years, William Vanhorn twenty-two years and Thomas Brown twenty years, a total of seventy-six years.

Western Recorder and now pastor of the Third Ave. Church, Louisville. This meeting is arranged for the first two weeks in January.

TWO STRONG RECRUITS have recently been added to the ministerial ranks in Cleveland. At the beginning of September Rev. E. W. Bloomquist began his pastorate with Calvary Church. He is rapidly winning his way to the hearts of the people.

REV. J. C. McCauley, a young Canadian, is the new pastor of the Cedar Ave. Church. He opened his pastorate with two weeks of special services beginning Sunday, Oct. 1. Although the Cedar Avenue Church has been pastorless for about a year, the congregation has held together remarkably well. For the first time in many years, all of the Baptist churches in Cleveland have pastors and all of our missions have missionaries.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 24, was a happy day for the members of Lakewood Church. At four o'clock on that afternoon, the cornerstone of the new edifice was laid in the presence of a large gathering. Rev. I. N. Depuy and his people have been handicapped in their work for years and the prospect of a more adequate accommodation has already given stimulus to their efforts. Within a few years, Lakewood should be one of the strongest churches in the denomination.

ON SUNDAY, SEPT. 10, the Cleveland Baptist Association had the joy of seeing the new Chapel for Romanians opened with three dedicatory services which crowded the new auditorium. In many respects this church is a model for neatness and convenience. There are 5,000 Romanian people in the city and this is the one Protestant effort being made among them.

SEPT. 17, REV. D. L. SCHULTZ, labor evangelist for the Home Mission Society, closed a successful month in tent meetings, in which about fifty people, many of them adults who have previously attended no church services, professed conversion. So successful has been this series of meetings, that the association plans an extensive tent evangelistic campaign for the summer of 1923.

EVANGELISM is to be the key note of the combined effort of the Cleveland Baptists for this fall and winter. Twenty churches are cooperating in a simultaneous effort to culminate in a series of meetings to be held in twenty churches Feb. 27-March 11.

THE CLEVELAND Baptist Association has recently purchased lots in the suburb known as West Park. The missionary pastor, Mr. Enterline, is conducting services in that district. A new church will be organized within a few weeks and it is hoped that it will be possible to erect a temporary building that will furnish them adequate accommodations for a few years.

MICHIGAN

REV. A. K. SCOTT has resigned at Nashville and accepted the call of the Petoskey Church. Mr. Scott is known to many of the readers of THE BAPTIST due to his aggressive work at Des Moines and Indianapolis where he took hundreds of subscriptions to the paper.

DURING THE LAST WEEK of September, Rev. E. S. Bramble, pastor of the Calvary Church, Harbor Beach, called together the pastors of the Huron Association. Practically every pastor responded. State director of evangelism F. L. Currey outlined plans for simultaneous evangelistic effort throughout the association. The pastors spent two days together considering the plans which were heartily adopted. This "retreat" was for the pastors a rich experience.

REV. WILLIAM RITZMAN, pastor of the First German American Church of Lansing has resigned in order to give his full time to the work in Bay City. During his three years in Lansing the mission has been organized into a regular Baptist church. Twenty persons have been baptized, ten received by letter and the membership increased to over sixty. The church has called Rev. H. Glaske of Lebanon, Wis.

DR. H. M. FORD preached his farewell sermon to the Hillsdale College Church, Sept. 24. There is general regret that Mr. Ford is leaving the church and the city where he was born and has lived nearly all his life. He recently received fourteen into the church, among them President and Mrs. Wm. Spencer of the college, Missionary Collett and wife and three sons, a prominent W. C. T. U. worker and two teachers, making 141 received into membership during his pastorate of three years. The church is in fine working condition, is prosperous and has the largest membership in its history of sixty-seven years.

Kent-Muskegon Association

The annual meeting of the Kent-Muskegon Baptist association met at the Muskegon Heights Church, of which Rev. A. W. Lyons is pastor, Sept 18-19; Rev. J. R. Estes, moderator, and Rev. John H. Stewart, clerk. In spite of bad weather, the attendance was good. The list of speakers consisted of: Dr. H. P. Klyver, Rev. John H. Stewart, Rev. J. R. Stevens, Mrs. H. Cross, Mrs. W. H. Dorrance, Rev. Grant M. Hudson, Rev. Morgan L. Williams and Dr. H. Severn, who supplied the place of Dr. A. Hoben who was unable to be present. From the reading of the church letters, nearly every church showed a gain in membership, and notwithstanding the hard times, regular contributions and benevolent gifts were very encouraging. One church was added to the list of churches forming the Kent-Muskegon association. The Spring Lake Baptist church, which recently withdrew from the Grand River Valley Association, made application for and was granted admission into the association. Officers elected to serve the association were: Moderator, Rev. J. R. Estes; vice-mod., Rev. A. M. Conklin; clerk, Rev. John H. Stewart; treas., Mr. H. Skutt; preacher of annual sermon, Mr. Denver Pease; alternate, Rev. C. E. Chumney; doctrinal sermon, Rev. A. W. Lyons; alternate, Rev. A. M. Conklin. Board of Promotion: Rev. A. M. Conklin, Mr. C. M. Cramblet, Mr. R. Nyburg. Ordination committee: Rev. R. McNemer, Rev. J. R. Stevens, Rev. A. M. Conklin, Mr. H. Ramon. Director of young people's work: Mr. Geo. S. Christman.

The prevailing thought of the association was expressed in a set of resolutions which were presented and adopted:

"1. That as an association we reaffirm our belief in the headship of Jesus Christ. That he is our authority in all things pertaining to Christian life and service.

"2. We reaffirm our belief and conviction that each individual Christian is competent, assisted by the Holy Spirit, to interpret the Holy Bible, and formulate their own declaration of faith.

"3. We adopt for ourselves the canon of conduct that Jesus laid down in his statement to John as recorded in Mark 9:38-42. It may be possible for some to do Christian work, who do not think and act as we do, so in charity we remember what Christ said, 'For he that is not against us is on our part.' The Lord judges men and women. Charity is divine.

"4. We would urge our people to take a denominational paper, to keep in touch with the work of the denomination. THE BAPTIST is calling attention to the thought and work of our denomination, and we recommend the circulation of THE BAPTIST in the homes of our people. We also recommend the magazine called Missions which is acknowledged to be by far the best missionary magazine in existence, and also the Michigan Baptist which gives an account of the doings of Michigan Baptists.

"5. We reaffirm our faith in the historic doctrines for which Baptists have everywhere stood throughout the centuries, and pledge our unstinted support to our state and national conventions.

"6. By rising vote we thank the entertaining church for the royal entertainment they have given us."

A special resolution was presented and adopted by rising vote:

"In view of the fact that our general director, Grant M. Hudson, has been nominated at the primaries by a large majority, as a member for congress, and as it seems likely that he will be elected in November where in the national capital he will carry on the work in the interests of temperance, and on the evening of his election, will sever his connection with the General Board of Promotion, We as member of the Kent-Muskegon association here assembled, desire to express our appreciation of the splendid service he has rendered as general director of Baptist work in Michigan, and while we are sorry to lose him, yet the time has come, when we need such as he in Washington, and we wish him success, and God-speed."

The association closed with the Tuesday evening service. Every one present expressed themselves as having had a pleasant and profitable time attending this first meeting of the united associations, the Kent-Muskegon Association.

ILLINOIS

DR. WM. P. PEARCE of Cairo, has returned from Europe and is taking up his work with renewed vigor. During his absence Rev. Herman Sorg of the Northern Theological Seminary took charge of the work. He became popular and left a warm place in the hearts of the Cairoites. While in Rome, Italy, Dr. Pearce lost his grip with tickets, passports, and money, through the carelessness of one of his party, which he was conducting. The loss however was gained in experience as he was thrown in the company of consuls and men of prominence. In spite of the mishap he lost only one day in his itinerary. He is writing a series of articles on "Stranded in Rome," proving that "truth is stranger than fiction."

REV. E. K. MASTERSON, owing to a nervous break-down, resigned his pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Savanna, to take effect Oct. 9. One year ago Mr. Masterson took charge of this church when it was in a disorganized condition.

Under his leadership it has been placed on a firmer basis in every way, and it is with genuine regret that the church and community part with him. His enthusiasm for missions has led the church to give more to that cause than it has in any previous year.

Rock River Association

THE ROCK RIVER Association met with the First Church of Belvidere, Sept. 26-27. The reports from the churches showed that the entire association had suffered heavily this year on account of the removal by death of a number of the influential members in various churches. There was, however, a good increase in the membership of the churches as a whole. The prospects for the coming year are pleasing.

FIRST CHURCH OF BELVIDERE

The entire organization of the forces is the goal of the officers and leaders in the entire territory. The new moderator has already called a meeting of the officers and leaders and plans are being perfected whereby the work will be enlarged. Two hundred dollars is the minimum for associational work. A number of rallies and educational meetings are being planned and the local board of promotion is earnestly and prayerfully meeting its responsibilities.

The doctrinal sermon was preached by Mr. Pratt of the Mt. Carrol church. The Bible study periods were conducted by Rev. W. R. Yard of De Kalb. It was unanimously voted to substitute Bible study next year for the annual sermon. The moderator is planning for groups in the association to study and specialize in their own particular work. Chicago gave her share to the program in the persons of Rev. Albert Gage and Charles L. Major; both of these men were given a good hearing and they were very much appreciated. The association met in the home church of Dr. Henry C. Mable. This is also the church that gave the first missionary in this country to the Negroes of the South. It is a matter of history that when the Societies could not see their way clear to send Joanna P. Moore to the Negroes

There's A Place For Moving Pictures In The Church

Results attained show that almost any church or church school can now profit by the use of a good, combination, motion picture and stereopticon machine—because appropriate films are readily available covering all phases of religious activity.

Even the most "figity" class of small boys will pay strict attention to Bible teachings if you talk to them through the eye with motion pictures. And boys remember what they see.

The young people of your community will crowd your church if you take them on Sunday Evening Journeys through the Holy Land with motion pictures.

We'd like to tell you more about the part that our combination motion picture and stereopticon machines are playing in the activities of church organizations everywhere throughout the United States. We'd like to tell you how progressive Men's Clubs, Mission Study Classes, and Individuals have made possible the financing of the Purchase of motion picture outfits for their churches. And we'd like to help you secure the right kind of films and slides for whatever subjects you are interested in. May we have the privilege?

that the First Church of Belvidere believing in her, financed her efforts and she really opened up the way for the evangelizing and the Christianizing of the southern Negro.

The Bible school and the church under the leadership of the pastor and the faithful workers are planning for larger work in the local church. It was good to hear people say that this was the most largely attended of any meeting of the New Rock River Association since the new territorial arrangement of the northern part of the state.

MINNESOTA

THE FIRST BAPTIST Church and Pillsbury Academy united, in a most cordial and urgent invitation to the State Convention which met at Owatonna Oct. 9-12.

THE "SETTING UP" conferences in Minnesota were very helpful. On Tuesday the sessions were held in First Church, St.

Paul; Wednesday in University Church, Minneapolis; Thursday and Friday in Duluth. Dr. J. J. Ross, Mrs. C. A. Brooks, Mr. Harry Meyers and Missionary Longwell, were the leaders.

ON SEPT. 25, A POST-CONVENTION Life Service Conference was participated in by nearly 200 from the Twin Cities. The meeting was held at the Y. M. C. A., Minneapolis, beginning at 5:30 with a conference on "How can we harness the spiritual powers released by the St. Paul Convention to our local church work?" "How can we assist our young people to secure adequate training?" "How can we encourage the devotional life?" After a banquet addresses were delivered by Rev. M. F. Sanborn and Dr. Carl Case, following which the assembly divided into four conferences on "The Ministry," "Foreign Missions," "Home Missions" and "Local Church Opportunities," led by Dr. J. A. Earl, Missionary S. E. Moon, Dr. G. A. Hagstrom, Rev. R. Butler.

PROF. DAVID BRYN-JONES of Carleton College, supplies the pulpit at Temple Church, Minneapolis, during October. Pillsbury Academy opened with a good attendance, considerably better than last year. Graston Church celebrates its fortieth anniversary Oct. 13-15. Rev. John Nordel begins his pastorate at Karlstad, Oct. 1, and Rev. Henry Bergland at Falbo. The church at Anoka has a specially built gospel car which enables the pastor and young people to visit surrounding communities and conduct evangelistic meetings.

BEGINNING WITH SUNDAY, Oct. 1, the Sunday-schools of First Church, St. Paul, and the Judson Memorial Church, Minneapolis, will begin a contest for stimulating attendance, punctuality and enthusiasm in the two schools. The contest will be known as the Radio Contest. In each school the reports will be flashed by radio to the opposite school.

THE CORNERSTONE OF THE new building of the First Church, Minneapolis, was laid Oct. 1, at which time slabs bearing the names of the three dormitories of the Northwestern Bible and Missionary Training School were unveiled. Twenty-five years ago when Dr. W. B. Riley became pastor, the building was regarded as more than adequate. The church and school now own six buildings which represent an investment of approximately $1,250,000. The church has a membership of 2,500.

WISCONSIN

THE EIGHTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING of the First Church, Delavan, was held Sept. 29. Rev. Robert L. Kelley has served for five years as pastor of the church, during which time 165 members have been received. The church has expended for all purposes $41,569, $17,380 of which was for beneficence and $24,189 was for current expenses.

THE PASTOR, S. W. PHELPS, is just beginning his sixth year of service in Grace Church, Milwaukee. They have been years of gradual growth. The sixteenth annual meeting has just been held. It was largely attended and all the reports were optimistic. Over $13,000 was raised last year, the church giving more for benevolences than for home expenses. In the new budget the church added $500 to the pastor's salary. The outlook is most hopeful.

SOUTH DAKOTA

REV. WALTER INGRAM, pastor of the White Temple, Mitchell, enters this week upon his sixth year with the church. The last year's work has resulted in a numerical increase above the average, and the congregation is always ready to take its place of leadership in the affairs of the city. Mr. Ingram has been elected for the second year to be president of the state Anti-Saloon League, and is also heading up the City Council of Religious Education, having direction of the week day study of the Bible for high-school credit. For two years Mr. Ingram has been president of the S. D. Federated Council of the Churches of Christ.

ARIZONA

THE REV. T. E. ELGIN of Crab Orchard, Tenn., became pastor, Sept. 1, of the church at Winslow. The church is very happy in his ministry.

MR. CARL ERICS, the convention church builder, is in Winslow beginning the construction of the new church building. The house is badly needed, and the plans are drawn by the denominational architect department for a splendid working plant.

EVANGELIST CARL BASSETT has been busily engaged in evangelism in the state during the past year. Mr. Bassett has done most excellent work. As a result of his meetings he has witnessed some five hundred professions of faith. During the summer he has held meetings in various sections of the state with excellent results, proving that summer evangelism is possible in Arizona. Oct. 1, Mr. Bassett began a meeting in Yuma.

PASTOR CECIL T. GARNETT of Bisbee has so far recovered from his recent illness that he is able to take up his work again, to the delight of the church.

TWO OF OUR MEXICAN pastors have recently resigned and left the state; Rev. Carey B. Tooms, to become evangelist on an auto chapel car to work in California and Arizona; Arturo Vargas, Glendale, who returns to work on his native heath in Mexico.

Our Schools

Keystone Academy

KEYSTONE ACADEMY opened Sept. 20 with a larger enrolment of students, with repaired and redecorated buildings, and with a strong teaching force. All friends of the school are enthusiastic. The new principal, son of the late Principal Curtis P. Coe, aims to maintain a scholastic standard second to none and yet to keep it within reach of the boy of moderate means. Keystone is a home as well as a school. A splendid gymnasium under competent direction and a matron, who is also a trained nurse guarantees care of the body. A faculty, all of whom are active Christians, assures religious guidance and companionship. The splendid results this year at Keystone are due wholly to the encouragement and foresight and energy of those who projected and directed the New World Movement.

Brown University

Registrations in the first week indicate a total of about 1,300 students. Brown has begun its 159th year's work. President W. H. P. Faunce, Prof. Richard M. Field, Prof. Walter G. Everett and Prof. Raymond C. Archibald have returned from Europe where they have spent the summer.

Bates College

Bates College at the very beginning of its year's work is celebrating its victory over Oxford University in the first international debate ever held in America. The question was "Should the United States Join the League of Nations at Once?" The Bates men on the negative side of the question won the decision of the judges two to one and the vote of the audience was 1,301 to 115 in their favor. Edward Marjoribanks was the leader of the Oxford team. He was supported by Morris C. Hollis and Maqbool Mahmood, a native of India and a graduate of Oxford University. Bates was represented by Arthur W. Pollister, William E. Young and Erwin D. Canham. Last year the Bates team crossed the Atlantic and engaged a debating team representing the Oxford Union. At that time the decision was given in the English manner by the audience. Those in the affirmative walking out through one exit and those in favor of the negative side in another.

Crozer Seminary

The seminary began its fifty-fifth year

Sept. 27 with students from twelve states and three foreign countries, representing twelve colleges and universities. A most gratifying feature is the increased number that take graduate work.

Prof. F. O. Norton, Ph.D., until recently professor of New Testament language and literature, and dean of the college at Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, succeeds the late Prof. E. E. Ayres as professor of New Testament literature and exegesis. Professor Norton has had long experience in teaching classical Greek and the history and literature of the Graeco-Roman world; and was one of the leading directors of education among the troops in France during the World War.

Prof. James B. Webster, Ph.D., spends this year of furlough from service as professor in Shanghai College, China, with the faculty at Crozer. Dr. Webster graduated from Crozer in 1908 and volunteered for work in China under the Southern Baptist Convention. He is professor of education and religious pedagogy in Shanghai College, China. Professor Webster offers courses in "Principles of Religious Education" and "Expansion of Christianity in the Modern World."

Broaddus

President Hulley writes in the most glowing terms concerning the work of Dr. Allyn K. Foster who has brought to the teachers, students and townsfolk a series of uplifting messages at the opening of the school year.

Hillsdale College

President William Gear Spencer in addressing the students and faculty at the opening of the school year talked directly to the freshmen among whom he included himself and other members of the faculty who this year for the first time entered the service of the college. We hope to use his address in a later issue.

training school connected with the church.

M. Caudron is only twenty-six years of age, and the story of his five years' war experience is thrilling. Serving in the French intelligence service, he was captured with Edith Cavel. Three days later he, with several of the prisoners, made a marvelous escape. After joining the service again he was severely wounded and recaptured. He remained a prisoner for two months when he escaped once more. He is deeply moved at the mention of the war since his mother was ruthlessly killed by the Germans.

M. Caudron is very earnest and devout, and when we told him we would think of him and pray for him he said, "I need it so much for the task is very difficult."

As one sees the throng of gay, thoughtless Parisians one sympathizes with the tremendous challenge to this small church—a hopeless outlook without divine strength and guidance. But with his help this church and the three other Baptist missions in Paris may accomplish great results for the kingdom.

Education for Successful Living, by James E. Clarke. Philadelphia: Westminster Press. Cloth $1; paper 75 cents.

Dr. Clarke, editor of the Presbyterian Advance, makes a plea for Christian education. He affirms that "our system of public education is becoming wholly secularized." His appeal is both to Christian parents and to Christian youth. Workers with young folks will find here helpful material for personal counsel and for teaching and preaching.

The King of Love, by J. D. Jones. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

The author was one of the Northfield Conference speakers this summer, and the book contains the addresses there delivered. "Jones of Bournemouth" is considered by many the greatest living preacher among English Congregationalists. These intensely personal and devotional meditations on the Shepherd Psalm are full of comfort and assurance; although one is led to wonder a bit that such a preacher could write a book at such a time in the world's history, so exclusively individualistic as this is in its emphasis.

Gardens of Green, by George McPherson Hunter. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.25 net.

Schemed as a series of sermonettes for children with a scope and schedule covering every Sunday of the year, this little volume will prove of great value to ministers, teachers, and, most important of all, to the children. The individual numbers are charming in conception and language, notably adapted to the comprehension and appreciation of the adolescent mind, and charged with the urge for beauty and high ethical values. A wide range of subject matter is covered, and the vital points made, while never becoming marred by too evident didacticism, cannot fail to impress the minds of all who come in contact with them. The child who falls beneath the sway of this book is to be envied.

A Modern Dreamer, by Edmund March Vitium. Boston: The Pilgrim Press. $1.50.

The score of "brief imaginary interpretations of incidents in Bible story or present-day religious experience" in this volume are notable for a certain freshness of viewpoint and spontaneity of expression that will strike sparks from the reader's mind whether he wholly agree with the author or not. One of the chapters—"The Call of the Wide" is a poem-sermon on foreign missions particularly worth reading; and the book is lighted with such shining sentences as this: "I am . . . a child of God; and . . . his eye is watching me, is guarding me with tender, ceaseless care, as though I were my Father's only child."

The Enchanted Garden, by Alexander R. Gordon. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

In this book the distinguished authority on Old Testament literature and exegesis, Doctor Gordon, has retold the stories in Genesis in language understandable by a child, and with a fine sense of the literary points appealing to the young. Nowhere is there any sense of strained simplicity, nor that affected naiveness so detested by the average healthy-minded youngster. The never-fading wonder of this inspired record of man's beginnings is woven into a sheaf of dramatic and poetic tales that will be sure to fascinate the young reader, and will be cordially welcomed by the teacher, parent, or minister in search of story-telling material which appeals by its inherent interest and uplifts by its ethical ideal.

The Wayfarer, by J. E. Ward. New York: Macmillan Company.

A little volume of prose poetry by a Canadian writer with a magic pen. It glorifies the commonplace things of life, and is an uplift to the spirit. A book to be read many times.

THE SONG SERVICE

By H. VON BERGE

Let us not think of song services as an effort to solve the problem of the Sunday evening service. They will contribute toward that end, no doubt, but only in so far as they are a part of a larger plan to meet that problem. Neither let us think of a song service as a mere novelty, an effort, as it were, to get out of the beaten track for a while. If they are only that they will never amount to much. No mere novelties ever do. If song services are not an honest effort and an efficient means of ministering to the spiritual needs of our people, we had better not have them. Entertainment is not their purpose. Their purpose is the same serious one that characterizes any other church service, morning or evening.

In the nature of the case, a song service will always be the exceptional service. Ordinarily, singing will be only one of the coordinate parts of our church services. Let us emphasize that. It is a coordinate part, not by any means one subsidiary to the other parts, but standing with equal rights and importance at their side. There is no justification for calling certain of our services "preaching services," as if the preaching were the one big thing there and everything else the mere trimmings. We wish to say nothing derogatory of preaching. It is a big thing. But so is singing in the worship of God, just as big.

One of the reasons why we do not have more song services is undoubtedly found in the fact that they are outside of the usual order of things. We are all of us inclined to follow the path of least resistance. The customary thing is the easier thing to do. The exceptional calls for greater initiative and harder thinking. It is easier for a minister to work out a good sermon than to plan out a good song service. Much of the material necessary for the latter may not be in his own library, and so matter must be hunted up elsewhere, and that "elsewhere" is not always easily accessible. Then it also happens that one does not really know just what sort of material to hunt for. The possibilities of a song service have never revealed themselves to many of our splendid men in the pulpit. More or less consciously so many of them relegate music and singing in their services to the realm of secondary consideration.

Under the category of song service we should probably also put those in which the congregation itself takes no part in the singing, that being left entirely to the choir. It has become quite customary, especially for the great days of the church year, such as Christmas and Easter, to let the church choir take over an entire service for the rendition of a sacred cantata. There are so many splendid ones of all grades of difficulty now on the market that few choirs need forego the pleasure and privilege of rendering such a service to their church. In the case of choirs that have in the course of time, collected a goodly supply of music, something similar to a cantata can often be compiled out of the choir's repertoire, as has now and then been cleverly and successfully done. In that manner a choir can adapt itself without any very elaborate preparation to any special program that the pastor may plan for.

But when we speak of song services, we usually take that term in a more restricted sense, and rather mean those services of song in which the congregation has a large or even the major part. For whatever plan may be followed in the conduct of the song service—and there are many possible ones—the great essential is that the people participate to the largest possible extent in the singing of the songs. In that all real song services should be alike, the different plans concerning them providing only different methods of approach to the understanding of that which is to be sung. In such a service the choir and its soloists will have their full share. Appropriate choir anthems should be provided, also appropriate solos. But aside from that the singing of the hymns is the main object and the method of their singing should be very carefully planned. Some numbers can best be rendered by a solo voice, others should be taken by the choir alone. Sometimes the choir might take the verses, while the congregation joins in the chorus. Sometimes the whole hymn should be sung by everybody. There are endless variations, only they must be called for intelligently and not haphazardly just for the sake of variety. The careful study of the text will usually determine the best manner of singing a given number. For instance, Mr. Neale's beautiful "Art Thou Weary" should be sung antiphonally all the way through, the first two lines in each verse being taken by the choir, the last two by the congregation; or the first lines by a half choir, the last by the antiphonal other half; or in some such way. In the well known "I Need Thee Ev'ry Hour" the verses could best be taken by a solo, all singing the chorus. In "Onward, Christian Soldiers" there is no room anywhere for a solo; it must be sung by everybody in the house.

Much also depends upon the tune that is being used. "A Soldier of the Cross" by I. Watts is an altogether different song when used to the tune "Arlington" than when used to the gospel hymn tune with the virile chorus as written by Ira D. Sankey. If but four verses of this song are to be sung and the tune "Arlington" used, then it would be best to have everybody sing all the four verses. If, however, Mr. Sankey's tune is used, then the choir should sing the first three verses, the congregation joining in the chorus after each, while the last verse should be sung by choir and congregation together, for the last verse is the answer to the other verses and with that musical setting calls for the enthusiastic volume possible only with the participation of all.

Thought should also be given to the proper sequence of song as to text and music. There must be wise contrasts. To sing too many of the tender and sad numbers in succession may easily repeat the experience of the disciples of old when they were found "sleeping for sorrow." It is usually good policy to open any kind of song service with a bright number or two, and then follow them up with a more tender one. Circumstances differ, however, and so each situation must be considered by itself.—The Choir Leader.

THE STATE WORKERS Conference was held in Phoenix First Church, Sept. 18-19. The denominational representatives were: Rev. Peter C. Wright, Dr. M. D. Eubank, Rev. Jas. A. Francis, Mrs. Orrin R. Judd and Miss May Huston. They presented the whole denominational program, and led in conferences on the various features of the work for the year. This conference was conceded to be one of the best ever had in the state. It will mean much to work in the state and to the denomination at large.

THE ARIZONA BAPTIST Summer Assembly has come to be a fact. The first session of the assembly was held in Prescott, Aug. 1-10. The unanimous opinion of the 116 registered delegates was to the effect that the assembly should become a permanent feature of Baptist work in Arizona. Such speakers and leaders as the Rev. T. B. Frizelle, J. D. Springston, W. B. Lippard, Pres. V. L. Duke of Redlands, Miss Myrtle Love, Missionary F. P. Manley of India, including local pastors and workers, made a marked impression on all present. One of the practical things done during the assembly was the pledging of about $500 toward the use of an auto for Mr. Manley for his work in India.

COLORADO

Rocky Mountain Association

THE FIFTY-SEVENTH annual meeting of the Rocky Mountain Association was held with the Beth Eden church, Denver, Rev. F. W. Starring, pastor, Sept. 19-21; Rev. L. B. Crosby, of Fort Collins, moderator.

The topic for the association was "Fellowship with Christ" and all sermons and addresses delivered during the sessions were based upon that motto. The opening service was led by Dr. W. J. Bingham, of the Bethany church. The inspirational message on Wednesday morning was brought by Rev. Joshua Gravett, of the Galilee church. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. F. E. Eden, of the Broadway Church. Dr. A. H. C. Morse, of the First Church, spoke on "The Imperialism of Jesus." President J. W. Bailey, spoke in the interests of the "Colorado Women's College." Rev. J. H. Davis, State Missionary, delivered the closing sermon.

It was said by those who for many years have attended the Association that this was the best yet, in that the sermons, addresses, inspirational and expository messages were exceptionally strong and uplifting.

The reports showed that this has also been the best year in the history of the association. Eight hundred and sixty-six baptisms reported, and 790 received by letter during the year. The benevolences this year amounted to $110,000, $50,000 for missions and education, and nearly $100,000 for church buildings.

The Beth Eden church proved itself master of the situation and in a splendid manner took care of the almost 300 delegates. Not having accommodation in any department of the church edifice to provide meals for such a host of delegates besides the local people, a tent was pitched in the church yard and here were served the noon and evening meals to the satisfaction of all.

The new officers are: Rev. Frank E. Eden, moderator; Rev. F. W. Starring, vice-moderator; Rev. E. L. Krumreig, Secy.-Treas., and Rev. A. H. C. Morse, chairman of the Standing Committee.

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

F. CARL TRUEX, pastor of First Church, Selma was so depressed over the fact that ten missionaries were to be denied the privilege of returning to their respective fields, due to the 25 per cent retrenchment in denominational work, that he returned to his church, after consultation with Dr. Robbins at Indianapolis, and asked his membership to raise $1,500 over and above their already heavy budget, in order that they might maintain Dr. John Newcomb as their foreign pastor in India. Despite the fact that plans are about perfected to build a new $100,000 church building, all but $300 of the amount asked for was raised. At this point three men and one woman agreed to guarantee the balance. This makes possible the return of one missionary out of that ten. Another of his membership, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Crossley, have assumed the support of a native pastor known as Pastor Samuel Cumlum, India) and will send his wife to a training school to prepare her for definite Christian work with her husband. Selma First Church has made wonderful strides in the Master's service since Mr. Truex became pastor six years ago. The membership has grown from 350 to 746 and missionary giving has increased about five times. The pastor's salary has been advanced three times and recently an assistant has been given him. The Lord has honored their giving and sacrifice by blessing the church with the largest number of baptisms of any church in the Northern California Convention with but one exception and with that same exception, it has had the largest net gain in membership.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

HOOVER STREET CHURCH, Los Angeles, has secured as a pastor Rev. J. A. V. Pieters, for five years the pastor of the Bethany Church of Long Beach. Although one of the baby churches of the Southern California Convention, Hoover Street has made great progress, and being situated in one of the most rapidly growing sections of Los Angeles, has an unlimited opportunity for service for the Master. Both pastor and people have a vision of the great work ahead and are united in the confidence that God is going to richly bless them.

THE PERSONAL APPLICATION OF STEWARDSHIP

There can be no true Christian stewardship that does not recognize God as sovereign owner of all we possess.

Christian stewardship is based not upon a kindly and half Christian purpose to be generous with what belongs to us, but upon a purpose to administer for God the things that belong to God and are entrusted into our keeping as His steward.

We acknowledge God's ownership by setting apart a portion of our income for the work of His Kingdom. We administer the remainder of our income also as stewards. Thus we complete acknowledgment of God's ownership.

The coming of the Kingdom waits for this concrete demonstration of genuine consecration on the part of God's people.

Christian stewardship means that all we have is held at the disposal of our Lord and Master.

The month of October has been suggested for the promotion of a stewardship program in every local Baptist church. Copies of the pamphlets "Suggested Stewardship Program for Local Churches" and "Suggested Stewardship Topics for October" and all material needed will be furnished on application to any State Convention office.

The Joy of Service

FOR the things which need to be borne, for the great, courageous things which need to be done, our souls need that glorious spirit which will not suffer any experience to pass until all the fullness of its meaning has been learned, and all the width of its opportunity made use of. "Life," said Dr. Grenfell, "is to me very beautiful. Life is a thousand times worth while." He wrote this while the little hospital ship upon which he went on his far errands of mercy lay in the shadow of the terrific cliffs of Laborador, and the gathering storm shut in from the sea. He wrote it with facts of suffering and poverty vivid in his knowledge—desperate battling of fisher fleets with the sea, hunger and cold and shipwreck on that forbidding coast, and always the ominous prospect of want and starvation in the winter for those with whom the season's fishing was a failure, and for the families of the men who went down on sunken ships. Yet, in the midst of that, he found life splendid because it could be filled with the joy of service—of fearless struggle, of sacrifice, of love.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. A. J. Vining, financial secretary of Franklin College, closed his work Oct. 1. He has been tireless in his efforts to bring the college before the Baptists of Indiana. He has returned to his home in Toronto, Canada.

Mr. D. M. Eddy, Escondido, Cal., whom we announced as our oldest subscriber, died September 16 at the age of 104 years. He was a subscriber to The Standard from its very beginning. We were mistaken in one statement in our former mention. Mr. Eddy was married and has great-grandchildren.

A national conference on church publicity, held under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation and the Advertising Council of the Association of Commerce, will be held at the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, Oct. 31. The conference has a two-fold theme—advance in church publicity during the last decade and selling the church to the community.

The W. C. T. U. is engaged in a campaign for 1,000,000 members. It is the purpose of the organization to mobilize 1,000,000 women who will work for the observance, enforcement and retention of the Volstead code and the eighteenth amendment. The organization has prepared a series of new leaflets which can be secured by addressing the publishing house at Evanston, Ill.

There has just been completed in Hull Court at the University of Chicago a stone bridge designed in harmony with the Gothic architecture of the Hull Biological Laboratories. The bridge, designed in the office of Coolidge and Hodgdon, architects, is the gift to the university of the class of 1922, and cost $900. It spans the famous "Botany Pond" and bears at either end the university's coat-of-arms and on the middle arch the inscription, "Presented by the Class of Nineteen Twenty-Two."

A committee of the Home Missions Council has voted to approve two objectives of work with immigrants at Ellis Island and the follow-up of Protestant immigrants at their destination. It is proposed to render immigrants friendly aid while entering the country traveling to their destination and adjusting themselves to their new American environment. They will also help the newcomer to get into touch with his own church. This effort will require a clearing house for receiving and referring names of immigrants to local Protestant forces. Directories of churches are being prepared by the co-operating bodies.

The Baptist Minister's Conference of Chicago at its meeting Oct. 23, will be addressed by Dr. W. L. Bailey, professor of sociology in Northwestern University, on "Christ in Recent Art." This address will be illustrated by a stereopticon. The last meeting of the month will be held on Tuesday all day. At this time a national conference on church publicity will be held at the Hotel Morrison. Dr. A. H. Newman, Baptist historian, will address the meeting Nov. 6. This meeting will be held with the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary. Dr. W. E. Barton, moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches, will speak Nov. 13. Dr. G. L. Tenney will speak on "Music and the Church" Nov. 20. Nov. 27, is the meeting of the Church Federation, and Dec. 4, Dr. Newton G. Thomas, dean of the dental faculty of the University of Illinois will address the conference on "Evolution and the Layman."

The Rev. P. H. Seise, executive secretary of the Baptist Union of Kansas City, Kan., spent a recent Sunday with Chaplain Frank C. Rideout at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. Mr. Seise was the preacher at the United States Army Post Chapel of the General Service Schools War College on this occasion and was very much enjoyed by the officers and their families.

The prayer for equipment and consecration for service which appeared on the cover page of THE BAPTIST for October 7, was taken from the church calendar of the First Church, San Diego, Cal. In some way we failed to give credit to its pastor, Rev. Frank O. Belden.

CHINESE EVANGELIST TRAPPED

Missionary A. F. Groesbeck of Swatow reports that his Chinese evangelist and his entire family were killed by falling walls in the Swatow Typhoon.

Property damage is immense. The Swatow Baptist Mission Compound has long been recognized as one of the most beautiful mission properties in the Orient. It is now a region of unroofed demolished homes; heaps of wreckage and piles of kindling wood that have formerly been porches, roofs and walls. Not a roof remains to cover the heads of 350 students in the Mission Academy.

Don't Say Anything About It

During the months of May, June, July, August and September, 1921, the subscription receipts of THE BAPTIST were $8,208.67. For May, June, July, August and September this year the subscription receipts were $13,428.72. We released unconditionally the balance of the budget allowance for last year amounting to almost $8,000, and we have not called for a cent of the amount voted at Indianapolis. She-e-e-e! Don't say anything about it!

Killam's Kollum

Why Not?

A little tableau on page 484 of the September Missions ought to be given in every church and at every state convention. By adding a few covers of THE BAPTIST to the costume, Mrs. Missions can speak for both papers and then the canvassers can take joint subscriptions for the two.

And It Is Real Missionary Work

"Good old BAPTIST. Gets better every month. Part of my missionary campaign this fall will be an effort to put THE BAPTIST into every Baptist home in the 'Soo.'—Rev. Thomas B. March, Sault Ste Marie, Mich."

Only One In Eight

A newsy little eight-page sheet comes to our desk periodically. It has one page which bears this title: "Our Dry Page." This is a new type of honesty. How fortunate to have but one in eight! Even THE BAPTIST cannot make this score.

Good For the Soul

"I really enjoy THE BAPTIST very much. I take Good Housekeeping for styles, The American for accomplishment of big things in the secular world but I need THE BAPTIST for my soul. The articles for instance on prayer are so essential and so much benefit can be derived if we will only take the time to study them."—Mrs. R. W. Doolittle, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Treated As A Real Friend

"Dear BAPTIST: We appreciate so much your visits to us that we wish to sound your praises as wide as possible. Several religious and secular papers and magazines come to us but when the big bunch is before us THE BAPTIST is the first one opened and we read it all including K. K. So from across the Pacific we as missionaries send most hearty greetings. You beat them every time.—J. H. Scott, Osaka, Japan."

The Lesser Evil

Benjamin Starr of the Baptist Missionary Convention of the State of New York writes: "Replying to your recent communication I would say that if you should call at my home one of these fine days and knock at my door and say in the words of Holy Writ 'Pay me that thou owest' I would meekly dig down in my jeans and produce the $3. If it were simply a question of going to jail for a few days' rest I might argue the case with you, but when it comes to going without THE BAPTIST and Missions, NEVER!"

British-American Baptist Cooperation in Jamaica

By CHARLES S. DETWEILER

THE Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain in association with the American Baptist Home Mission Society announces the appointment of Rev. Thomas I. Stockley as executive secretary of the new Baptist Forward Movement in Jamaica and superintendent of the Sustentation Scheme. Mr. Stockley has held the pastorate of some of the best churches in England, including the West Croydon Tabernacle. As a representative both of the Kewick Convention and the Baptist Missionary Society he has visited the churches of Jamaica, and is beloved of them for his spiritual ministrations. This brief item of information is deeply significant as a new step in the cooperative relationships of American Baptists. To understand it requires a review of the present situation in Jamaica and of the causes producing it.

The early history of the Baptist Mission in Jamaica is closely involved with the agitation against slavery. Knibb, Burchall and Phillips were three great men of God who made the cause of the bondmen their own, and who suffered at the hands of the ruling planter caste for their defense of the oppressed. Any uprising among the blacks was laid to the charge of the missionaries.

The abolition of slavery came in 1838. Four years later, on the very anniversary of that great event, the Baptists of Jamaica in their annual meeting at Kingston voted to forego all financial help from the Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain. This most unusual action was taken by people who had known the bitterness of bondage and in whose hearts lay a deep sense of gratitude for deliverance. Their noble purpose was to release missionary funds in Great Britain for the beginning of a new work in West Africa, and in the enthusiasm of their new freedom they were willing to make any sacrifice.

An Unwise Step

To us at this late date it seems to have been an unwise step. Many things were hid from their eyes that are clear to ours. They could not foresee the adoption of free trade by their mother country in 1846, which ruined the sugar industry in the British West Indies by taking off the heavy preferential duty on non-British sugar. Neither could they realize the long hard course on which they had entered of training a growing population in the ways of thrift and godliness. Increasing amounts of money would be needed to furnish school equipment and extension of their work to all parts of the island. It was enough to them that the cry of West Africa had reached them and awakened a response.

The British society continued a small annual grant for the maintenance of Calabar College at Kingston for the training of ministers, and in times of disaster from earthquake or hurricane British Baptists generously responded with special gifts, but the development of the work was left to the few English missionary-pastors, supported by the Jamaican churches they served. In course of time Negro pastors were trained, but never in sufficient numbers properly to care for their adherents. At the present time (1922) there are fifty-five Baptist pastors on the island, of whom fifteen are English-born, including four on the faculty of Calabar College. As there are 200 Baptist churches, it is necessary that two or more churches unite in calling a pastor, in order to provide a sufficient stipend, and this plan tends to become a vicious circle, for the more churches are united in one sphere, or circuit, the less pastoral care is given to each one, and the less it is able to contribute. There was one case of a pastor, who in his desire to add to his income had assumed responsibility for seven churches, with the result that both he and the churches were barely existing.

In the support of their ministers Jamaican Baptists have a sad record. When the generation had passed away, who had known the joy of redemption from slavery, there was lacking the same high enthusiasm that had enabled them to attain self-support. The people had not been raised far enough above their former manner of life to appreciate the necessity of high standards for their pastors. They sometimes begrudged the stipend needed to maintain their homes on a

Pretentious Faith versus Practical Faith

AN official belief is very much akin to infidelity. Some persons never question a doctrine; that is not their line of temptation; they accept the gospel as true, but then they never expect to see its promises practically carried out; it is a proper thing to believe, but by no means a prominent, practical factor in actual life. It is true but it is mysterious, misty, mythical, far removed from the realm of practical common sense.

proper social level. Of some of the poorer ministers it is said that "their houses, personalia, buggies, horses, and harness are a disgrace to the Baptist name." The result of this niggardly support has been that educated young men are unwilling to become pastors and none of the present pastors have sons in the ministry or preparing for the ministry.

And yet the Jamaican Baptists are capable of sacrificial giving, as witness the splendid stone chapels built by their unaided labor, and their missionary society supporting work in Cuba, Haiti, and the Congo, with an income of $15,000 per year.

Growing in part out of the insufficient leadership is the failure of the Jamaican churches to affect the life of the community. Although a Protestant island, the percentage of illegitimate births is approximately the same as in Cuba. Anything of the nature of special work for boys and girls, mothers' meetings, and efforts toward community betterment is little known. Church life is largely a matter of Sunday services and a mid-week prayer meeting. For most pastors burdened with the care of three or four churches, and scarcely maintaining their own home life on a meager stipend, there is time and strength for little more than the routine of religious services.

And yet there is a wonderful opportunity for Baptists, for among the denominations they rank second, being surpassed in membership only by the Anglican, or state church. They number some 30,000 and count as adherents as many as 200,000. Because they were leaders in securing emancipation, they enjoy a lasting prestige among the common people—the blacks as distinguished from the colored or lighter-skinned people. The Baptist churches, therefore, are composed mainly of the poorest of the population, and of those lowest in the social scale.

Outside Help Needed

Early in 1921, the American Baptist Home Mission Society, at the request of the Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain, sent a deputation to Jamaica to make a careful study of the missionary situation as it affected the denomination, and to suggest means by which American Baptists could cooperate in the rehabilitation of this field, which British Baptists by reason of the drain caused by the war were unable to undertake. It was felt that some outside help must be provided, if the Baptist cause in Jamaica was not to go backward. As a result of the study made by the deputation the following plan was adopted by the board of managers of the American Baptist Home Mission Society:

1. First it was decided that the Jamaica Baptist Union should be encouraged to elect an executive secretary to give his whole time to the work; to visit the churches and stimulate systematic and proportionate giving; to recommend pastors to churches; to recommend grants from missionary funds to churches when necessary; and to promote pastors' and Christian workers' institutes. To make possible the appointment of such a secretary, the American Baptist Home Mission Society will cooperate with the Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain to the extent of $800 annually toward one-half of his salary and expenses.

2. To enable each pastor to have fewer churches under his care and thus to give more time and care to each church, it was decided that the salaries of the pastors of weaker churches should be supplemented by special grants. To this end the British Baptists will cooperate with the Jamaican Baptists in establishing a sustentation fund, and The American Baptist Home Mission Society will supplement the income from this sustentation fund by an annual grant of $1,200, with which aid can be given to churches for the support of their pastors on conditions that will stimulate their own giving.

3. The American Baptist Home Mission Society will make an annual grant of $3000 for Christian education in connection with Calabar College and high school, helping to provide an additional teacher and scholarships for additional students preparing for Christian service. This last item is fundamental in the rehabilitation of the Baptist churches of Jamaica. Calabar College heretofore has never had accommodations for more than eight theological students, and consequently never supplied the churches with sufficient pastors. It is believed that effective steps can now be taken to

Does God Guide Today?

WE are persuaded that God guided men and nations in the faraway yesterdays of the race. Take Abraham for example. "He went forth not knowing whither he went," in the belief that God's hand would direct him. Abraham was confident of it, and planned his life on that basis. When he sent Eleazar back to the old home to choose a wife for Isaac he believed that God would concern himself with the enterprise, purely personal and domestic though it appeared to be. "He will send his angel before thee!" The result of the mission seemed to the servant of Abraham to confirm his master's confidence: "I being in the way the Lord led me!" Or take Joseph. Looking back over his chequered career in which was much that was mysterious and difficult he seemed to discern the providential hand of God. "God," he said, "did send me before you to preserve life." It is a great contribution that these Hebrew folk of Old Testament times made to the race. We read it all the way through the book—confidence in the guiding presence of God in the life of men and of nations.

In the New Testament it is the same. The people of God were called, the apostles were set apart, events were ordered, and the church was under the continual guidance of its Lord. Paul did not carve out a career: he followed directions.

Do we expect God to guide today? What should we think of the man who would follow Abraham's principles now? Should we look a little askance at him as impractical and imprudent? Have we abandoned the New Testament principle and lost the sense of the divine leading and fallen back upon what measure of human wisdom and foresight we can summon to the great tasks that confront us? If so, how can we recover it?

Do we want God to guide? Or are we in too great a hurry to wait for him. Or have we some plans of our own that suit us very well so that we do not feel the need of the divine leadership?

The Christian conscience asserts with the utmost assurance that God is willing to guide all who are willing to be led. To disbelieve that would be to deny the inmost reality of our religion. We are not left to make our way through the world by the light of the wisdom with which we have been endowed, or which we may have been able to acquire. "Amid all the uncertainties by which we are surrounded," said Herbert Spencer, "nothing is more certain than that we are ever in the presence of an infinite and eternal Energy from which all things proceed." Change "which" to "whom" and we shall have a very acceptable statement of Christian doctrine. This Energy is that Providence that accompanies our lives and leads such as are content to be led by it.

Why is it that this Providence is often so hard to recognize and realize? Perhaps because it is so constant and so pervasive. The fishes that swim in deep waters and never come to the surface, are they conscious of the medium in which they exist? Do they know that they are in the water? "In him we live and move and have our being." Perception is dependent upon contrast.

If this guidance is a privilege of the Christian how may we secure it? We may have it for the asking. Only if we ask for it it must be without reservations. It calls for complete surrender, and for all the faith that the soul can command. The direction of the divine leading may not always approve itself to us. It may well be that Abraham was not without misgivings at times. Where was the land promised as an inheritance? Within it he remained a sojourner to the end, as "in a land not his own, dwelling in tents, with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." So it must often be. But God was moving on the wider circle and working out the larger plan. If we would have the divine guidance we must ask for it and we must have Abraham's trust.

If we may have this guidance for the asking, how shall we dare to undertake God's work in the world without securing it? Take the New World Movement. This is not a merely human enterprise, something that has commended itself to our judgment as a good thing to do. It represents our effort to participate in the unfolding purpose of God. It is the pledge of the sincerity of our prayer that God's kingdom may come, as in heaven, so on earth. For most of us it is true that the measure of our devotion to the cause of God's kingdom is the degree of our cooperation in the New World Movement. Viewed thus, the New World Movement becomes, in its various elements, the formulation of our conception of what God wants in his world.

If that be true, then, we repeat, how dare we undertake to do God's work in the world without seeking the divine guidance? However sure we may be that God wants a thing done in his world we have no business to set about it without asking him how he wants it done. Because after all, it is his world and his plan. If you should come home some day and find workmen in your home papering the walls and painting the woodwork without having consulted you, you would be displeased. It might be that the walls needed papering and the woodwork painting, and the intent of the workmen might be beyond reproach. It might be that they had no thought in their mind but to gratify you, and that they are putting themselves to much trouble and toil and expense to do so. But, after all, it is your home, and you have your own ideas as to how it should be disposed, and naturally you would like to be consulted and to be permitted to guide the labors of all the work within it. How dare we undertake to do God's work in God's world without seeking the divine guidance? To succeed, the New World Movement must be bathed in an atmosphere of constant prayer.

"I Was Hungry"

THE number and condition of the refugees in the Near East cannot be adequately set forth in words. Representatives of the principal organizations interested in relief work for Greek refugees agree that there are today no less than 487,000 persons who have been driven from their homes and are in the direst need. Mitylene is harboring 150,000; Chios and Samos, 50,000; other Aegean islands, 10,000; Marmora, 17,000; Salonica, 75,000; Athens, 30,000; Rodosta and interior, 125,000 and the Macedonian coast 30,000.

The decision concerning Thrace will increase the number to at least 800,000. The movement of the refugees from this territory will be precipitated from Eastern Thrace to Western Thrace and Macedonia, thus greatly augmenting the number of homeless Greek refugees. Perhaps no more serious condition exists at the present time than on the island of Samos where the greater portion of the 30,000 refugees are seriously ill. There is one hospital in Samos with a total capacity of 120 beds, but there are now over 1000 cases of fever under treatment in addition to many wounded soldiers and civilians who are waiting transfer to Greece.

Reports show that the relief organizations are now working smoothly at all important points and that the government is cooperating fully through the "department for the location of refugees." One of the most pathetic groups is that of a thousand mothers with small children in Athens. One of the very serious problems which the relief workers face is that of proper sanitation in the refugee camps, and with the coming of winter, in spite of the best efforts of the government and all of the relief agencies at work, untold suffering and loss by death will come.

We are glad to note that our churches facing as they do the crying needs of our own world-wide work, are finding it possible to do something to help save the lives of those in the stricken territory of the Near East.

Uncle Sam-Bootlegger

WE were shocked to see the statement. We thought Uncle Sam was leading the world in his prohibition activities and here we find that he is charged with "bootlegging" on the side. The foundation for the charge was found in the fact that Chairman A. D. Lasker, of the United States shipping board, had permitted the ships belonging to Uncle Sam to carry liquors for their patrons after they had passed the three-mile limit.

The attorney general in a recent decision has ruled that no ship, American or foreign, may enter United States territorial waters with liquor, open or sealed. The action applies to all privately owned ships flying the stars and stripes and to all foreign ships which may not bring their "wet" cargoes within the three-mile limit. Uncle Sam proposes to go out of the "bootlegging" business in every realm where he rules.

The order was to go into effect Oct. 15, but a temporary injunction has been granted to the International Mercantile Marine Corporation and the hearings will be held Oct. 17. The old cry of increased taxation in the form of increased transportation charges is being made and some of our good citizens threaten to go to Canadian ports to take passage. These threatened dangers will not have a very wide effect. When the eighteenth amendment was passed some folks threatened to go to Europe to live. Perhaps they did change their abode but the country has not come to grief on that account. We believe our people will approve the action of the president and his advisers and give them most hearty backing in their efforts to make the dry laws effective.

"Now Reverend—"

WE sometimes almost wish that we had never been ordained. These wicked thoughts come to us when our telephone rings and a pleasing voice says, "Is this Reverend K? I called for I have an unusual opportunity, Reverend, to present to you this morning. The Great Consolidated, etc., etc. will certainly soon be among the greatest dividend payers. We have just a few shares left and can let you in on the ground floor, etc." "Why," we answer, "we have no money to buy stocks—oil, lead, silver, or even gold. Our account at the bank is at the vanishing point." "I understand" says the voice, "but that is just why I am interested in your case. I know what a struggle you have, Reverend, and in a few months we can place you on easy street." The rest of the story can be imagined. What persistence! In addition to the telephone calls come circulars and letters with offers of a bonus, and the church paper is used if space in its columns can be secured. The whole proposition makes us sick at heart. What do they think we are? Why do they repeat over and over the "Reverend"? To no other mortal man would they give the same line of talk. Do we belong to the Royal Order of Gullibles? Because of our sacred calling are we considered the prey of financial vultures? To be honest, a confession is in order. Some of the things which we have said to these financial missionaries to ministers would not sound like a prayer-meeting talk. Is it not time, my "Reverend" brethren, that we assert ourselves and show to the men of the world that we have business sense enough at least to seek the advice of our local banker before falling for the alluring arguments of salesmen whose specialty is selling gold bricks to the men of the cloth?

A Great Sermon in Few Words

FRANK A. VANDERLIP, known everywhere because of his connection with financial and business interests, has, like many another layman, turned preacher. In a recent statement after a first-hand study of conditions abroad he said: "We like to call ourselves 100 per cent Americans, and forget that this may mean 100 per cent provincialism. The very thing that we blame Europeans for, an exaggerated national ego which is playing such a large part in their disorganization, is a trait which we ourselves have highly developed. We regard it as the purest form of patriotism to raise the standard, 'America First.' We do not mean by that that America should be first in leadership, in helpfulness, in breadth of understanding, but rather that we should be first in selfishness. National selfishness is the root of deteriorating growth which is threatening the civilization of Europe." It is the work of the churches to help America to be first in helpfulness and service. Christian America is the true America.

"Why Not Be Fair With Fosdick?"

THIS is the title of an editorial in The Continent for Oct. 5. The editorial will be of interest to many of our readers, for, while Dr. Fosdick is preaching in a Presbyterian church and teaching in a Union Theological Seminary, he is still a member of a Baptist church and is a Baptist minister. Yes, why not be fair with Fosdick and other Baptist men and women who do not think just as we think they ought think? The editorial says:

"An impartial referee would have called 'Foul!' several times already in the attacks which the militant conservatives are making on Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick for his widely published sermon, 'Shall the Fundamentalists Win?' It is averred—and perhaps this rather unfortunate title lends an opening to such representation—that (in the language of one of his critics) 'the intention back of the preaching of the sermon and in its circulation is the propaganda of the liberal views of which Mr. Fosdick is champion.' Another says: 'He has set out to make Unitarians and rationalists out of this generation.' But anybody who reads the discourse with an unclouded desire to be fair will see that the object of the preacher is not to propagate his own or anybody else's doctrine but to propagate in the church a spirit of tolerance and fellowship toward varying views of Christian fact and faith. He is laboring to establish friendly recognition of the equal right of all men to find a place in the church who take Jesus for Lord and Master and desire to preach for him and live for him as the only Saviour of a sinning world.

"That is to say, Dr. Fosdick is not challenging 'fundamentalists' on their doctrine at all, but on their determination, which he thinks many of them make most evident, to drive out of the church all who do not agree with them on the interpretation of Scripture and on the dogmas of systematic theology. That the church must agree on the incarnation of God in Jesus Christ Dr. Fosdick is as fully persuaded as any man can be. There can be no unity of Christianity except a unity in the proclamation of Jesus as the Divine Messiah. But Dr. Fosdick understands that the 'fundamentalists' demand a more precise and particular unity on points subordinate to this great central faith, and hope to expel from the church everybody of a mind different from their own. His appeal, therefore, is against permitting the 'fundamentalists' to 'win' in regard to such expulsion. Against this stand of his it is perfectly relevant to argue that a minutely standardized theology uniform to the final detail, is necessary to keep the church pure and true to its Master. Such discussion is honorable. But saying that Dr. Fosdick has 'attacked the Person of Christ' or that he 'poohpoohs the resurrection' is veritable false witness and as argument thoroughly vicious."

A Statement Qualified

SOME weeks ago we criticized editorially the sweeping denunciation of Protestant Christianity in the American Israelite. We find in the current issue of that journal an editorial which modifies the earlier statement by identifying the cause for its arraignment. The qualified statement follows:

"THE BAPTIST of Chicago, the leading paper of its class, devotes a page of its September 2 issue to criticizing the Israelite's editorial entitled, 'Protestant Christianity's Failure.' THE BAPTIST states that other forms of Christianity were not exempted from the sweeping judgment, but the world hoped more from Protestant than from the other divisions of Christianity. To this the Israelite would add that the liberal wing of the Baptist church on all public questions, especially those referring to religious liberty and absolute separation of church and state, stands exactly on the same platform as the liberal Jews. The Israelite's criticism was mainly caused by the failure of the dominant religion to prevent the World War, with its utter disregard of the dictates of humanity, the failure to respect the laws of nations, the plundering of private property, the carrying of conquered peoples practically into slavery, the utter disregard of the rules of 'civilized warfare,' to say nothing of the recrudescence of crime, which today is more violent and wider spread than ever before in the history of man."

In a word, Christianity has failed because it did not prevent the world war. By the same method of reasoning, education, government and every other agency of modern civilization has failed. The case then for Protestant Christianity is not so bad, as it at first appeared.

Fears and Hopes

"AN American looks at his world" is the title of a comment on the times in which we live by Glen Frank, editor of Century Magazine. These comments have been continued in each issue since the early summer and have awakened considerable discussion. The writer points out that Western civilization seems to have come under the spell of five fears. The first is a biological fear—the fear expressed in numberless articles, pamphlets and more permanent documents to the effect that the best blood of the world has turned to water. The second fear is psychological fear—"the fear that the crowd-man and the crowd-processes of thinking will push to the wall that saving insurgency of the individual man that has hitherto furnished the world with its creative ideas." Another type of literature is filled with economic fear—a feeling that our industrial civilization is approaching a collapse. Then there is administrative fear—a fear that leadership sufficiently strong may not be available for the growing complexity of the modern world. And last of all, Mr. Frank calls attention to a moral fear which finds its expression in the whole range of literature about the younger generation. While in no way attempting to belittle the dangers which beset our modern civilization the editor seeks to direct attention to a literature of hope. This literature has not been as widely heralded, is not as plainly labeled, but its idealism and spiritual value should help us to face the future with a calmer spirit.

The Christian Reconstruction of Industry

Better for a nation that its industries were cast into the depths of the sea than that it should build its prosperity upon the underpaid labor of women and children or should increase commodities at the cost of worn-out workers and impoverished homes

By SAMUEL ZANE BATTEN

The Nature of Industry

WHAT are we here for? What is the meaning and mission of man's life? What is the great purpose that God is working out in our world? These are among the chief questions of life; and upon the answer depend a hundred other questions. These questions were never more insistent and vital than now, when so many partial views are contending for first place. In the words of a recent editorial in The Literary Review: "The plain truth is that as a civilization we are less sure of where we are going, where we want to go, how and for what we wish to live, than at any intelligent period of which we have full record."

The purpose of God in our world as that purpose is revealed in the processes of life and defined in the revelation he has made, is that of training conscious beings in the divine art of living together. Men according to the Scriptures are made for fellowship; and men according to the sociologist are made by fellowship. Men according to the Scriptures are set the task of subduing the earth and making its resources serve the common life; all this is a task which can be fulfilled only in and through cooperation. Men are charged first to seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness; and that means, for one thing, that they are to organize human relations according to the will of God. In the last analysis these two things are but aspects of the one purpose.

The Purpose

There are many ways of interpreting the meaning and function of the various institutions of society. But in the last analysis it is found that they are all so many experiments in the divine art of living together. They are all so many efforts to achieve the conquest of the earth and the fulfillment of man's true life. These institutions one and all exist that they may express and promote cooperation and fellowship. They are here that they may be realms in which the life of the kingdom is revealed and that they may be means through which the kingdom is realized. These two ends are the final test of the success or failure of every life and of any institution. Whenever any method or process of any organization or institution works against fellowship and breaks men into hostile groups, we must say that it misses the mark and is proved defective. In so far as any institution in its organization, methods and processes makes for righteousness and promotes fellowship, can we say that it serves the kingdom and finds its true end. In season and out of season we must keep these ends before ourselves. Ever and forever we must bring all institutions to the test of this standard that we may know how far they are serving man and seeking the kingdom of God. In the last analysis these institutions are all under the same law and have the same mission. They are to carry forward that purpose which moved Jesus up Calvary.

The Acute Question

In our time the industrial question has become very acute and disturbing. It is in the industrial world that we find much of the unrest in our time; it is here that there is most confusion and strife. It is essential, therefore, that we consider the meaning and function of industry, that we note any maladjustments and defects. It is necessary further, that we understand the principles of a satisfactory and Christian industrial order and have a sense of direction in thought and effort. It is here among these questions that the greatest confusion exists. It is in dealing with these questions that Christianity faces its strongest challenge and wins or loses the day for the kingdom of God. The church which is here to interpret the purpose of God and to train men in kingdom service, has a vital obligation in this field.

I. The Needs of Man. Man as we know him has certain constant and imperious needs. This is so of all men whether savage or civilized. The needs of primitive man may be few and low in the scale; but they must be met. He must have food, clothing and shelter. But as man advances and society becomes more complex, other needs make their insistent demand. These needs may be more spiritual and intangible than the primitive and physical needs; but they are no less essential to civilized man. In fact it may be said that the degree of progress of a person or a people is measured by the number and variety of these needs. The more life the more needs.

Our Daily Bread

In the Lord's prayer men are taught to pray that God's name may be hallowed, God's kingdom may come, and his will may be done,—on earth as in heaven. Then implied and involved in this are certain requests which have reference to man and to society. The first of these deals with the primary needs of man: "Give us day by day our daily bread." It is therefore God's will that his children shall have sufficient food for their lives. "Seek ye first the kingdom and its righteousness"; he charges men; the advance of the kingdom carries the assurance of all other things that are necessary. It is God's will that men shall have all things that are to maintain life at the kingdom level.

God's Method

But God follows a law and method in this work of supplying the needs of his children. According to the Scriptures man is placed in this world to subdue nature and acquire dominion over its forces. He is placed in a garden to plant and till it that he may have bread to eat. Nothing is given to man ready made; nothing worth having comes to him without labor. He must till the ground and reap the grain; he must bake the bread and set the table. Not only so; but commodities must be carried from the place where they are produced, to the place where they are needed. As society progresses there must be division of labor; and some men will till the ground, others will mine coal, still others will transport commodities and distribute them to the people. In this process many persons and factors are involved. Thus we have the merchant and the retail dealer. Beyond this we must include all of those factors which train workers, create conditions favorable to trade, and promote the smooth working of industry.

Increasing Wants

Man, as we know, has not been willing to live on a primitive plane and satisfy the most elementary needs of food and shelter. He is spirit, and so he has wants of the soul. His wants increase as he rises in the scale. Civilization may mean the satisfaction of wants; but in a true sense it means an increase of wants. But man has not been content to meet his needs in the most primitive and haphazard way. He has set his wits to work and has invented all kinds of tools. He has not been content to create commodities by hand, but has invented all kinds of machinery and for all purposes. He has then geared up his machinery to the cosmic energies of the universe and has made those energies carry his message and run his motor.

One other fact may be noted, showing how this process has developed and become more complex. The time was when men were content to meet and to barter. But as society becomes more complex and as man's needs multiply, this process is found to be inadequate. By a natural process well described by students of economic history, the whole complicated system of modern commerce and finance has developed.

This in brief outline is the method of God in meeting the needs of his children. He never feeds his children by dropping the loaves from heaven served on a china plate, all baked and ready to eat. He requires men to cultivate the ground, prepare the food, build their houses, weave their clothing. He supplies the needs of his people by furnishing the soil and seed, the sunshine and rain, then sending people to cultivate the ground and prepare the food. At one end of the process is the loving Father; all along the line are men who cooperate with God and give food to their fellows. God ordains the end in daily bread for all, and he ordains also the means in labor and trade.

The Industrial Order

This enables us to understand the place of the industrial factor and its relation to the will of God. In a general way the industrial order includes all of the factors that enter into the production and manufacture, the sale and distribution of commodities. As sometimes used the term signifies simply the manufacturing system of modern times. But the term can hardly be used in this restricted sense: rather it describes the complex system of production and distribution and thus includes many factors and processes. It includes the services of the farmer and miller, the miner and mechanic; it includes also the services of the railroad worker and the storekeeper, the errand boy and the teacher. In fine, it includes all of the factors that enter into the production and distribution of commodities.

This suggests the place of industry in the life of man. It is necessary for us to note the meaning and method of industry.

II. The Nature of Industry. Four aspects of this may be noted. With these before us we shall have a full rounded conception of this most important factor.

GOD never feeds his children by dropping the loaves from heaven served on a china plate, all baked and ready to eat. He requires men to cultivate the ground, prepare the food, build their houses, weave their clothing. He supplies the needs of his people by furnishing the soil and seed, the sunshine and rain, then sending people to cultivate the ground and prepare the food. At one end of the process is the loving Father; all along the line are men who cooperate with God and give food to their fellows. God ordains the end in daily bread for all, and he ordains also the means in labor and trade.

(a) Industry is a collective effort, a cooperative enterprise. In every industry of any size we find a number of persons and processes united in one organization and cooperating toward one end. In the past, before the invention of the steam engine and the development of the factory system, industry was conducted on a small scale. There might be a number of individual owners and workers collected in one place; but each particular establishment was limited. In our modern system, with large scale production and hundreds of workers, the process is much more complex and the division of labor is carried to the extreme. It is evident that there must be cooperation on the part of all parties if industry is to be productive. It is evident that the quiet and effective working of industry must depend upon the hearty cooperation and coordination of every worker and of every process. Each person is necessary, and we can hardly say that one is more necessary than the other. In a factory there must be firemen and loom fixers, and there must be superintendents and bookkeepers. Managers and workmen must work together, neither can get along without the other. Trouble at any one point means trouble all along the line. A strike of boilermen or pattern makers may mean the stoppage of a whole industry. In a sense each industry is a world within itself, a society within a social whole. It is an experiment in cooperation. It is a collective effort, a cooperative enterprise.

Interdependence of All

What was true in the case of a single industry—that it is a collective effort, a cooperative enterprise—is even more true in the case of industry as a whole. The quiet and satisfactory working of all the various industries in the industrial world depends upon the cooperation of all these. In the most real sense modern industry has become a collective effort that depends at every step of the way upon the complete coordination of all partial industries. Each depends upon all and all depend upon each. Trouble and stoppage at one point means loss and disaster all along the line. A disagreement of coal miners and operators may mean stoppage and loss in a thousand industries and hunger and cold in millions of homes. There is thus no isolated business. Every single industry is a part of the whole industrial process.

Industry a Partnership

Three things are evident; no one man or group can live unto itself and make its own interests supreme. As it is a part of the whole process it must cooperate with all others and find its good in the good of all. It is necessary that all parties in industry have the spirit of cooperation and learn to think in collective terms. Industry, we may say, is a partnership, and the partnership idea and the partnership spirit must actuate all parties. Industry finds its true meaning and makes its largest contribution to society as fast and as far as the cooperative spirit and method are dominant. As every one knows, we are far from this cooperative and socialized industry today; and this lies at the bottom of much of the social confusion. Too often each little group within an industry considers its own interests and has little regard for the common interest. Too often, also, each industry wants to make its own laws and carry on its operations without reference to other industries or the welfare of the public. We have made great gains in socialization; otherwise society would be chaos and nothing could grow. But much yet remains to be done in order that industry may be fully socialized and may realize its true meaning.

This enables us to state one part of the meaning of industry. It is fellowship of people working together. Its method is association. Its spirit is cooperation.

(b) Service the function of industry. Man has essential human needs; and industry includes the factors whereby those needs are met. The function of industry is service. Industry is the divine means in achieving divine ends. It exists for the sake of man and not merely for its own sake. It must have regard for human life in its methods, its processes and results. Three aspects of this may be briefly noted here.

Not Selfish Gain

Much of our trouble today is due to a false conception of industry. Men have forgotten or they have never seen the true meaning of industry; and so they have made it a means of selfish gain. This is due in part to the natural selfishness of men; to their love of wealth, their desire to obtain some kind of distinction. But in part it is due to some of the erroneous teaching of the past. The older science of economics concerned itself with the laws having to do with the production and exchange of wealth. This science was staked off by itself and men were told that it must be independent of all others. Thus we are told that economics has nothing to do with ethics. Its laws deal with the production of commodities and ethics must keep away. Another, himself a teacher of economics, writes: "Political economy has to do with no other subject than wealth. The economist may be also a social philosopher, a moralist or a statesman; but not on that account should the several subjects be confounded. The more strictly the several branches of inquiry are kept apart, the better it will be for each and all. It is not strange that industry should be regarded as an end in itself and that wealth should be the one end for which it exists. Wealth has been the beginning, the motive, the end of the whole process. Men were regarded as means to this end and were rated simply by their money value. It ought to be evident that this is an utter inversion of standards and turns moral standards upside down."

Common Advantage

For a second thing, industry is a means of common advantage rather than of personal gain. Industry, we have seen, is a partnership, and this demands that all parties should share as partners. The whole conception of industry is perverted when any party makes it a means of purely selfish gain and takes a disproportionate share of the product. Industry exists that it may serve the common good, and it misses its end when it is conducted for the advantage of a few.

Well-Being of All

The third thing is this: Industry must be so conducted as to serve the well-being of all parties. This means many more things than we can note here. But it means that industry must serve man in all of its methods and processes. Industry must take into account the human costs of production. We must know whether the industrial process grinds up men and women simply for the sake of commodities and dividends. We must know whether industries deprive children of education and opportunity and whether they wear out women and send them to untimely graves. We must know whether the wheels of industry are reddened with blood because it costs a little to install safety devices. Better for a nation that its industries were cast into the depths of the sea, than that it should build its prosperity upon the underpaid labor of women and children or should increase commodities at the cost of worn-out workers and impoverished homes.

This enables us to state the second part of the meaning of industry; its function is service. Service must determine the motive, the methods, the processes and the results of industry. Men lay profane hands on a sacred institution when they make it a means of selfish gain.

So Little and So Much

IN that I have so greatly failed thee,
Lord,
Have grace!
And in thy outer courts deny me not
A place!

So little of fair work for thee have I
To show;
So much of what I might have done, I did Not do.

Yet thou hast seen in me at times the will
For good,
Although so oft I did not do all that I would.

Thou knowest me through and through,
and yet thou canst,
Forgive.
Only in hope of thy redeeming grace
I live.

—John Oxenham.

(c) Industry is a means through which men achieve divine ends. We can simply suggest some of the things that are implied in this. It is God's will that his people shall have daily bread. He has ordained that men shall labor in order that they may eat. The industrial order includes all of the factors that enter into the production and distribution of commodities. What does all this mean? It means this, for one thing; that every man is to have some congenial and useful work; it means that he shall have sufficient income from his labor to give him all things needful; it means that no one shall have less than his share of the product; and it certainly means that no one shall have more than he has fairly earned by his own labor.

Bread For All

It is the Father's will that all of his children shall have daily bread; it is therefore the duty of all men who believe in the will of God, to create such a social and industrial order as will enable every person to earn and eat his daily bread without scantiness and without anxiety. This applies to people in our own land and to people in other lands. We can ensure men daily bread by creating industrial conditions which give men work and adequate income. We can feed the hungry of China and India by teaching people how to reforest the hills, build irrigation ditches, enrich the soil and conduct business. They who are engaged in this work are engaged in a truly Christian and spiritual work.

Living Without Anxiety

It is God's will that his people should be freed from needless temptations and be delivered from evil. The Master charges men to be not anxious about the morrow; sufficient unto each day are its own evils. But in our present order it is practically impossible for millions of people to live without anxiety. Employment is uncertain, and the mill may shut down tomorrow. The wages of millions are so small and the margin so narrow, that any unemployment means serious loss. It would be inhuman for people to be unconcerned under these circumstances.

The moment we catch the Master's point of view all becomes plain. We are to seek God's kingdom and his justice. We are to understand the meaning of industry and keep it true to its function. If industry were kept true to its function and conducted for the welfare of all, each person would have sufficient and no one would need to be anxious.

(d) Industry exists that it may express and promote fellowship. Industry as we have said, includes all of the factors that enter into the production and distribution of commodities. It exists that it may serve essential human needs. These things must ever be kept in line; and it must be our first concern to see that industry produces commodities. Any system that is inefficient and nonproductive, by that very fact defeats the purpose of industry. The time may come when mankind may come into a surplus economy, and when less attention can be given to production and distribution. But we are very far indeed from this condition, so far as the race as a whole is concerned. In even the most advanced countries the amount of goods on hand is quite small; a few weeks' idleness all around would bring the people to famine and starvation. For a long time to come attention must be given to this aspect of industry and everything possible must be done to increase the amount of available wealth and then to secure a more equitable and satisfactory distribution.

Commodities And Fellowship

But if we stopped here we should stop short of the real meaning and higher function of industry. The purpose of God in our world is that of training human beings in the divine art of living together. The needs of men, the complex relations of life, the dependence of man on man and group upon group, all have relation to this ultimate purpose. The production of commodities is a part of the meaning and function of industry. But there is a deeper meaning and function than this. Industry exists that it may express and promote fellowship. The production of commodities is the outward and visible form of this deeper social reality.

This gives us the clue to many things in life. This enables us to read the meaning of these various relations of our being. The institutions of society all exist that they may promote fellowship. The family, the church, the state and industry, are all so many experiments in the art of living together. They are all so many means of bringing people together and teaching them how to cooperate in common ends. They all exist that they may promote unity, cooperation and fellowship; they must all be judged by the way they fulfil or defeat these great ends. In the last analysis fellowship is the meaning and end of industry no less than of the church. People are brought together as workers, managers, customers, merchants, teachers, pupils, bankers, traders, that life may touch life, that the strong may help the weak, that they may learn friendliness and practice fellowship.

The World-Conquering Christ

"Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

THE life of Christ is the type of all victorious life. He fought in the same arena in which we struggle. If you are going to live like a Christian should, you will meet the old antagonism which the world ever cherishes toward those who are not of it. You will be looked upon as "impracticable," "pharisaical," "bigoted," and "hypocritical," and all the other things designated by these pretty words! Never was an attempt made to live like Jesus Christ, but there was opposition near at hand. Never mind! "In the world ye have tribulation." Paul once said: "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." The branding iron tells to whom the slave belongs, and if the initials we bear are His, what does it matter? There need be no shame in trial unless unfaithful to the Master. The Christian man's peace is like the deep calm of the sea; there may be superficial unrest on the surface, while there is calm below. The true Christian will find himself in opposition to much of the tendency of the present day. Beware, my friend, if you find no opposition in your Christian profession today! Our hope and our strength lies in the captain of our salvation who has fought our fight for us. It was no imaginary experience which drew this psalm of victory from His lips! The world can only overcome us when it draws us away from God; when it makes us its slave; when it fills our energies; when it absorbs our desires, and when it blinds us to the things unseen but real and eternal. It is within the power of every Christian to conquer the world, to crush it down, to shake off its bonds, and to compel it to become an instrument by which he may be helped nearer to God. Friend, Christ's victory is ours. He is more to us than a mere pattern of courageous warfare. He is the Son of God, who gave himself for us, and gives himself to us, and dwells in us as our strength and righteousness. He puts his conquering power into our weakness, and fills us with his victorious spirit. This is our share and the confidence we have in him. You need be weak no longer. The man who is in Christ need not be the victim of circumstances or the slave of sin, but can live anywhere God has set him!

—ARTHUR T. FOWLER

These contacts, services, fellowships, are the very sum of life and the substance of religion.

More Fellowship Greater Production

Industry we have seen is an association of persons working together. It is a very complex process and brings many people into more or less close or distant relations. Every contact is a means of association. Every association recognizes a relationship. Every relationship demands personal fellowship. Every relation of life should both express fellowship and strengthen fellowship. In industry we have all kinds of persons associated in all kinds of ways. It is not enough for persons to come into contact and be associated in various ways. It is necessary that these contacts be human and personal and that the associations be just and brotherly. Men are associated in industry as workers and managers that they may know one another and may practice fellowship. Industry includes so many different people, so many different kinds, that it may teach them how to take thought for one another and thereby promote brotherhood. A mill exists not that a lot of people may be given work and some men may grow rich. A mill exists that it may bring different people together and train them in cooperation. Industry has missed its meaning when it fails to be a fellowship. Industry is wrong in its methods and organization when these break fellowship and set man against man. Fellowship is the primary meaning of industry; and though it may be productive in goods, yet if it breaks fellowship it has really failed. As a matter of fact industry will never be most successful in producing commodities till it has become a real fellowship. Industry is not more than 30 per cent efficient today, according to the engineers; and the reason is that industry lacks fellowship and does not know how to be efficient.

Industry Defined

We are now in a position to gather up the threads and give a definition of industry. Industry is a fellowship of people working together to serve essential human needs. (a) It is a fellowship in which men unite in a common task. (b) It demands the cooperation of all in a common end. (c) It exists that it may serve basic and essential needs and may contribute to the common welfare. (d) It is a means for the expression of the spirit of cooperation, service and brotherhood. Its method is association. Its function is service. Its processes must be human. Its end must be the welfare of all.

Baptists in Action

By ALBERT L. SCOTT, Chairman of the General Board of Promotion

WHEN an army goes into action, there has gone before, careful drill and preparation; the strategy involved has been thoughtfully matured; and, in-so-far as possible, every contingency has been considered. Action means that there is something specific to do—an enemy must be turned back, a siege lifted, a fortress captured or a line of communication held.

Once more we Baptists are called into action; an action so great, with lines so far flung and issues so tremendous, that every Baptist called to this service thrills to the opportunity.

More than two years of drill, of preparation, of prayer—yes, even of mistakes have gone before this present action, in developing that great dream of faith—the New World Movement. Our strategy has become perfected by experience, but its beginning occurred at Denver in 1919 when the denomination first received that great historic report known as "The Survey," and learned for the first time as Baptists of the need of a world. The adoption of that report and the launching of the program to meet its requirements marked us Baptists as people of vision and courage and makes us all proud of the name we bear. We rose to our opportunity and prepared to preach Christ to the world, as we had never done before.

That program, startling in its daring, wonderful in its cooperation, warming our hearts to a new faith in our Master and each other, has now been before us for nearly three years. Under its stimulus great things have been attempted, more have been brought to a new vision of opportunity and we Baptists have felt an elbow to elbow solidarity we never before experienced. In addition more has been done for foreign missions, for home missions, for city missions, for the state conventions, for our schools and for our churches, than we ever dreamed of in the "good old days."

The story of the blessings of God poured out on us since the New World Movement began is like the story of the blessings of apostolic days. Missionaries have gone forth and converts have come to the feet of the Master by thousands, hospitals have been strengthened, and God's grace exemplified by the ministry of healing. Schools have been supported and Christian men and women have been sent forth in increasing numbers to preach Christ in their own tongue to their own people. The work of our great Home Mission Society has been blessed among Indians, Negroes, and the strangers here at home. State conventions, city mission societies and our schools have undertaken work more varied, more far-reaching and more vital than ever before. Our board of education has put university pastors in many of our great universities, and we have reached students with the Christian message in greater numbers and more effectively than ever before. And men have responded to the call of the ministry from state university and denominational college in numbers and in quality. There is no doubt about it, God is behind the New World Movement. We recall his promise with our hearts aglow:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house and prove me now herewith, saith

A Cycle of Prayer

Special topic for emphasis during October: Stewardship of talents, time, mind, money.

Our Work and Workers at Home

22nd day—Negroes.
23rd day—Indians.
24th day—Orientals.
25th day—Alaskans and Mormons.
26th day—Latin Americans.
27th day—Europeans.
28th day—Rural and Mining Communities.

"Evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud; and he shall hear my voice."

the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the window of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

We have not brought all the tithes into the storehouse, either of time or money or thought, but God has more than kept his part of the promise and from all over our wide territory come reports of blessings from his hands.

But now comes the call again to advance. Half way through! Missionaries must return to their fields; our great enterprises at home must go on. The battle line for Christianity is in America. If we do our part the world may be won for Christ. Shall we falter now? Let us go forward into action.

Every great military campaign must have its basic conditions right. For one thing there must be no suspicion in a great army. Each regiment must have confidence in the other regiments. All must cooperate and suffer and die, if need be, for each other. So with us. We must believe in each other. We must remember that we have all been bought by the same price, that we are the bond-servants of the same Master. Therefore, we must not stop to criticize or find fault. Let us search our own hearts first and then let us believe that brethren far removed from us are true to the faith and are doing their part as well as we. It is a long way in miles from Maine to California, or from Minnesota to West Virginia; but we Baptists can bridge the distance and must bridge it by a divine gleam of sympathy and understanding with each other. Brethren, let us have faith in ourselves and one another.

Napoleon said that an army travels on its stomach. It must be well fed. So must we. We must be fed on the facts of our great enterprise. We must know where our great advances are being made in the foreign field and of our successes and failures at home. We need spiritual food to sustain us, food like that which our Saviour had at Samaria, the refreshing which comes from service. As a denomination we have done and are attempting great things for God. As individuals in the denomination we think too much of our local church and know very little about what is being done elsewhere. Let us study and pray and learn, let us push back our spiritual horizon and let us see visions of what we can do in action together.

Cromwell's Ironsides, the greatest fighting unit in history, spent much time in prayer before a battle, and then fought like demons. The spirit of the Ironsides is what we need. Baptists have a special need for the clear thinking which comes from prayer. Let us take time to think about the great principles for which we stand; the freedom of the local church, the competency of each person to approach his Maker; and our personal loyalty to our Saviour and Redeemer; and then, having thought and prayed our way through, let us fight a good fight, to make the truth as we see it prevail. Society needs the message of us Baptists. In a world where many people confuse ecclesiasticism, or church-going, with religion, piano players and victrolas for music, and memorizing the catechism for a change of heart, clear-thinking Baptists, who emphasize spiritual verities, are needed.

So let us advance into action—full of confidence in each other, energized by a knowledge of our past and of our destiny, and fresh from our knees, that God may continue to honor our work. Let us go forward together in his name to fight the good fight of faith and to bring the knowledge of the love of God to men. And may all Baptists be "Baptists in action," in this great cooperative enterprise to which we have dedicated ourselves.

The Girls of India

By W. H. DUFF

If we are ever to reach the Indians of Burma, we must train the Indian girls who are to be the future mothers of the land. In order to do so we must have a girls' school, for the Indian will not permit his daughter to be in the presence of any male person other than a near relative after she has left early childhood. Therefore we must have lady teachers and a school entirely separate from that of the boys if we are to reach any great percentage of the Indian girls.

There are many things to point to the fact that Indian parents are seeing the light in regard to the fact that their daughters as well as their sons must be given a worthy education. About three months ago as superintendent of the Union Hall School, I had a letter from an Indian lady who is the president of the Indian Women's Association, which is made up of a few educated Indian women (Christian and non-Christian). She urged me to open the high-school department of the girls' department of our school (until this year we have had only a seventh standard school for girls) and assured me that if we would do so we would have the support of the entire Indian community in the matter of sending their daughters.

Rangoon is an Indian city, 65 per cent of the entire population being Indian. There are nearly three times as many Indians in Rangoon as there are Burmese, yet for years we have had a splendidly equipped school for Burmese girls. Surely the need is great—even unsurpassed—for Rangoon is fast becoming a great modern city.

A Wanderer Abroad

III. Oxford in 1922

By ARTHUR T. FOWLER

"The Spires of Oxford"

WHAT is next to Oxford on a clear, still evening in June, except it be one in July this year! The serpentine and silvery reaches of Isis and Cherwell were never more beautiful. The copious rainfall had clothed all nature in living green. The "meadows" with moon daisies, beds of heliotrope, delphiniums and roses were never more gay in summer dress. The trill of unseen birds in the trees, and the fragrance of new-mown hay steal over one as a mystic influence at the close of a summer day.

As the readers of THE BAPTIST are aware Oxford is one of the two intellectual shrines (An Oxonian would tell you the only and the oldest!) over here. As someone has said it is the home of "oldest creeds and newest fads" no doubt in this lies its fascination—mystic yet pragmatic, ancient yet modern. Perhaps nothing describes Oxford better than the famous lines of Matthew Arnold, "Beautiful city, so venerable, so lovely, so unravaged by the fierce intellectual life of this century, so serene, yet steeped in sentiment as she lies, spreading her gardens to the moonlight, and whispering from her towers, the last enchantment of the Middle Age; who will deny that Oxford, by her ineffable charm, keeps ever calling us nearer to the true goal of all of us—to the ideal, to perfection, to beauty, which is only truth seen from another side." Apart from all the beauty of phrase of this oft-quoted eulogy, never was the spirit of Oxford more finely caught, or the place itself more happily epitomized. In spite of what many say, concerning its enervating and sleepy influence, every stone in the gray walls of its colleges and every blade in the incomparable green sward of its "gardens" is charged with the stimulus of hope, encouragement and life. There is an added charm in seeing the old city out of term time. When there are no caps and gowns, no races and social festivities, it is then one realizes how real the place is and how fragrant it is with the memories of the past. Not only, however, is this seen in stone darkened by age, but in Wolsey's elms strong and verdant; in window arched and quaint, with its window box filled with flaming scarlet geraniums, edged with the contrasting blue of the lobelia.

After visiting Oxford, our own Hawthorne once said that the world has no other place like it, it is a despair to see such a spot and ever to leave it, for it would take a lifetime, and more than one, to comprehend and to enjoy it satisfactorily.

On the surface Oxford stands much as in the past—the colleges, the Bodleian, the Magdalen Tower, St. Marys and Christ churches. Last night "Great Tom" tolled out the hour of nine o'clock, as it has done for centuries now, intimating that the colleges must close their gates. It always sends a thrill to hear the "boom" of the one hundred and one strokes on the still air of a summer evening. But underneath, Oxford is different. She has gone through a great experience. The war has left its scar. At the upper end of old St. Giles is the memorial cross in early Gothic. It reminds us of those who sealed their devotion with their

*I SAW the spires of fair Oxford, as I was passing by,
The hoary spires of lov'd Oxford, against a pearl-grey sky:
My heart was with the Oxford men who went abroad to die!
The years go fast in old Oxford,—the happy years and gay;
The hoary colleges look down on careless boys at play.
But, when the bugle sounded war, they put their games away!
They left the peaceful river, the cricket-field, the "quad";
The shaven laicns of Oxford, to seek a bloody sod.
They gave their merry youth away for country and for God.
God rest you, merry gentlemen, who laid your brave lives down;
Who chose the kha'ki and the gun instead of cap and gown!
God bring you to a fairer place than even Oxford town!*

lives, many of whom were the finest flower of British life and traditions. I do not know whether there was purpose in it. I presume not, but it is at least suggestive that at the opposite end of St. Giles is the Martyrs Memorial—Ridley, Latimer, and Cranmer, who gave their lives that the candle of liberty—the English Bible—might never be put out!

Of course one could go on indefinitely concerning the things to be seen, but that is not my purpose, the guide books do that. Among the myriad of sights that appeal to me are two—the great hall of Christ church approached by its fine and beautiful staircase, whose delicate fan of the glories of the college. Then there roof, springing from a single pillar is one is Magdalen College with its glorious tower facing us on High Street, a lofty structure of exquisite proportions, one of the most graceful perpendicular towers in all England. Yes, there is one other! Under the southeast wall and outside of the chancel of Christ Church Chapel and Cathedral is a small cemetery with a wall enclosure. It is entered through a small door from inside the cathedral. This is not shown to tourists. It is a beautiful spot. The fragrance of roses and other flowers pervade the air. Here are the graves, among others of E. B. Pusey, S. R. Driver, and Sanday, for it is the burial place of the deans and professors of the cathedral and college. On one side two stories up is the leaded window of Dr. Sanday's study. Through it he could look down upon the grave of his wife who preceded him into the larger life. He now lies in the same grave with her. Today, the sun shining sent a shaft of light upon this hallowed spot and it seemed filled with the glory of the Eternal!

"Beautiful Oxford whispering from her towers the last enchantment of the Middle Age," in this Matthew Arnold has not said a word too much. She has enchanted every beholder down through the centuries as one of the most beautiful of English cities.

A New Dormitory at Sendai, Japan

GIRLS begging to learn American ways, to sing, to speak English; girls studying until dark after a long school day, and again with tutors in the evening in order to pass the entrance examinations; girls insisting on living packed four or five in a windowless room rather than be turned away—hundreds of these finest girls of Northern Japan have to be bitterly disappointed because there is not dormitory room to care for them in our Mission School at Sendai.

Mrs. E. M. White visited the school at Sendai, and the memory of these girls turning broken-heartedly away, and of Miss Mary Jesse almost worn out by the strain of having to say, "No," with long conferences to convince each one that there really was no room—would not let her sleep nights until she had done something about it.

Mrs. White's understanding generosity has made it possible, through the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society to start building a dormitory—this long-prayed for dormitory which has been the only thing holding back a wonderful expansion of this school recognized by the Japanese government as a leader, and visited by them as a model—this dormitory which, as Miss Jesse, the principal, says, is the biggest evangelistic asset the school has, as it is the dormitory girls who first become Christians. Every girl in the last class to graduate was a baptized Christian.

Mrs. Mary G. Safford—for twenty-five years the greatly loved foreign secretary, first of the Woman's Baptist Foreign Mission Society, with headquarters at Boston, and later of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, after the union of the two societies, East and West,—is to be honored by having the dormitory bear her name.

Friends of Mrs. Safford who have heard of Mrs. White's gift, have asked to help in the erection of this building which is to make Mrs. Safford's name a word lovingly spoken by the eager girlhood of Northern Japan, meaning to them the best that America has to give them, and the best that the world has to give them in the teachings of Christ.

Mrs. White's gift was enthusiastically accepted at the last meeting of the executive and finance committee of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the news cabled to Japan so that there might be great rejoicing at the celebration in November of the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the school.

Prohibition Again

By HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

ONLY the first engagement in the fight to end drink has been fought. The most difficult part of the battle is yet to be won. Hence it behooves all lovers of their fellowmen to be awake, alert, ready to meet propaganda with facts, and firm to uphold the right, both in private life, and as a citizen at the polls.

The main question is, Will it really work? If we can once show that, the opposition will gradually die down. Evidence accumulates that in spite of half-hearted enforcement and much evasion of the law, prohibition is actually working—conferring wonderful benefits.

Let us call physicians to the witness stand. Dr. Woods Hutchinson gives it as his own estimate that the actual amount of liquor consumed by the whole community has been cut down from 50 to 65 per cent. But he also says that the estimates given by other physicians in attendance upon the meetings of the National Medical Association, was from 80 to 95 per cent.

The remarkable decline in the death rate of the whole country that has occurred since prohibition went into effect is attributed in no small degree to the decrease in the consumption of alcoholic liquor. In three years, from 1917 to 1920, it fell from 142 to 123 per thousand, an annual saving of over 200,000 lives.

Dr. W. J. V. Deacon, of the Michigan Health Bureau, shows that in 1917, there were 255 deaths from alcoholism, in 1921, only 94. "Michigan," he says, "would never have been able to reduce its tuberculosis death rate from 931 per 150,000 in 1917, to 716 in 1921, if the Eighteenth Amendment had not been enacted."

The former health commissioner of Chicago is not less explicit in his testimony. He says "There is medical evidence in the files of the American Medical Association that cirrhosis of the liver, heat strokes, and certain types of accidents have been lessened by prohibition—the deaths from heat strokes in Chicago were only 26 in 1921, as compared with 535 in 1916, though comparing the summer of 1921, with that of 1916, we find that the former was much hotter."

In Wisconsin the statistics gathered by the state board of health show in 1916, that 15 per cent of all the male patients in the state hospitals for the insane were suffering from alcoholic insanity. In 1918, this dropped to 115 per cent, in 1919, to 7 per cent, and 1921, to 2.7 per cent.

If we turn from the field of medicine to finance we find an equally strong showing. In spite of the financial depression the savings bank deposits have shown remarkable increase since prohibition went into effect. Mr. Bird V. Spencer, president of the People's Bank and Trust Company of Passaic, N. J., says: "I know it to be a fact that a great deal of the money that was spent in saloons is now deposited in savings accounts. I know this also to be a fact, that the savings deposits in this city last year increased by $1,500,000."

Says F. N. Briggs, president of the Interstate Trust Co. of Denver, Colo.: "Savings deposits have increased more than 33 1/3 per cent. Families are better cared for, homes better taken care of, women and children are better dressed, men are saving their money and becoming better citizens."

Many have the impression that crime is rampant under prohibition. This is because the newspapers try to give that impression by featuring every occasion of law-breaking. The cold light of facts, as shown by the records of arrests, tell another story. This shows that the total arrests for crime have been decreased in every section of the country. Judge Gemmill of the Municipal Court of Chicago has been for twenty years collecting the statistics of crime. He shows that in 1917, there were in the Bridewell prison of Chicago 17,748 prisoners. In 1921, there were only 9,653 commitments—a decrease of 8,095. In Salt Lake City, the state prison has only 129 prisoners as against 297 in 1916. In Seattle they have a jail population of only 95 at present as against 300 in 1916. In Pittsburgh, Pa., there are 840 cells, and in the days before prohibition there were sometimes as many as 940 prisoners. Today 315 cells are empty. Ninety per cent of the jails in the United States have been empty since prohibition, and in 80 per cent of them the number of prisoners has been reduced from 15 to 80 per cent.

The big retail stores of the country are a pretty good barometer in the matter of social and economic conditions. Their testimony is well nigh unanimous regarding the effect of prohibition. Mr. S. S. Kresge, head of the chain of ten-cent stores, says: "After seeing prohibition tried for a number of years in some of our states, and now for two years under national law, I am convinced that it is the only practical solution of the problem of intemperance."

R. B. Patterson, one of the great merchants of Spokane, testifies that the good effects of prohibition began to be evident almost immediately after the enactment of the law.

Col. Leslie Huffman of Denver, Colorado, a real estate man, says that if prohibition were put to vote today 90 per cent of the men in his line of business would vote in favor. Men are buying homes with the money that used to go for booze.

Light, Not Lightning

By FRANK RECTOR

CHRIST'S prediction of the overthrow of Judaism, the fall of the temple and the end of the age, contains this statement: "As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." This has been taken to mean that our Lord's manifestation will be sudden, unexpected, startling and cataclysmic. That will be a day of violence, tragic fears and consternation to a wayward world.

But it has not occurred to many of us that thunderstorms in the Holy Land, with their accompanying lightnings, do not come from the east but from the west. Why, then, did Christ misstate a fact concerning storms in Palestine? The Bible is surprisingly accurate and trustworthy in its references to geographical points, the heavenly bodies and the phenomena of nature. It is a safe guide for the traveler, the student of floral life and the historian. But our translation of the first gospel seems to involve our Master in error. The solution of this difficulty is easy. The word here rendered "lightning" is the same term which Luke uses to describe the bright shining of a lamp. It thus appears that the Greek word may signify either lightning or light.

Remember also that the Scriptures describe the storms of that country as coming from the west. Elijah's servant looked out over the Mediterranean and saw a cloud like a man's hand rising in the west. Jesus told the Jews that when a cloud rises out of the west there cometh a shower. With this agree the books on Palestine. While in that land last March I asked a half dozen men in that country from which direction came their thunderstorms, and their uniform answer was that their thunder and lightning came from the west.

Now we are ready for the significance of our Lord's words in which he described the manner of his manifestation. Not as a flash of lightning, sudden, blinding, alarming and destructive, limited and not lasting, but like the coming of the shining of the light of the morning would be his coming. That in every land is the quarter of the heavens where mornings appear. The sun rises in the east. It spreads without noise or consternation across the zones and along the parallels at the rate of a thousand miles an hour. Its advent is irresistible. The light awakens a sleeping world, scatters the gloom of night, paints the flowers and matures our harvests. Likewise comes the kingdom of our Lord. As the day has its birth in the east and sweeps around the world, so the manifestation of the Saviour is to spread around the whole earth.

Fill A Ship of Fellowship Number Two

The board of managers of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in view of urgent and imperative appeals for clothing relief for Russia this winter has authorized another appeal to the denomination to FILL A SHIP OF FELLOWSHIP Number Two. It seems to us as we look back that the whole-hearted, spontaneous, abounding response to the call last year was one of the bright spots in the year's work. Its reaction upon the churches was altogether out of proportion to the amount of money or its equivalent raised. The bonds of human and Christian fellowship were strengthened and good will promoted. The cold and desolate were made glad. The time is short. Read the announcement on page 1191. Before any further word can reach you from the headquarters let the churches begin at once to secure the goods which will fill to its capacity the Ship of Fellowship Number Two.

Spiritual Effeminacy

"The effeminate . . . shall not inherit the kingdom of God"—I Corinthians 6:9.

By J. D. JONES

THERE may be in this word which our English Authorized Version translates "effeminate" a hint of those deeper and darker vices that stained the ancient Greek civilization. There are some sins of which it is a shame even to speak, but those unspeakably shameful sins were freely practiced in ancient Greece; and it may be, as some of the commentators suggest, that Paul has those nameless sins in his mind here. But the word literally means "soft"—just that and nothing more, and personally I am inclined to agree with those commentators who think that the people Paul refers to here are the people given to soft, easy and luxurious living, the people who refuse to endure hardship and decline to bear a cross, who always want to lie on feathers. Of these people the apostle says this terrible thing, "The soft shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

We are not accustomed to regard softness as being such a dreadful thing. The easy, self-indulgent, comfort-loving people are oftentimes quite nice and amiable. We should never dream of classing them with drunkards and revilers and thieves and the rest. And yet the doom of the soft is the same as that of the drunkard and the adulterer,—he shall not inherit the kingdom of God. I am not at all sure that softness is not the besetting sin of our own age and time. People are guarded against these other and more flagrant sins which are mentioned round about my text by the very fact that they are so shameful, but there is no brand of shame attached to this sin of softness, and therefore multitudes go in deadly danger of it. The New Testament implies from beginning to end that a man needs a certain resoluteness and strength and courage to be a Christian. All the calls of the gospel are calls to hardship, to sacrifice, to battle. That was the call that Christ continually issued. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself daily, take up his cross and follow me."

The Soft Fall Away

It needed men of a certain resoluteness of character to follow Christ in those days. The soft invariably fell away: the course was too trying, the pace was too hot, the life was too hard. "Upon this many of his disciples went back and followed no more after him." "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world." The soft did not then inherit the kingdom of God.

And the Christian call runs no differently in this twentieth century than it did in the first. It is still a call to self-denial and to cross-bearing. The Christian life is still a gymnastic and a wrestle and a race. Whoso would live it must doff the cloak and gird on the sword. It still demands courage and steadfastness and resolution. To this day, my brethren, it remains true that the soft shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

And not only do we need this strength of character, but we need a certain decision and definiteness of thought as well. There is a softness and pliability of mind which is as perilous as softness of character. The Christian life is not possible to the man who has not certain clear and strong and definite moral convictions. The Christian life is not possible to a man to whom everything is an open question. It is a good thing to have an open mind,—but not at both ends,—but to have a soft mind, subject to every impression, receiving shape and fashion say from the latest novel or magazine article, to have a limp, soft mind of that kind is a very bad thing.

If it is real greatness we are after, if it is a holy life we are after, if it is Christian character we are after, there must be some things upon which our mind is not soft and impressionable, but hard as adamant. It must be set hard upon certain great and simple and fundamental things like these: that sin is sin always and everywhere and that nothing excuses it; that God is God; that right is right, and wrong is wrong, always and everywhere; that because God is God, the wages of sin is death always and everywhere. To have a soft mind about things like those is to imperil the whole moral life. These things are not open to question, they are not subject for debate. They must be the fixed and unchallengeable convictions of the soul, the fixed stars in our moral firmament; and it is only those who are clear and hard and uncompromising upon elementary things like those who can ever rise to noble heights of character.

A soft church shall not inherit the kingdom of God. It shall exercise no power, it shall wield no authority, it shall fail to conquer the world. What is the Christian church? The company of the lovers of the Lord. But what I am asking now really is this: What does that church exist for? Why did Christ form the church? What is the business of the church? Hugh Price Hughes used to say that the business of the church is not primarily to coddle the saints. It is not the business of the saints to have a happy time, to meet together twice on a Sunday. The business of the church is to win people for Jesus Christ. It is a sort of fighting force that the Lord has. But you can see for yourselves that a soft and easy and luxurious and comfort-loving church can never do that. The church today needs to learn that lesson.

I think sometimes that one of the great testing times of the church is upon us. The world has come to a crisis. The old civilization and social order are giving place before our very eyes, though the new one has not yet appeared. We are between two worlds, the one dead, the other waiting to be born, and what men will think of the church of Christ depends very much upon how she acts in an hour like this. If the church plays for safety,—and she may,—if she shows herself soft and easy and comfort-loving, she will earn the scorn and contempt of men; but if she shows herself a brave and heroic church she will command the devotion and enthusiastic allegiance of men. And not only will the soft church earn the scorn and contempt of men, but it will be absolutely useless for the purposes of the kingdom.

The cause of righteousness is never going to be promoted by making compromises and coming to terms with the enemy. The church that puts comfort before duty will do nothing to build the city of God. Really the call we are faced with is this: whether we Christian folk of today are willing to go without the camp bearing Christ's reproach. It is only the brave and heroic church that is going to fight the battles of the coming days. What we have really got to do is to reestablish the entire social order that has broken down, and to build it upon the lines and principles which our Lord has laid down in his holy Word. We have got to begin from the beginning to lay the foundations of a new civilization in the faith and fear of God; and the church that is willing to do that and take the risks involved in it, and that will cast away all that is of ease and comfort, will do something, it will do much, to establish Christ's rule upon the earth. But the soft church shall never inherit the kingdom of God.

A Soft Church Makes No Impression

The church that has no mighty faith, no deep, strong faith, is going to make no sort of impression upon the outside world. You must have a conviction that holds you before you can produce conviction in anyone else. A church that is soft about the deity of our Lord, of what use is it for the advancement of the kingdom? If we are soft about our Lord's deity, not quite sure about it, why should we send missionaries to the ends of the earth? We send them because we believe—and it is the only rational ground for sending them,—that Jesus Christ is not one amongst several, but he is the only, he is the absolute One. There is none other name whereby men shall be saved. He is God in the flesh. He is the only one who has made a sacrifice for sin. A church that is soft about that is absolutely useless for the purposes of the kingdom. It will never send out a missionary; as a matter of fact it doesn't. It is only a church with a mighty faith that is of any use for aggressive purposes, that will fight and struggle to make Christ king.

I am no bigot, nor do I think that I need plead guilty to the charge of narrowness, but I tell you, my brethren, I long to see the Christian church emerge from this state of genial sentimentalism and easy tolerance which has characterized it all too long, and I want to see it lay hold afresh with a great grip of the mighty apostolic gospel. Or let me put it the other way around: I want to see that mighty and apostolic gospel laying hold once again of the Christian church. I am old-fashioned enough to believe that a church with apostolic faith would in this day wield apostolic power. But the soft church shall never inherit the kingdom of God.—Northfield Conference Address, reported in the Record of Christian Work.

A Gloaming Call

SOMETIMES at close of day
As children leave their play
And dusk dips into dark;
When winds sweet-scented blow
Up from the past, for voices dear I hark;
Then this comes soft and low;
"Come in, child; for quenched is day's last spark."
Once more my feet those dewy fields do roam,
And through the gloaming shines the light of Home!

Literature and Outline Helps for Missionary Education

There is no literature more helpful for the outworking of a new international brotherhood than the life-stories of Christian missionaries

Model Missionary Libraries

ONE of the conspicuous needs of our day is a greater knowledge of missionary literature. There is no literature more influential for the outworking of a new international brotherhood than the life-stories and activities of that great host of men and women who have gone out to the ends of the earth as Christian missionaries. Acquaintance with these men and women will quicken the interest that must underlie every forward movement which is worth while. It will stir afresh the impulses of our young people to give themselves intelligently to Christian callings. It will tend to produce a new sense of Christian stewardship of money and of life.

In order to make this literature accessible to our people, the department of missionary education has made a careful study of the whole question, and after seeking the best judgment of more than a score of missionary education experts, announces a series of model missionary libraries arranged according to groups and intended to meet the needs of every department of our church life.

The libraries include from ten to fifteen books, and the Publication Society has placed a special price on each library when purchased as such.

The department of missionary education is now revising these libraries in order to make suitable substitutes for books having gone out of print, and to add the more recent books to the lists. The folder announcing these libraries has already run through three editions, and a fourth edition will shortly be issued. The libraries are listed as follows:

- No. 1. The Boys' Missionary Bookshelf, for younger boys.
- No. 2. The Boys' Missionary Bookshelf, for older boys.
- No. 3. The Girls' Missionary Bookshelf, for younger girls.
- No. 4. The Girls' Missionary Bookshelf, for older girls.
- No. 5. The Young People's Missionary Bookshelf.
- No. 6. The Women's Missionary Bookshelf. Selection "A."
- No. 7. The Women's Missionary Bookshelf. Selection "B."
- No. 8. The Men's Missionary Bookshelf. Selection "A."
- No. 9. The Men's Missionary Bookshelf. Selection "B."
- No. 10. The Sunday School Missionary Ladder. Selection "A."
- No. 11. The Sunday School Missionary Ladder. Selection "B."
- No. 12. The Pastor's Missionary Library.

A new Fireside Library will be added to the above list in the new issue.

Books in the "Model Missionary Libraries" count three points each in the National Missionary Reading Contests. Ask for the folder.

Missionary Books Edited By The Department of Missionary Education

It has been the policy of the department since its organization three years ago, to provide for our Baptist constituency special and high grade supplementary materials for general reading and especially for use by teachers and leaders in connection with the current mission study text books. By the splendid cooperation of our missionary societies, their invaluable human resources were placed at our disposal and we have been able to give to the denomination such books as "The Triumph of the Missionary Motive," a series of high grade articles by missionary secretaries and others; "Old Trails and New," by Coe Hayne, and "By-Paths to Forgotten Folks" by the same author. "The Withered Fig Tree," a stewardship book, by E. M. Poter, was also edited by the department.

Three books of special importance and value are edited by the department this year: "Race Grit," a book of exclusively Baptist material on the American Negro, by Coe Hayne; "Rock-Breakers Kingdom Building in Kongo Land," by P. H. J. Lerrigo. Since the American Negro emigrated from the Congo country, this book supplies a thorough and satisfactory background for the study of the American Negro. Another book which the department is editing is a book on India by Secretary J. C. Robbins, entitled, "Following the Pioneers"—the story of Baptist missions in Burma and India. This book presents fresh and accurate information for Baptists studying India. It will be off the press in October or November. The Judson Press is the publisher of the above books.

A Program of Missionary Education Objectives

A program of missionary education objectives was presented two years ago at the Northern Baptist Convention meetings, after having been adopted by the board of education and endorsed by the General Board of Promotion. This program called upon the churches to reach by 1924 the following goals:

As many study classes in adult groups as there are churches in the convention. As many adult reading groups as there are churches. A church school of missions and a missionary teacher training institute for every association in each state. A mission study class for every young people's society. A reading group (additional) for every young people's society. A missionary library in each young people's society. A mission study class for every World Wide Guild. A reading group (additional) for every World Wide Guild. A summer conference for each state convention.

In the carrying out of these objectives, several individual states have already determined their state missionary education goals and are consistently at work upon them. Pennsylvania has for two years set her goals and has attained splendid success to date.

Outline for Missionary Conferences

1. Fundamental Importance of Missionary Education

- (a) The missionary motive is inherent and dominant within the New Testament, which cannot otherwise be rightly understood. Missions is in the plan of God revealed in Jesus Christ, his life and his teachings.
 - (b) The world needs the benefits which Christ brings through Christian missionaries.
 - (c) The church needs the dynamic which the missionary motive furnishes. "Missions furnishes the moral equivalent of war." See book, "The Triumph of the Missionary Motive," for valuable Baptist material.
- "The missionary impulse is the response of the Christian's heart to the truth of God as seen in these three aspects:
- 1. What the Gospel is to God who gave it.
 - 2. What it is to us who have received it.
 - 3. What it is to those who have not yet received it."

2. Each Church Should Have Some Program of Missionary Education

- (a) It will furnish enthusiasm for all the work of the church.
- (b) It will help many young people to settle the question of life service.
- (c) It will help to make giving a privilege instead of a compulsion. Many churches have solved their financial difficulties with the missionary motive and materials.
- (d) The department of missionary education is prepared to help churches in making their own programs of missionary education.

3. A Program of Missionary Education Should Include:

- (a) The new missionary reading courses. See—"National Missionary Reading Contests," "Model Missionary Libraries."
 - (b) Graded missionary stories for Baptist Sunday schools.
 - (c) "The Mission Study Class" and "The Church School of Missions." The foreign study theme is "India." Books for all grades. The home study theme is "The American Negro."—Books for all grades.
- We believe that this year will witness the greatest breaking down of racial prejudice in the history of American Christianity.
- (d) Missionary plans and programs for young people. Materials supplied on request.

Does Missionary Education Pay?

May it not be that the denomination "is moving forward on the feet of little children"?

Children's World Crusade

MAY IT not be true that not only the race, but our denomination "is moving forward on the feet of little children"? Certainly the Children's World Crusade has enlisted thousands of eager learners of the progress of the kingdom of God on earth. If only those who have the power of leadership were as eager as the children! They have two fascinating books this year for their program meetings: "The Magic Box," a charming story of a Negro boy; and "The Wonderland of India," equally delightful. Both of these books lend themselves to fascinating handwork which the children love and which is valuable as an educational feature. This year they are to have an award in connection with the reading they do through their traveling libraries. Each state is to have its own traveling library of four missionary books, and a beautiful picture will be given to the crusader company that has the highest number of points to its credit.

The puzzles which appear in the Children's World Crusade Department of Missions each month are educational, and answers pour in, evidence of their fascination for the children. The memorizing of Bible passages and choice hymns is filling their minds with rich stores from which they must inevitably draw in later years.

The Children's World Crusade surprised all by the astounding amount it contributed to the Continuation Campaign last year—over $11,000, which was nearly twice its quota for the full three-year period. This year it will try to raise $2,000 through an educational and irresistible container called "The Crusade up Dollar Hill." November Missions will give a cut of the prancing steeds and crusaders on their way up the Dollar Hill, with full and definite instructions. The place the Children's World Crusade holds in the mind and heart of its constituents may be stated in this true statement of a boy about twelve years old: "The Children's World Crusade has got dancing and baseball beat a mile."

World Wide Guild

THE World Wide Guild enters upon its seventh year with 3,800 chapters and between 45,000 and 50,000 girls enrolled, enthusiastic over the educational features of its program. Miss Applegarth, has given a fine program based on the study books "Lighted to Lighten" and "In the Vanguard of a Race." The program is called "Obstacle Races" and includes poster, invitation, and dramatic suggestions. Mission study classes are growing in popularity, while the interest in the reading contest is unabated. Last year, 110 chapters qualified for the award, two of these having done so for five years; and the conditions are not easy—individual reading of five missionary books by every member of the chapter.

This year the subject for the theme contest is, "What Does Christian Education Mean to a Girl in India?" and we expect more and better themes than were submitted last year in "Race Prejudice." We are featuring story telling as part of our program meetings. "All the world loves a story" and no finer material for the romantic or heroic appeal can be found than in our missionary literature. September Missions gives some good suggestions along this line.

Plays and pageants, and simple impersonations and sketches, have done much to arouse and deepen interest in world-wide missions, and this year the study topics, India and the Negroes, afford endless opportunities for dramatic presentation.

In addition to the educational activities is the White Cross Work which affords an outlet of expression; and the Guild's share in the Continuation Campaign this second year is $16,666.

We are very happy in the appointment of Miss Helen Hobart, of California, who is to be field secretary for World Wide Guild and Children's World Crusade. Just now state rallies and week-end house parties are generating fire for the winter's work. Connecticut, Rhode Island, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Illinois, and New York are all under way, and in many other states the World Wide Guild has a place in the state convention program.

A Convincing Answer

A NOTABLE example of the fruits of missionary education is a church in Massachusetts which enjoyed the long and successful shepherding of a minister and his wife who proclaimed the missionary message of the Bible.

Here Is the Record

Three young men went into the ministry; one young woman and two young men became foreign missionaries; one young woman became a home missionary in the South; two young women became teachers in Christian schools in the South. These were all college graduates and they went into life service as the result of a patient and persistent plan of missionary cultivation on the part of this pastor and his wife.

How It Was Done

They were first trained in a mission band.

They studied missions in the Sunday school.

They were accustomed to see missionary charts and pictures and to hear missionary speakers.

They were baptized into the church by this same pastor.

They were enrolled in mission study classes.

They were sent by the church to summer conferences at Northfield and Silver Bay.

The missionary motive was kept uppermost in the entire church.

Was it worth while?

The Open Forum

"The Two New Testaments—Where Are They?"

Your editorial comment on my article, "Which New Testament?" declined by you and published by the Western Recorder of Sept. 21, and also your question, "Where may these two New Testaments be found?" calls for reply.

First, the fact that you declined my article was perfectly agreeable to me, and your explanation as to why it was declined. I accept your apologies! Permit me to recall also that the reason for declining the article given me in your office, was that it would open anew a controversy you had decided should close with the last preceding issue of THE BAPTIST, and that it wouldn't raise a dollar for missions nor help more missionaries to go, and anyway, the article didn't touch the real issue before us, for the fundamental issue was Christ and our personal relations to him. These reasons I accepted as abundant.

But I still believed that the main issue among us, as I had tried to outline it in my article, should be put before Baptists in some way, and so sent it to the Western Recorder, stating that it had been declined by THE BAPTIST, and that in connection therewith it had been said that it did not define the real issue. The editor of the Western Recorder seemed to believe that the article did define the real issue, and that may account for the acceptance of it.

In the second place, I evidently did not make my meaning in the article plain enough to be seen in one reading. Please accept my apologies! Since your readers did not read the article, it becomes necessary to say to them that the whole article dealt with two subjective attitudes rather than two objective New Testaments, but that it was phrased as you quoted it simply to bring out as forcefully as possible the vital issue created by these two mutually exclusive attitudes toward the New Testament. And yet, even so, there are two New Testaments among us, one of which has been put before us in the rationalists' "Shorter Bible," edited by Charles Foster Kent, from which has been carefully extracted every fundamental of the faith, and which is therefore not out of harmony with the attitude of some Baptists (?) toward the New Testament.

But by the two New Testaments among Baptists spoken of in my article was meant the two attitudes held toward the New Testament by two very clearly defined groups among us, one of which, according to Dr. E. D. Burton, accept the whole Bible as "the Word of God, inspired, authoritative, inerrant," and the other of which, also according to Dr. Burton, regard it as "not infallible in history or in matters of science, and not consistent and therefore not ultimately and as a whole inerrant in the field of morals and religion." In other words, one group of Baptists accept the Bible as inerrant, and another group regard it as not inerrant. It is commonly understood, of course, that this refers to the original manuscripts, which are accepted by one group as without error as they originally came from God, accompanied by the confidence that he who gave them in the first place, has preserved them to us essentially as they were given, even though the original manuscripts have been lost; while the other group does not so regard them. That is, every Baptist has one or the other of these attitudes toward the Bible. You who read these lines have one of these attitudes.

Now, brother editor, let me turn Yankee and ask you some questions, for that will help to answer those you ask me. Isn't the New Testament of the man who believes it has errors an entirely different New Testament, for both doctrinal and practical purposes, from that of the man who believes it is inerrant? Doesn't the man who takes the New Testament as the inerrant Word of God get one kind of doctrine and practice out of it, and doesn't the one who regards it as the fallible history of the religious evolution of the race get the very opposite kind of doctrine and practice out of it? And doesn't that give these men what are to them two different New Testaments? And isn't it a fact that there are two mutually exclusive programs of missionary, evangelistic and educational endeavor bidding for dominance in denominational life, due precisely to these two irreconcilable attitudes toward the New Testament? And isn't this and nothing else the cause of the present confusion among us, and of our partial defeat in our missionary work? Doesn't all this and much more trace back to what are practically two New Testaments?

This was the fundamental thing I was driving at in my article. Was I right? Or is my statement, confirmed by Dr. Burton, that some of us have an inerrant New Testament, while others have one marred by errors, "built on a pure assumption for polemic aims, and saturated with fallacy?" And if these two attitudes are a fact and not a fallacy, then which New Testament did the Indianapolis action commit us to as sufficient for faith and practice; the one that has errors, or the one that has not? Indeed, a lot of Baptists would like to know which attitude THE BAPTIST holds. Not, "Do you believe the New Testament is inspired?" but, "Do you believe it is inerrant?" For there are some who say it is inspired, who yet say it has errors.

In the last place, brother editor, I do not believe you want to side-step the real issue, but if Christ and our relation to him is the fundamental issue, and not an inerrant Bible, as was said to me in your office, then I want to ask immediately, what Christ? In the nature of things, he must be the Christ of some one's testimony, for he cannot be an issue with me, nor the Christ of my experience, until he is first the Christ I hear about. So the Christ of what testimony? Of that of the New Testament? If so, then of a New Testament marred by errors, or of one that is inerrant? Of man's fallible, or of God's infallible, testimony? For it makes a difference as wide apart as heaven and hell.

This pushes us back to the Bible, and makes it, any way we can fix it, the fundamental issue among us, and the one that therefore must be settled before we can get rid of our confused and unsettled condition, and before we can bring victory out of partial defeat in our missionary work. Yes, and the settlement of this issue right will raise more money for missions and get more missionaries to the field.

J. E. CONANT.

HE IS AGAINST SCHISM

It is not necessary for me to tell you that I am a fundamentalist in belief. You are no doubt aware of that from my previous correspondence with you. But while I am a fundamentalist (and proud of it) I am not in sympathy with the new Baptist Bible Union of America fathered by Dr. Neighbor and Dr. Van Osdel.

With all due respect to these two good pastors, this new movement looks to me like a deliberate plot to split the Baptist denomination and eventually organize a new sect or a new Northern convention.

In my humble opinion the New Baptist Bible Union is unnecessary. The Baptist denomination is one big Bible Union, and we do not need a special organization to foster devotion to God's word, whose aim is not Christian loyalty to God's word but a narrow, intolerant, bigoted sectarian loyalty.

There is enough division in the denomination now, without causing any more and personally I shall fight with my last ounce of strength to preserve intact the great Baptist denomination.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 5

JESUS, THE GREAT PHYSICIAN

Lesson: Luke 4:31—5:39.

Golden Text: Matt. 8:17.

Introductory

The scene of this lesson is in Capernaum, on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee. This city became henceforth the headquarters of Jesus. Jesus not coming as the wonder worker or as a great political ruler whom the people had expected as their Messiah, the people did not recognize him, in the physician who healed of spiritual and bodily ills, who chose as his followers the simple fishermen of Galilee. His first reported sermon was in his home town of Nazareth, and the people were amazed at the Son of the carpenter Joseph claiming to fulfil the Scriptures. Finally, enraged, they cast him out of the city.

Lesson

The first part of the lesson, preceding the printed text in the quarterlies, gives the account of the casting out of the unclean spirit from the man in the synagogue, the healing of Simon's wife's mother of fever, the healing of many divers diseases, the miraculous draught of fishes, the healing of the leper, following which he "withdrew himself in the deserts, and prayed." Then "It came to pass on one of those days that he was teaching; and there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by who were come out of every village of Galilee and Judea and Jerusalem (these may have gathered for the express purpose of seeing and condemning the miracle-worker whose fame had gone abroad). And the power of the Lord was with him to heal. Then came four men bearing upon a mattress, a man sick of the palsy. But because of the crowd, they could not approach Jesus, so they went up to the housetop by way of an outer stairway and let the sick man down through the roof. And Jesus, seeing their faith said, "Man, thy sins are forgiven thee." This then was the opportunity for the gathered critics: "Who is this that blasphemeth? Who can forgive sins but God alone?" asked the Pharisee. Jesus answered: "Is it easier to say, Thy sins are forgiven thee; or to say, Arise and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath authority on earth to forgive sins I say unto thee, Arise and take up thy couch and go unto thy house. And he arose up before them and departed to his house, glorifying God. And amazement took hold on all, and they glorified God; and they were filled with fear, saying we have seen stranger things today."

Leading Thoughts

1. Jesus saw the beauty in the commonest lives. 2. No one is whole or well who is sin-smitten. 3. Prayer in the desert gave Jesus power in the multitude.

*THE world's great heart is aching, fiercely aching in the night;
And God alone can heal it, and God alone
give light;
And the men to bear that message, and to speak the living word,
Are you and I, my brothers, and the millions that have heard.*

FREDERICK GEORGE SCOTT

The Difficult Age

By M. J. THOMAS

The "teen" age in boys and girls alike, is undoubtedly the most difficult age to teach in either the Bible or the secular school. It is one of the hard tasks of the Sunday-school superintendent to get teachers for these classes, except in the cases where the same teacher has stayed with her pupils through from the primary and persists in remaining with them in spite of the difficulties that present themselves as the children reach the verge of maturity. Often even a teacher who has had the class for four or five years gives it up when her boys or girls reach the teen age because she begins to feel that they have grown beyond her. Sometimes these teachers resign with a sense of failure, maintaining that they are not "cut out" for teaching, and refusing thereafter to engage in Sunday school work, although it is the work to which their heart turns.

It may be the wisest thing for such a teacher to give up the class. It may be better for the pupils and better for herself. But because she can no longer hold the interest of these boys and girls does not mean that her work in the Sunday school has come to an ignominious end. Not for a minute! If her heart calls her to the Sunday school work, there she should work. Possibly she can obtain best results with younger children. Perhaps, in spite of the sentiment which may make her long to cling to the children whose instructor and guide she has been from the week they left the primary department—perhaps she should not consider keeping a class beyond a period of two or three years. It is possible that she is one of those who work along a single line until it becomes monotonous to those under her and their interest flags. It is possible that her field is only with younger children. Then again it may be that if she would put the necessary thought and study into the problem before her, she could meet the demands of the class with a glorious victory for her work.

The very vital fact for every teacher of teen age pupils to bear in mind is that with the physical change in boys and girls there comes also a mental change, which may manifest itself in various ways. Just as every parent has to meet—or should meet—this new phase of the boy or girl on the verge of the beginning of maturity, so must the teacher who would have success. It is the most critical age. If the boy or girl can be held through this period, the probability is that he is saved to the church for life. And these can be held in most instances if they have the right teacher. Therefore, if the teen boys and girls are dropping away, look for the cause.

These truths must be held in mind: At the beginning of the teen age, the child awakes to a new consciousness of self. This shows itself in various ways. A formerly talkative child may become shy and retiring; a formerly reticent child may become talkative and forward; some will manifest a tendency to "show off"; nervousness may be exhibited by giggling, inattention, even impertinence. To bear with all of this graciously the teacher must indeed have a genuine love for these young people, and a thorough understanding of their present difficulties.

This is the restless age, an awkward, hobbledehoy and often unlovely age. Nothing is accomplished by reproving the boy or girl for the exhibition of any of these traits. Rather, they must be made to be so interested in other things (in this case the work of the class) that they forget themselves. Most awkwardness is the result of self-consciousness.

This is the age of activity, the reaching-out age after ever-new sensations. A prosy lesson will no longer satisfy. There must be something in the work of the class to arouse curiosity, to give outlet to those new sensations surging within the adolescent pupil.

This is inclined to be a "know-it-all" age and the teacher must indeed be wise who can handle the boys and girls who know so much more than they ever again will no matter to what age they live or what their experiences may be.

All of these changes in the children under her instruction and guidance must be taken into account by the teacher who wishes to hold her pupils through the teen age. If she can guide them safely through it with a sane faith in the best things in life, what a laurel wreath is hers! It will require study of each individual in her charge; she may need to summon to her aid the advice of the best educators; she may need to spend much time in planning her lessons so that they will charm, but it will be all worth while.

The Chimney Corner

The Kitchen Kaleidoscope

IT cost a quarter! But it was worth it. Mrs. Busyasabee tells us she will never be without one again, and of course the word of such an up-to-date housekeeper is not to be ignored. Some people may not know the difference between a skillet and a scuttle, but Mrs. Busyasabee knows every invention that ever was made to lighten work, and nothing, nothing has ever given her the comfort and that happy sense of freedom-while-doing-chores that this twenty-five-cent kaleidoscope offers.

"Not that I don't appreciate this proper-height sink," she said enthusiastically, "for I do. It's a back-saver that I value daily, and as for this kitchen cabinet, my! what a step-saver it is! And there never was a fuel-saver like this fireless cooker—my bills for gas are halved. I don't need to tell you that the day I installed a washing-machine, a labor-saver came into the house, and a time-saver, too. But in spite of saving back and feet and hands, there were my head and heart meandering around in the same old inefficient fashion until this kaleidoscope came along!"

We asked the usual first question of a person plotting to buy one for themselves: "Who invented it, anyhow?"

"Mrs. Montgomery!" smiled Mrs. Busyasabee, triumphantly, "so now you know why it appeals to the heart of a Baptist woman, and sets a dozen new thoughts parading daily before her mind's eye."

"Lead us to this kaleidoscope," said we, with purpose in our eye.

So she led us kitchenward; and there, propped on the window-ledge over the sink, we saw it. A book! We picked it up and saw that it was dated throughout—November 23 was the date she pointed at:

"This just gives you an example," she said, "read it." So we read:

"Miss Lavinda C. Coombs ('83) Bengal-Orissa. (WF.)

"Mrs. C. E. Bonsfield ('93) So. China. (F)

"Rev. H. W. Kirby, M.D. ('02) Assam (F.)

"D. Raffone, Italians. (H.)

"K. Outahara, Japanese. (H.)

"O. M. Lind, Swedes. (H.)

"What does that mean to you?" she asked.

We said it meant people to us. People scattered here and there over the face of the whole earth.

"Exactly," she smiled, even more triumphantly than before. "Now let's suppose that the morning of November 23 has arrived, and I am washing the breakfast dishes. This kaleidoscope is propped open before me on a level with my eyes. 'Ah, I say to myself, 'it's the birthday of Miss Coombs in Bengal-Orissa.' Now, as a matter of fact, I really know nothing more to start with than you do about who this Miss Coombs is and what she looks like, yet because it's her birthday I fall to wondering how she is spending it way over there in Bengal-Orissa, bless her heart! These two provinces are in India, you know, up at the top of the Bay of Bengal; I look them up in my copy of "The Survey" to see about our mission, and find that Baptists are absolutely the only denomination doing any Christian work there. It says there are 4,730,000 people in that field, twelve missionary families and nine single women missionaries. She is one of the nine, of course. Suddenly I begin dividing 4,000,000 people by that handful of missionaries and it dawns on me that Miss Coombs is too busy! She must be spending her birthday in one grand rush, trying to make herself fit around over all the hundred thousands falling to her lot. 'Dear Father in heaven, be with her this day,' I pray, and I find myself going into little details in that prayer. I am suddenly tremendously interested in Miss Coombs. I don't want her to get tired out. Well, by and by I go down to the next on the list and find Mrs. Bonsfield of South China, and Dr. Kirby of Assam. I picture them: First, I see blue-gowned Chinese; I see plump little kindergarten tots in blue trousers and pigtailed; I see wheelbarrows and sedan chairs and green-gabled pagodas. 'I am glad Mrs. Bonsfield is there,' I say, and I pray for her. Then I see brown bodies in pain, I see baffled relatives doing absurdly awful things as treatment—beating drums, shaking the patient, burning with irons. 'O, thou Great Physician,' I pray, 'bless Dr. Kirby in Assam as he follows in thy footsteps healing the sick and opening the eyes of the blind.' I wonder what he gives them for headaches, and whether he has an auto or must be jolted in a bullock-cart. I am glad he is in Assam where doctors are few and far between. Then I come to D. Raffone, Italians, (H.); and H. means America—our Home Mission Society. Mr. Raffone sounds like an Italian, himself; I have a quick visioning of him, leading lovely dark-eyed children to the Saviour; climbing tenement stairs. I know that what the Catholics never touch, he can touch! I pray for him—for tact and patience.

"And K. Outahara, Japanese? I remember all the thousands of Orientals in this country, I wonder into how many homes K. Outahara goes where there are idols on a godshelf. I wonder if the families wear kimonos, if they eat with chop sticks, if they like America, if they will accept the invitation to church. I pray for Mr. Outahara in his work with these homesick disillusioned people. And then I come to Mr. Lind, A Swedish name! Blonde giants, pink-cheeked children troop before my mind's eye. I seem to hear their lusty wholesome voices singing—I pray for Mr. Lind. And my day is richer because, on the birthday of these six good Baptists, I have circled the globe to watch them at work. Their problems are, after all, my problem. We are all Baptists! They have been able to go, and I have stayed behind. I must hold the ropes. So I pray. And when I go to market I order a little less, saving the difference for my Might Box. You have one, haven't you?"

You may think the above paragraph too long! It is long. Long enough to reach around the world and up to heaven, too. So we ask what the real name of this kitchen kaleidoscope is, and find it is called "The Book of Remembrance." We realize that no kitchen can be complete without one! That kitchens are ideal places to find "the mind at leisure with itself"; that something pictorial is needed to people the bare walls with images of others. So as for us, we have ordered our "Book of Remembrance" for 1923, for, aside from the birthday dates, it is a gold mine of Bible readings, topical suggestions and rich treasure-trove for those who would have a colorful viewpoint while immured inside kitchen walls. Order one for yourself, and see!

A Prayer for the Kitchen Wall

By NANCY BYRD TURNER

MAY labor make me glad!

May I have eyes to see

Beauty in this plain room

Where I am called to be:

The scent of clean blue smoke,

The old pans polished bright,

The kettle's chuckling joke,

The red flames' lovely light.

May I have wit to take

The joy that round me lies.

Whether I brew or bake,

May labor make me wise!

May labor leave me sweet!

When twilight folds the earth

May I have grace to smile

And count the day's good worth.

An old song in my soul

And quiet in my breast,

To welcome tranquilly

The night's old gift of rest,

And gather strength to face

Tomorrow's busy strife.

Here in this humble place,

May labor bless my life!

Kitchen Kindness

THE laundress is a person. While she washes and rubs and boils and irons she is thinking something. What is she thinking? What are you giving her to think about? Is coming to your house like coming to The House Beautiful—a place of light and love and friendliness? Does she go back to her own more modest home with a higher ideal? We are set in the world to be lights: Even to laundresses.

The laundress is a person. She is, for at least one meal a week, your guest. Guests have preferences in food. The kind hostess remembers those preferences—it gives her a glow of hospitality, it gives the guest an inescapable sense of pleasure in returning. The laundress is a guest. She is also a woman, therefore imitative: the meal that is daintily served to this guest, on a doily, may be a gentle wedge in Americanization.

The laundress is a person. She is naturally curious about you. Her occupation keeps her from attending week-day meetings at the church. Envelopes of "Extension Literature" might be a welcome take-home suggestion. (276 Fifth Ave. N. Y. Literature Dept.)

The delivery boy is a person. He is naturally curious about you. He may spend half a minute a day in your kitchen. Half a minute a day is three minutes a week, or twelve minutes a month. The cumulative effect of entering your kitchen daily is—what?

The delivery boy is a problem to somebody: his parents, the school authorities, the store, or society in general. He may live in unfair surroundings, minus advantages, minus a chance to gain ideals save in the hasty glimpses of kitchen kindness. Even wordless, that half minute may speak volumes as he leaves, thinking: "Funny! She's always singing as she works." "She smiles nice." "Real friendly place, that kitchen." Wouldn't it be wonderful to be one of those to-see-her-is-to-love-her persons?

The maid-of-all-work is a person. The Lord is as interested in her career as in yours. He may be more anxious about her than about you, since she has her own peculiar temptations and must meet them without the safeguard of family backing.

The maid-of-all-work knows a thing or two! She is curious. She hopes to have a home of her own some day. She has only material ideals in regard to life, yet. But she is curious. She sees everything. She will remember. What an opportunity she is! Where is the woman who has no time to teach a Sunday school class or to write a paper for the missionary meeting? Her audience is in her own kitchen, hired at anything from five to fifteen dollars a week to imbibe Christian ideals, first-hand.

"Charity begins at home"—in the kitchen! Not cold charity, handing out bread which might as well be a stone, but charity in the Greek derivation of the word: Love. Housewives whose pantry-shelves are well-stocked for winter might do well to see if there is also a good supply of "fruits of the spirit"—love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.

Arrange carefully in a semi-circle exactly similar to that of Pater Familias, and you will have a delicious pop-over again!

"Whate'er may be said, man's measure is dinner,
He may love like a saint, but he eats like a sinner!"

An Excellent Recipe for Apple Pie

(EASY FOR GIRLS JUST HOME FROM SCHOOL.)

- 2 ears (of corn).
 - 2 eyes (borrow from a potato, if near-sighted).
 - Plenty of mussels fresh from the sea (see).
 - 10 lady fingers.
 - 1 broom stick.
 - 1 beet.
- Set the ears within reach of mother saying that she is really too tired to finish the cleaning. Place the eyes so they can eye-spy an opportunity to help. Apply the mussels so they will cause the ten lady fingers to grip the broom stick. The beet will then take care of itself, putting everything in apple pie order. (Guaranteed to serve a family of any size.)

"It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone
Which gives you a bit of a heartache
At the setting of the sun."

Autumn

(These verses were written by one of our own Young Reserves, Lila Albarn of Kettle Falls, Wash. They are very good, aren't they? She said: "I am sending a poem I made up the other day while irrigating in the garden.")

THE pumpkin's ripe,
The corn is shocked;
The apples red are falling.
The autumn breezes
Everywhere
Farewell to summer calling.
A yellow gleam,
A splash of red,
From out the woodland showing.
Tall goldenrod
And asters bright
Along the roadside glowing.
The breeze from distant Mountain dim
A spicy fragrance bringing,
And robin in
His bright red vest
His "Cheer-up" song is singing.
Farewell, farewell,
Glad summer days,
So full of memories dear.
Farewell, farewell,
To summertime,
For autumn days are here.

The First Church, Norristown, Pa., has set "goals for a golden year." Ninety baptisms, 90 tithers, 90 net increase in Sunday school, 90 per cent of the church members in Sunday school, 90 per cent of the Sunday school in the church services and twice the average attendance in the prayer meeting. Rev. W. H. Houghton is pastor.

Kitchen Knick-knacks

THE answers are all utensils or objects found in a kitchen. The correct list will be given next week:

1. My first means marked ability,
My second means to rent,
My whole is a small metal pot with a long handle used in cooking.
2. My first is an author who wrote the "Gold Bug,"
My second is a dog,
My whole keeps the fire stirred up.
3. My first is a vegetable with eyes,
My second is a conceited dude,
My whole makes a snowy mound of vegetables.
4. My whole is a long ridge of mountains, with fire inside!
5. My whole is a terrible flirt but of useful assistance in getting food from the plate to the mouth.
6. My whole is a member of a baseball nine; can hold cream safely. Also milk or chocolate sauce!
7. My whole is what happens to something that drops; a place where dishes need to be careful!
8. My whole is white-faced; a friend of Jack and Jill.

9. My whole is what curious people try to do; found just outside country kitchens.
10. My first is inclined to give pert replies;
My second is the place to set bread dough or pies;
My whole is a receptacle in which to cook vegetables.
11. My whole is a football ground.
12. My first is a letter that sounds like an insect that stings;
My second is what you are in;
My whole sweeps a room.

"Now God be with this household
And bless it every day;
On loaf and cup and fireside,
And on its folk alway,
Pour down his peace, and evermore
Be guard and strength and stay."

A Good Recipe for Pop-Over (BOYS, TRY THIS!)

- 2 apples to be placed in the cheeks.
- 2 cherries to form the lips.
- 2 ginger-snaps for the eyes.
- 2 ears (of corn).
- 1 little neck (clam).
- Hares, parted in the middle!

BETTER THINKING
Phil. 4:4-8.

(CONSECRATION MEETING)

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

The epistle to the Philippians is very largely a letter of friendship. In writing to these Christians, Paul styles himself as a servant whose entire life is devoted to the service of Christ. The letter is quite personal and individual.

1. Paul's exhortation to rejoice. The writer returns to his main theme in verse four: "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, rejoice." This should be the normal condition of the young Christian, and usually is, unless something is wrong within.

Nothing quite so disturbs the equilibrium of the Christian like anxious solicitude. The great apostle shows how this can be overcome. In brief, the solution of this problem lies in the direction of prayer and constant fellowship with God. But he reminds them that prayer must be coupled up with thanksgiving for past blessings. In this way the Christian finds peace.

"And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

2. Inward conformity to outward profession. "If this religious basis of all Christian life is preserved, nothing yet remains, except an admonition to the true moral conduct."

"As a Man Thinketh in His Heart"

In these days young people are primarily concerned with that which will produce right conduct. They are having to live their lives in the midst of all sorts of temptations and glaring inconsistencies on the part of professing Christians. They see the minister preaching to a handful of people when the pews ought to be filled. They know that not more than 50 per cent of the members of the church are contributing to home expenses and for carrying the Good News to the ends of the earth. Such conditions must not be used as a means for doubt and despair, but as a constant challenge to our finest abilities.

Think! What a hard thing to do, and to think rightly. In the key verse to our topic, the writer gives a number of things on which to exercise our minds: truth, honesty, justice, purity, things lovely, things of good report. "Think on these things!" How unfortunate is it to fill one's mind with the baser thoughts. Straight thinking! Clean living! Hard work! Conscientious service to God and man! These are necessary elements in the program of a happy Christian.

The story is told of a young man who was not a Christian. His father was a devout servant of the Lord. When he realized that he must leave his boy, he called him to his bedside to make only one request of the boy, namely, that each day he would go into the father's study, sit in his big arm chair and for just fifteen minutes, think about his relation to God. The boy faithfully kept his promise and in a few short weeks humbly acknowledged Christ as Saviour and Lord of his life.

How Tacoma Does It

Summer time was not quitting time for the Tacoma, Wash. District B. Y. P. U. The monthly board meetings were not discontinued, but were merely transformed into picnic board meetings. At 7 p. m. on the second Tuesday of the month they gathered on the bulkhead at beautiful Point Defiance Park on Puget Sound. The social committee went out early and prepared an appetizing picnic supper for the hungry ones.

After the "eats" were disposed of, the members gathered around the camp fire for the devotional and business sessions. This has been found an ideal arrangement, combining business and pleasure in a most delightful way. It also afforded an excellent opportunity to boost for the summer assembly as freelight, and starlight, and lapping water made all long to taste once again, or perhaps for the first time, the joys of Burton.

West Washington

The West Washington Baptist Summer Assembly met as usual at Burton on Vashon Island. Something of the beauty of the assembly grounds is shown in the accompanying picture. Wonderful Madrona and fir trees add to the attractiveness of the place.

The assembly controls about thirteen acres with a shore line on Puget Sound of about 1100 feet. The attendance was not so large this year as in former years.

The class work done, however, was of a much higher educational grade. The following served as members of the faculty: W. B. Hinson, James Asa White, Joseph L. Peacock, Sumner R. Vinton, Charles Rutherford, Seldon L. Roberts, Lawrence Arlander, Mrs. Frieda Davidson. Mrs. Edker Burton, Mrs. Elise Mathews. Rev. T. H. Hagen served as dean of the Assembly and Rev. F. W. Wightman as manager of assembly grounds. The new auditorium recently erected is one of the finest in the country.

"The Attractive Christ"

John 20:28: "My Lord and my God!"
Concept of Program, Boston Convention

After careful consideration, "The Attractive Christ," has been chosen as the key-note for the thirty-second Anniversary Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, which meets in Boston, July 4-8, 1923.

Wednesday, July 4, will be given over to registration and sightseeing. A speaker of outstanding ability and reputation has been invited to deliver an address on Wednesday evening.

The convention proper will open July 5, but all delegations are urged to reach Boston on the fourth so as to get "settled." Young people arriving in Boston the fourth will want to visit many of the historic places on that day.

"The Attractive Christ" will be presented on the first day in a consideration of evangelism—his attractiveness to youth as Saviour and Lord. On the second day, we will consider his educational ideals; on the third day, his stewardship principles; on the fourth or last day, his appealing command for service.

Conferences

The conferences are to be of an unusually high order and will come under two great divisions:

I. Organization and Administration.

1. Local
 - (1) Junior
 - (2) Intermediate
 - (3) Senior
2. City and associational
3. State and provincial

II. Educational

1. Missions
2. Stewardship
3. Worship
4. Evangelism
5. Social Service
6. Life Service

Leaders for these conferences will be chosen from among the leading workers in the United States and Canada.

Inspirational Addresses

The following have been invited to deliver addresses before the convention: Dr. W. S. Abernethy, pastor Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C.; Rev. C. N. Arbuckle, pastor First Baptist Church, Newton Center, Mass.; Dr. George W. Truett, pastor First Baptist Church, Dallas, Tex.; Dr. James A. Francis, pastor First Baptist Church, Los Angeles, Calif.; Dr. John MacNeill, pastor Walmer Road Baptist Church, Toronto, Ont.; Dr. Russell H. Conwell, pastor Temple Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. Frank W. Padelford, Secretary of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention; Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor First Baptist Church, Syracuse, N. Y.

In General

The registration fee for the convention will be $1. This will entitle delegate to program and badge.

Regarding entertainment and other matters pertaining to Boston, write to Rev. F. F. Peterson, Ford Bldg., Boston, Mass. For program information, write to General Secretary White, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

BY CHARLES H. WATSON

Sam Adams

Boston has just had a renaissance of old colonial patriotism. It was provoked by the bi-centennial of the birth of Samuel Adams the "The Father of the Revolution." Nobody knows just why men always called him "Sam." Probably it was because it sounded rather four-square like himself, eliminated those interfering proprieties that hamper a man when he is fired up for action, and described a born leader of men in a time of great commotion, and achievement.

To the writer in a Bostonian experience of over forty years, Sam Adams has always been a palpable presence. But never before has the sturdy patriot provoked a celebration, with a program. It was high time to have it; and when the two hundredth anniversary was anticipated and announced, instantly was there an electric thrill of response. The brave and determined revolutionist proved to be a sort of modern dynamic. His indomitable spirit entirely animated the celebration and took possession of it. The day was vibrant with realistic recollections. Of course the three real meetings were gathered in the three forums where Adams baited and defied the British, and where he dominated and fired up the patriots for their mighty resistance and ultimate triumph: Faneuil Hall, the Old South Church, and the Old Colonial State House.

An Adams Town Meeting

Naturally enough, the program called for a mock "town meeting" in Faneuil Hall. Sam was always king in the town meeting. The committee forgot to count on his disturbing spirit, but it was there, and the mock became real, men got hot under the collar, raised their voices, blazed with conviction and defiance, and we had a touch of revolution. It was a regular Sam Adams town meeting—the best kind of a celebration. The "Cradle of Liberty" began to rock. In Mayor Curley's fiery speech, he expressed the conviction that every one felt: "More than anything else does our country need a Sam Adams now!" The legend on Adams' monument in old "Dock Square" is significant:

"A STATESMAN FEARLESS AND INCORRUPTIBLE."

In the Newton Chapel

The official opening of the seminary came Sept. 28, in the Colby Chapel. A perfect day, and the solid body of students was fringed by many of the trustees and friends. Intelligent Baptists sitting in that beautiful chapel, have sweet communion with the past as well as with the present. They face bronze tablets in memory of Irah Chase, Henry J. Ripley, Barnas Sears, Horatio B. Hackett, Alvah Hovey, Oakman S. Stearns, Samuel S. Caldwell, Heman Lincoln, and Albert N. Arnold. Illustrious company—and their works do follow them! The succeeding teachers are of like quality.

The "Old Hill" is a glory spot in all the seasons. In simpler days, its attractive surroundings afforded delightful rambles for the famous appreciative scholars and poets of Cambridge. The writer came upon this charming touch in Thomas W. Higginson's "Cheerful Yesterdays": "Above the lake there was a detached boulder where I used to climb, and sometimes a homeward-faring robin, or crow, would perch and rest there as I was resting, or the sweet bell of the Newton Theological Seminary, on its isolated hill, would peal out what seemed like an Angelus."

What wonder that Baptist Worthies and their sons have loved the old hill? They hear and see more there than even the appreciative Rambler could discover.

The Address

Quite in line with the high traditions and memories of Newton Seminary, was the opening address of Dr. Henry K. Rowe, professor of church history and sociology. It was a clear-cut, comprehensive, and scholarly presentation of "The Significance of America in Church History." In thoroughly traversing the materials of his subject, he showed the inevitable types of frontier religion, as well as the succeeding building period of home mission development. Then came into review the later guidance of the young people in Christian service, the Sunday-school advance, the social service emphasis, the emergence and leadership in religious education. In these contributions to America on the spiritual side, Baptists have borne their full part. In religious expansion always it is the freest church that can do the most. It was good for students in their preparation to preach to have set before them such a standard for written work as was reached so easily and fully in Professor Rowe's address.

Following the chapel service, Mrs. Horr opened the president's home to the many guests for pleasant social contact and acquaintance with faculty and students. Newton opens strongly. Thirty college men enter. Eight college women come for the course for instructors in religious education. All professors fresh and ready for duty. What could be more satisfactory and promising?

High Spots in Baptist Boston

Dr. Horr's address to the ministers was one of them. In discussing "Baptist Responsibility in the Present World Conditions," he uttered some great conceptions and moved upon a high level. He proved himself at home among large historical and current questions. This was a great opening meeting of the conference, and the Newton president set a high mark for his successors.

At the next meeting, Rev. Carey W. Chamberlin of Beverly, recently returned from a visitation to our missions in Japan and China, gave report of his trip. It was done with immense satisfaction to the ministers. He gave just the impressions that we wanted to get, making them vivid, faithful, and fair, and crowded a deal of information into his swift recital.

At the last meeting, Oct. 2, William T. Sheppard, Esq., the former president of the Social Union, and one of the recently returned messengers of our denomination to the Baptists in the war countries of Central Europe, was the speaker. He gave close and intimate impressions of present conditions there, and spoke delightfully of the warm welcome prepared for them, by the "Ship of Fellowship" which the grateful recipients of our bounty in those countries called the "American Avalanche of Love."

Physicians' Night

It was a new wrinkle to have a night at the Social Union for the doctors. And it proved to be a hit—a palpable hit. To get so many doctors in touch with so many ministers, and to have that great body of laymen with them, and all of them under the spell of one of the leading Christian specialists in the world, Dr. Howard Kelly of Johns Hopkins medical faculty in Baltimore, was nothing short of a triumph for our Physician-president Wilcox.

Dr. Kelly makes a sweet and strong impression—a sort of an ideal conservative. In speaking of the physician and religion he was the soul of reasonableness and reverence as bravely he faced the physician's duties and difficulties. Evolution lay in the track of his discourse, and he handled it with perfect Christian temper. Not a leer nor a jibe, nor a laugh—he was too serious. He saw the great gaps in the evolutionary process that every one conceded had not yet been bridged, and seemed to be in a state of healthy suspense upon the whole subject, meanwhile firmly holding his faith in God and the Bible, and practically working it to better things. We had no horseplay about the monkey ancestors. Everything was calm, sane, fair, and Christian. By the way, if some of the bitter Protestants against the monkey origin would refrain from publicly making monkeys of themselves, their protest might be more convincing.

The Weber Quartette gave immense satisfaction. President Wilcox abounded as usual in his wit and humor. Had he a carrying voice, so that many of the quips might not escape us, the hilarity would be unconfined.

Bits

President Horr has been a busy man of late. Long journeys and many addresses. Speeches both to the Baptist and Methodist Ministers of Boston. An opening address of marked practicalness and wisdom to the Newton students, and sermons and counsels to churches either in difficulty or discouragement. All these things, and more, fill his life. His compactness must make for endurance, he seems so easily to carry his heavy burdens.

The great Baptist Associations of the Boston district are now meeting—four of them. The Boston South scored an uncommon success, by everybody's report—the best meeting for years. Pastor Freda, of Clarendon Street Church, gave them a most timely and faithful sermon that they are all talking about. Dr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Coleman were both inspirational in addresses. The Boston North and West are in session as we write, and the lively Boston East comes next week. Necessarily, about the average association meeting there is much of the conventional. When by spirit and program it breaks out into practical inspiration and life, there is glad response, and a determination to go next year also.

Milwaukee Doings
By ROBERT W. SHAW

The Rallies
This year the Baptist churches of the city held a week of simultaneous rallies. Most of the churches cooperated to make the entire week beginning October 1 a rally week. Sunday school, young people and church rallies were held on Sunday with good attendance, and then throughout the week the churches had rallies of the departments with a city-wide Baptist rally on Friday night, Oct. 6th, at the Tabernacle Church. This last affair was one of the most enthusiastic meetings ever held by Milwaukee Baptists. The program was kept within two hours and the church was filled to capacity. Dr. Benjamin Otto, of Chicago, a former minister in this city, amply filled the bill as a special speaker. Things were never brighter, nor in a better shape for an onward movement of Milwaukee Baptists, than right now.

Mission Work
At present all the mission work is carried on through the Baptist Union, with Dr. D. W. Hulbert as secretary. The work of the Christ Polish Church is moving forward. Some recent developments in that section of the city seem to indicate that there may be almost a mass movement of Polish Protestants to our Baptist church. We have the plant and the leadership, but we have more than that. We have the polity and practice that appeals to the liberty loving Polish people.

Dr. E. W. Moore, of the Home Mission Society, recently spent the week-end with our Negro Baptists. He made a great impression upon them, and inspired them in a marked way. They have invited him back to help them in their financial campaign to provide funds for their new building, which the state convention is helping them to purchase, and also to set up a program that will meet the needs of the growing Negro population in Milwaukee.

With The Churches

Dr. Henry Clarke, of Racine, is still the stated supply at the Tabernacle Church, while they are searching for a minister. They are seeking the man, and have no candidates.

Grace Church recently held its annual meeting. This is one of our best churches in the city. It had a struggle for a number of years, but is reaping now in membership from the rapidly growing section in which it is located. The outstanding feature is the splendid cooperation, and the men's organization which puts things across. The receipts for the year were in excess of $13,000, which included the purchase of a pipe organ, and a larger amount given to benevolences than to the local expenses. The salary of Pastor Phelps has been increased $500. He is now on his sixth year with the church.

The writer, who is pastor of South Church, began his fourth year of ministry Sunday Oct. 1. The three years have been among the best in the history of the church. More than $31,000 has passed through the hands of the treasurer. The first unit of the new building costing about $30,000 will soon be ready for occupancy. This was one accomplishment that many folks thought could not be done. The old church is to be turned into a Christian Center and that work is already under way. There have been received into the fellowship of the church during the three years, fifty-five by baptism and thirty-five otherwise, or a total of ninety. Not so many as in other churches, but the baptisms were one-seventh of the total received by the twelve churches during the period, and one-fourth of those received by the English-speaking churches. Besides this, every department shows progress. This in the face of the fact that the church was at the lowest ebb in its history and very much divided at the beginning of this ministry. The pastor is to preach the convention sermon at Oshkosh.

Immanuel Church, the largest of our churches has had an eventful and prosperous year. Pastor Hauser has his membership scattered over two counties including Milwaukee county.

Pastor H. C. Carnell, of Bay View Church, recently received an increase of $300 in his salary. His work moves forward in a fine way. He has a great church and a large field to challenge him to his best efforts.

The minister's organization held its first meeting of the fall recently. There is a fine fellowship among the ministers, and it is proposed to strengthen it by having several social occasions during the year, when the wives will be present. Pastor Holzer is president, and Pastor Kamm, secretary-treasurer.

First Church, Billings, Mont., Lays Corner-Stone

The First Church, Billings, Montana, has recently laid the corner-stone of their new church building. The plans were drawn by a local firm with George B. Merrill of New York as consulting architect. The first unit will probably be ready for occupancy by the first of the year. It will consist of a complete and modern Sunday-school equipment with provision for education and social phases of church work. The contract for the first unit was let at a price of $45,000. It is expected that the entire building when completed will cost $100,000. The First Church of Billings owes its inception to three women—Mrs. Lydia Trask, Mrs. Clara Wilhite and Mrs. J. S. Simmeo who, in January 1898, formed an organization known as the "Earnest Workers' Society." The earnest efforts of these women with the help of Rev. L. G. Clarke, missionary to Montana resulted in the organization of the church in October of the same year. The first meetings were held in the old courthouse and the first building was completed in 1903. It was enlarged in 1906. The present pastor, Rev. W. D. Whan began his work in July, 1919.

The United Baptist Convention of New Hampshire

The New Hampshire Baptists held their anniversaries at Exeter Oct. 2-4. This village is in the region where the Baptist faith just took root in New Hampshire. It also served for a time as the political capital of New Hampshire in the early history of the state. The well-known Phillips-Exeter Academy has long had a national reputation.

The speaker at the opening banquet was Rev. W. C. Myers of Concord who discussed "Making a Minister," emphasizing the minister's personality, his motive and his message. At the conference of Baptist ministers, Tuesday morning, Rev. C. P. MacGregor, of Manchester, told of "Some Secrets of Ministerial Power." The minister's function is priestly, prophetic, apostolic, evangelistic, educative and pastoral. He must interpret the gospel for himself, must possess reality in word and deed, must be natural, sympathetic, broad and cultured. Among the elements of power are experience of the truth, consciousness of a personal call, growth of mind, vision, character, optimism.

Rev. J. H. Robbins, the Grand Old Man of New Hampshire Baptists, spoke of the work of the Anti-Saloon League with his usual vigor. The report of the necrologist, Rev. W. G. Hubbard, showed that the following former pastors in the state had died during the year: F. H. Cooper, D. Donovan, F. S. Hartley, S. G. Hastings, H. M. Hopkinson, A. Locks, E. M. Shaw, H. T. Slocum, J. B. Slocum, C. C. Spears, W. P. Stanley and B. M. Webster.

At the regular sessions of the convention Hon. C. M. Collins of Danville presided and he with a majority of the other officers was reelected for the coming year. Rev. Daniel S. Jenks, the secretary was detained at home by serious illness. A telegram of sympathy was sent to him by vote of the convention. It is understood that he is recovering.

Resolutions were adopted concerning Eastern atrocities, concerning the eighteenth constitutional amendment, the Sabbath, the Board of Promotion, evangelism, and the following which we quote entire: "The Baptists of New Hampshire approve the re-affirmation by the Northern Baptist Convention that the New Testament is the all-sufficient ground of our faith and practice, and we need no other statement; and we call upon our pastors and people to give themselves to a fresh study of the New Testament under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, that we may know just what it does and does not teach, and may be ready as Baptists to give to others a reason for the hope that is within us."

The annual sermon was by Rev. W. A. Paige of Claremont, text Ps. 142:4. Brother Paige is one of the men that came to us at the union of the Baptists and Free Baptists in organized work, and we shall never cease to be grateful for the gift. An important address was that of Brother F. L. Anderson of Newton Center. His topics were: "The Revival of the Baptist Spirit," "The Theological Controversy," "The New World Movement," "The Spiritual Condition of the Churches." In all these he found the outlook favorable.

Other visitors who addressed the convention were President C. D. Gray of Bates College, Dr. W. S. Athearn of Boston University, Mr. Wm. E. Blodgett a trustee of Newton, Dr. E. T. Tomlinson of New York, Dr. Stilwell of Cleveland, Mrs. E. M. Flinn of Philadelphia, Rev. R. B. Longwell and Miss L. M. Holbrook, both of Assam. It is impossible to speak of these addresses as fully as we could wish. Among the delegates was Dr. George Holbrook of Manchester, now ninety-two years of age, who has served the convention in many ways with rare fidelity for more than half a century and has been five times its president. His natural force is not abated and being invited to speak, he did so with appropriateness and vigor. The report of the board shows an unusually large number of baptisms and a net gain in membership of 251, the total membership now being 14,424.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

FARMINGTON: Pastor Andem and his church are using to the full the new equipment recently provided in their enlarged buildings for the service of the community and the State Normal School. The church is practically filled at all services. Last Sunday there was a baptismal service, which included four students of the school. Mr. W. Raymond Davis, choir leader, has developed a fine quartet, a chorus choir, and a very fine orchestra. In the Sunday school the pastor is teaching a high-school course for state credits. The pastor's ideal for service is shared by his church, hence a very broad and successful work is constantly in progress.

NORTH KENNEBEC ASSOCIATION: The church at Burnham is not large, but it gave a large and liberal welcome to the North Kennebec Association recently. Pastor Longley had well prepared the way. The ladies showed that the grace of hospitality is still abundant in that community. Like most of the association meetings, the theme under discussion was the program of the year. Mr. A. S. Adams of the South China Mission, brought a vivid picture of life in that great land. State Director Henderson brought to the attention of the association his greatest evangelistic opportunity, namely, in the Sunday school and the young people's societies.

NORTH VASSALBORO: Rev. D. W. Kimball is beginning his pastorate at this church. The church and that at the center, which will be served by him, afford a large opportunity. Mr. Kimball is a man of high character and purpose, with successful experience in important pastorates.

HON. EDWIN M. HAMLIN of Milo, is not only the Maine head of Willimantic Thread Co., with large operations in mill and forest, and president of the United Baptist Convention of Maine, but he finds time for many important public services. During the war he served in many capacities under the government, and now is a member of the very important committee on New England railways.

ORDINATION: A council called by the church in New Limerick, Wednesday, Oct. 4, recommended the ordination of the pastor of the church, Mr. C. R. Cogle. Rev.

F. C. Hartley was moderator of the council and Rev. W. P. Richardson, clerk. Rev. Benjamin Beatty, pastor evangelist, preached the sermon.

NORRIDGEWOCK: Rev. L. D. Tibbetts has been called from his long and successful pastorate at Steep Falls to become pastor of this important church. He accepts the call and will begin his labors before Nov. 1.

BOWDOINHAM ASSOCIATION: Every church in this association was represented and every pastor but one was present at the meeting in Woolwich, Oct. 4. This little church showed courage and efficiency in entertaining the congregation that wholly filled the house. Rev. I. B. Hardy, of Sanford, gave a remarkable address. Rev. A. S. Adams, of the South China Mission, presented the work in that important field, and the state director discussed the program of the year. The meeting was one of purpose and push. A special committee consisting of Pastors Fogg, Bishop, and Holman was appointed to carry the missionary message to the smaller churches. A strong evangelistic sermon by Pastor Holman brought to a close what was considered by many the best meeting the Bowdoinham Association held in years.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Boston South Baptist Association, was held with the Stoughton Street Church at Upham's Corner, Dorchester, Wednesday Sept. 27. Rev. W. Harry Freda, of Clarendon Street Church, was moderator. Rev. A. Bernard Webber, of Mattapan, conducted the devotional service for the three sessions. The moderator preached the annual sermon on "The Christian's Credentials." Rev. Joseph Walther, of Wollaston Church reported on "The State of Religion" and Rev. Otis W. Foye of Dorchester Temple, reported for the association board of promotion. Among the speakers were Rev. Robert L. Webb, First, Dorchester, on "Northern Baptist Education-Kingdom Leaders"; Mrs. Geo. W. Coleman, president Woman's Baptist Home Mission Society, on "Our Women and the Kingdom"; Prof. J. P. Berkley on "Realizing the Kingdom through Religious Education"; Dr. Geo. W. Coleman, of Ford Hall Forum, on "Realizing the Kingdom Principles in Business"; Rev. Hugh A. Heath, general secretary of convention, on "Realizing the Kingdom in Massachusetts"; Rev. Frederick L. Anderson, of administrative committee of foreign missions, on "Our Baptist Kingdom Responsibilities"; Rev. F. W. Padel-ford, secretary board of education, on "Realized—the Kingdom in China," and Rev. Samuel Lindsay, of Brookline, with closing address, "In the Land of Begin-ning Again." At the close of the after-noon session the Lord's Supper was administered, pastor Willard L. Pratt officiating. The theme for the day was "Realizing the Kingdom of God," and a deeply spiritual atmosphere pervaded all sessions and all addresses were uplift-ing to the soul.

CONNECTICUT

THE NINETY-SEVENTH anniversary of the New Haven Association was held in the Baptist Church, Deep River, Oct. 4. The annual sermon was delivered by Rev. W. C. Sampson, pastor of First Church, Ansonia. Dr. A. B. Coats, repre-sented the state work, discussing the opportunities for missionary work in the state. Rev. Chester H. Howe, First Church, New London, made the address on "Christian Stewardship"; while the Deep River young people, from another angle, presented the same subject by dramatizing "Internal Revenue." Rev. W. T. Thayer, outlined the program of the Bible school and young people's societies. At the woman's session, Miss Ina Burton, New York, spoke on "The Task at Home"; while Miss Clara Con-verse, of Japan, told of "The Task Abroad." The devotional periods were taken by Revs. A. E. Pero, W. P. Covert, and George H. Gardner. Rev. J. N. Lackey, D. D., of Hartford, delivered the closing sermon at the evening session.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONS COUNCIL of North America has arranged a program for missionary conferences to be held in Hartford, and vicinity, Oct. 21-23. The Baptist representatives on the team are: Dr. Joseph C. Robbins, foreign mission secretary; Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgom-ery, president of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society; Rev. Sumner R. Vinton, of New York; Rev. A. C. Hanna, of Burma; Rev. E. G. Haring, Japan; Rev. A. S. Adams, China; Rev. R. B. Long-well, Assam.

REV. DONALD B. MACQUEEN, for two years, the energetic and efficient pastor of First Church, Bridgeport, has been called to the pastorate of the First Church, Rochester. Mr. MacQueen expects to begin the work on his new field about Nov. 1. He came to Bridgeport from Batavia, New York. While there is deep and genuine regret, statewide, because of his going, yet there is gratitude for the splendid service rendered in Connecticut by himself and Mrs. MacQueen.

Chicago Baptist Institute

The fall term of the Chicago Baptist Institute will open Monday evening, Oct. 23, at 7:15. Classes will be held on Mon-day and Tuesday evenings for a period of seven weeks. Courses in systematic Bible study will be offered by Dr. Jacob Heinrichs, Dr. J. W. Weddell, and Rev. Swaney Nelson; in Baptist history by Dr. A. S. Carman; in Bible history and in Baptist doctrines by Rev. Wilfred Noble; in mission study, "Building with India" and "The Trend of a Race," preparing teachers for the mission study classes held in the various churches late in the season, by Mrs. Geo. W. Taft; in Bible illustrating by Rev. Chas. M. Kessler; in Biblical archaeology by Dr. Wm. M. Fouts; and in English by Mr. J. W. Patterson. On Tuesday evenings after the classes, there will be lectures by representative ministers and laymen of the Chicago district. The courses on Sun-day school and B. Y. P. U. methods will be offered in the institute next spring. The institute is established primarily for layworkers and any Baptist worker is admitted to the classes. Tuition has been supplied by a generous layman and

"ANOTHER SHIP OF FELLOWSHIP"

Another "Ship of Fellowship"—the great achievement in clothing relief a year ago is to be repeated! It was hoped that it would be unnecessary but the urgent, imperative appeals, particularly from Russia, are heard above the demands of our present financial situation.

Multitudes of people in Russia, during the famine, bartered their clothing for food. Unless we help, they cannot survive the approaching winter.

"RUSH A SHIP TO RUSSIA"

WANTED

Overcoats, suits, underwear, shawls, stockings, socks, sweaters, towels, warm garments for men, women and children. All articles must be clean, serviceable and in good condition.

You who had a part in the "Ship of Fellowship" a year ago will welcome another chance to come to the help of suffering humanity in Europe. You who had no part last year—do not neglect this second opportunity.

Inasmuch as the autumn months constitute the Home Mis-sion period, it is earnestly desired that any response to this appeal shall occasion no diminution of interest in the work or support of either of the Home Mission Societies or the regular activities of the White Cross Circles.

Shipping instructions, information regarding sailing date, shipping tags and other particulars will be published next week.

NORTH DAKOTA

THE NORTH DAKOTA Setting-up Conference was held at Fargo Sept. 18-19 in the First Church. Dr. J. J. Ross of Chicago, Mrs. C. A. Brooks of New York, Rev. R. B. Longwell of Assam, and Dr. Harry S. Myers of New York, made up the conference team. Two banquets were served the second evening. The attendance at the men's banquet was about sixty, and at the women's banquet nearly 100. The conference proved to be a real help in an understanding of the year's program.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 24, was a great day in First Church Casper. The pastor and his bride had just returned in time for the fall reception Friday evening. About 300 were in attendance. Sunday was dedication for the new gymnasium. Dr. Bruce Kinney preached the dedicatory sermon at the morning hour. The main service was in the afternoon. Judge Fred W. Freeman gave an address of statesmanlike scope and power at this service. F. I. Blanchard spoke. In the evening Dr. Kinney spoke the second time on his trip to Alaska before a crowd which filled the gymnasium. At the evening service a white-robed figure, presumably a member of the Ku Klux Klan, gave an envelope to the pastor containing $100, "in appreciation of the work which he and the church has been doing for the welfare of Casper." The First Church has completed the second mission organization for the year. Already a comfortable building is ready for the Evansville Mission. The West Casper Mission, not yet a year old, will soon have a building and property worth in the neighborhood of $6,000. Seven persons were baptized by the pastor at the night service. Others came by letter. All lines of church activity are thriving.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

THE THIRD QUARTERLY statement of the First Church, Seattle, shows that the receipts for July, August and September were $8,142 and for the first nine months of the year $38,589. During the quarter twelve new members were received, five of the number by baptism.

OREGON

DID YOU EVER hear of the man who sent his own children to the neighbors that he might take in roomers? The McMinnville Church is doing that. On the last Sunday before the opening of Linfield College it was necessary to open the adjoining rooms to accommodate the congregation. The following Sunday with an enrolment of 250 in the college the church was crowded and many had to attend other churches or return home. The prayer meetings fill the main auditorium. The Bible school is overflowing into private homes, the city hall and the public library. Plans for a new building under the direction of Architect Merrill of the Home Mission Society are nearing completion. The only serious handicap is a lack of funds. If there is a generous Eastern Baptist with the mind and the money it would be a great thing to place a memorial pipe organ in this new building for the use of both church and college. The local people are facing a tremendous task in erecting the building and deserve encouragement.

THURSDAY EVENING, Sept. 28, the Highland Church, of Portland, held its annual business meeting. The clerk's record showed 101 additions during the year, fifty-three of whom came on confession of faith. These were received in the regular worship, no special evangelistic meetings being held. On Sept. 1, Mrs. C. C. Potter, the past year in charge of the music at Keystone Academy, Pennsylvania, and for took up her work with this church as ment in Linfield College, McMinnville, several years dean of the music department director and pastor's assistant.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE ANNUAL DINNER and business meeting of the First Church of Berkeley, was held on the evening of Sept. 27. More than 400 of the members of the church attended the dinner that had been prepared by the women of the church and the pleasing feature was that nearly all of them remained for the business session which lasted through the evening. Music was furnished by the Sunday-school orchestra. Rev. E. A. Hanley, D. D. presided. He has been pastor of the church for almost a year and during the evening appreciative references were made to him and Mrs. Hanley. The progress of the church during the year has been satisfactory. Eighty-five percent of the pledges to the New World Movement have been paid and the total of moneys raised was $24,971. Of this amount $10,102 was for benevolences. The outstanding improvement to the church plan was the installation of a $20,000 Skinner organ. The work of the women's league has been noteworthy both in the amount of service rendered along social lines and in the raising of money, their treasurer reporting the raising of $2,880. There are three flourishing Christian Endeavor societies in the church, junior, intermediate, and senior. The senior has an enrolment, and often an attendance, of more than 100. The Sunday school under the leadership of J. E. Neighbor and M. A. Peck, has an enrolment of more than 400. The two large classes of the school are the men's class, taught by Dr. Hanley, and the university class taught by Rev. Henry W. Davis, the university pastor.

Baptisms at Kakchieh, South China

By ABBIE SANDERSON

Out in the open air, in the big court and on the banks around the stone baptismal pool in our little valley here in Kakchieh, eight or nine hundred people—possibly a third of them Christians—were gathered to witness the solemn rite of baptism. Potted flowers bloomed around the edge of the basin, and the picture was completed by the score or so of baby faces which peered wonderingly through the blossoms close to the rim of the pool.

The childish treble of the primary girls, as they sang about spring, faltered a bit but was none the less lovable. The music which followed, however, was of the kind we are just beginning to enjoy out here. It is no easy task, yet quite possible, to raise Chinese voices; and those of us who know best what that means felt our hearts bubbling over when the group of boys and girls from the high schools sang, in four parts, Stainer's beautiful "Who are These?" In Chinese they sang it, bursting forth joyfully with the "Hallelujah!" "Hallelu-jah!"—then on more quietly, "These are they which came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes . . . in the blood of the Lamb"; and softening to subdued tenderness in the closing refrain, "And God shall wipe away all tears—all tears—from their eyes—all tears from their eyes—all tears from their eyes."

After Mr. Waters' fitting talk about baptism, the candidates came forward; and we had the happiness of seeing fifty-nine young men and women, boys and girls, confess before the world their determination to follow Christ as master and Lord. Only one or two of the fifty-nine have reached even middle age; the others have the best part of a lifetime before them to honor God here in this country where he is so sorely needed.

Eight of the number are from our own girls' school. I must tell you about one of them. Ever since she came to us three years ago from an absolutely heathen home we have watched her with the greatest interest and hope. About a month ago when Dr. Poteat was here holding special meetings, Cheng eng stood quietly in her place and signified her desire to become a Christian.

Her father is a manager of the theatrical performances which are almost always given in connection with idol worship, but he is willing, it seems, for his worthless little girl to accept Christianity. Will you help us to pray that he too may come soon in spite of the many difficulties?

The Baptist Church School Advance

If you were asked to hazard a guess regarding the city in the United States which holds the leadership in the great race called "The Bigger and Better Baptist Church School Advance," which would you choose?

There is a certain city unfavorably mentioned sometimes because of its horrid girls, its millionaires and its smoke, but it has lifted itself above all these handicaps, and Pittsburgh's "name reads all the rest"—in the number of churches enlisting in this great Baptist movement.

Philadelphia holds second place; New York and Brooklyn tie on third; Minneapolis and St. Paul, true to form, run neck and neck in fourth position while Toledo occupies fifth place. Los Angeles, Spokane and other western cities are getting into the race.

Next week may bring a reversal of this comparative standing, as letters come now from everywhere with the word, "We did not hear about it before Rally Day, but want to enter now."

The Baptist Italian Convention of the United States has officially adopted the entire program of objectives for 1922 and 1923 and will bring every Italian church in line.

As Dr. Gage of Chicago writes, "The wonderful thing about our program for this year is this: that it is adapted to any and every Sunday school, white or colored or foreign-speaking, whether in the city, village or country."

Every Baptist school ought to send in at once to their state director of religious education, or 1701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., the small registration fee for the fine and definite literature provided and thus enter this inspiring, practical movement of the denomination.

increase the output of trained pastors from the seminary, and also of trained laymen from the high school.

Ultimately there will have to be developed for our brethren in Jamaica a system of education along agricultural and industrial lines. A strong self-supporting church is an impossibility without a sound economic basis, and the training of the hands to work will go far toward curing idleness and solving the chronic problem of unemployment.

The importance of Jamaica to the rest of our missions is seen in the annual migration of hundreds of its laborers seeking work in other parts. Baptist churches composed mainly of Jamaicans have sprung up in Cuba and all along the Atlantic Coast of Central America. But there are still many outside of these churches without a pastor's care. It will be worth not a little in our whole scheme of evangelization in Latin North America thoroughly to Christianize the impact of these Protestants upon their Latin neighbors.

A new church with forty members has sprung into life in Waragunda, South India, where a year ago there was not a single Christian. This news has come to Miss Frances Tencate, a missionary of the W. A. B. F. M. S. who is home on furlough.

The Drama of Life, by Thomas H. Mitchell, M. A., B. D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

A little volume of seven sermons about man's seven ages. These sermons were preached during the war to large congregations in Western Canada. They are full of fine illustrations and suggestions for all who are facing the difficult problem of life.

An Introduction to the Study of the Mind, by Walter Scott Athearn. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication. 30 cents postpaid.

Section III of "Teaching the Teacher." The author is director of the School of Religious Education and Social Service of the Boston University. While the book is planned primarily for teachers, it would seem indispensable to the parent or any interested in the training of others or in self-development.

When Winter Comes to Main Street, by Grant Overton. New York: George H. Doran Co.

A series of lively, intimate personal pictures of a number of the leading writers of the day. Representative extracts from their latest books are given. The book makes the reader feel quite at home with Arnold Bennett, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Hugh Walpole, Frank Swinnerton, Phyllis Bottome and a number of other prominent people whose writings have been published by the Doran firm. The book is attractive in form and will appeal to any person who is interested in "writers themselves."

Radiant Hopefulness, by Joseph Judson Taylor, D. D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. $1.00.

A series of sermons preached in war times for the special comfort of those who were walking in the "midst of the passing storm." Mark a few of the subjects: "Grief turned into gladness," "Life and Immortality," "Departed Friend," "The Sweet By and By." Each sermon is followed by a prayer couched in choice devotional expressions and is an uplift toward God. The sermons are like streams of refreshing waters following the reader in his desert pilgrimage. They touch doctrines, history and life with an aptness that is impressive.

Reasonable Religion by Prof. George Jackson. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $2.25.

Professor Jackson, of Edinburgh, has long been known on both sides the Atlantic as a forceful writer on religious and social topics. This volume is a compilation of papers which appeared fortnightly in the Manchester Guardian. They deal in a simple and searching way with preachers and preaching, modern questions and concerning the Bible, worship, the Sunday school and brief studies of famous Scots. The subjects, the style and the substance of these short chapters grip one and set in motion the mental machinery. The writer accepts frankly the results of modern criticism and seeks to show that Christian faith is thereby enriched.

Swords, by Sidney Howard. New York: George H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

The author has gone back to the tremendous turmoil and travail of Medieval Italy for the locale of this surging tapestry of romance and action. It is a poetic drama in four acts, beautifully phrased as to its language, rich in imaginative power and gripping in the dramatic sequences. The exquisite literary style and language make it a most enjoyable art-work. But do not start to read it if your time is limited: once started, the tremendous thrill and sweep of the drama will so enthrall you that it must be finished at one sitting.

Emancipation of Youth, by Arthur Edwin Roberts. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00.

The book grows out of a rich experience in dealing with boys. It shows a sympathy with boyhood which has been a key to unlock its mysteries. The book will prove helpful not only to pastors and workers with boys in the church and Sunday school but to parents as well. The chapter on the church and the boy should be read before the trustees or the local church committee which determines the use of the building. It is a good book using simple terms which any one can understand.

Two old salts who had spent most of their lives on fishing smacks, were arguing about mathematics. Finally, the captain of the ship proposed a problem. "If you sold 126 pounds of codfish at 6 cents a pound," he said, "how much would you make?"

Both men worked awhile with pencils and paper, but neither seemed to get very far. At last old Bill turned to the captain. "Is it codfish they caught?" he demanded.

"Yep," replied the captain.

"No wonder I couldn't get an answer!" exclaimed Bill in disgust. "I've been figuring on shad all the time."

CHORAL ATTACK IN CONGREGATIONAL SINGING

So many students and church organists have appealed to us from time to time for our opinion upon this vexed question that it seemed to us quite in accordance with what Henry Fielding once called "the rule of right and the eternal fitness of things" to devote a little space to the consideration of this highly controversial topic. In a hymn every stanza demands a fresh attack; and as there is no conductor, and manual signs from the organist would be extremely objectionable even if (owing to the position of the organ itself) they were perceptible, only three methods of securing choral attack are possible. These are the striking of the initial chord in full, the sounding of the bass note of that chord, or the anticipation of some note in one of the upper parts, almost always the treble. Of these three processes the first must be regarded as only to be adopted in the case of highly trained choirs. Mr. Balfour, the organist to the Royal Choral Society, London, says that in his own church the choir stands immediately the organ commences to give out the tune. Directly that is finished the choir and organist breathe, and then commence exactly together. This sounds simple enough, but would prove in actual practice to be as delightful in dealing with highly trained choristers as it would be disastrous when applied to choirs and congregations of only average musical ability or perception. What would occur in such a case would be something which produces in effect setting at defiance every rule for the securing of good rhythm.

A Counsel of Despair

The second method, that of sounding in advance the bass note of the initial chord—colloquially and disrespectfully known as "the pedal grunt," and termed in cathedral parlance "striking the rest"—is one which is sanctioned by such an eminent authority as Sir Frederick Bridge, who says, concerning responses: "The organist, to insure a prompt and accurate entry of the choir, should put down and hold the first bass note for a moment before adding the rest of the harmony. This preparatory note should be of the shortest possible length, being intended only to enable the different voices to take their proper intervals and to enter with precision." With Sir Frederick agrees Dudley Buck, who recommends the "pedal grunt" as "a sort of signal enabling choir and congregation to begin more promptly together." Here our author is speaking of psalmody and not concerning responses. But to this method there are many objections. First, it anticipates the harmony of the accented beat, in almost unpardonable weakness in practical composition. This, of course, presuming that the hymn-tune commences on an accent. Then, in the second place, it does not give the congregation the octave below the melody note they are supposed to commence upon, when that note is a third, or fifth, or some rarer interval from the bass. Lastly, if the bass of the initial chord of the tune be some note other than the tonic, such a bass note lacks connection with the tonic upon which the "giving out" or preceding stanza has just concluded.

Consequently, if the first method be a counsel of perfection, we maintain that the second is one of despair—something to be done because you know of nothing better.

A Counsel of Expediency

The third method, that of anticipating some note of the initial chord other than the bass, generally the melody, has received more gratuitous abuse than almost any other system. In the case of responses by the choir we agree with Sir Frederick Bridge that "the foundation note is clearly the natural and proper note to be given." But in hymns we are dealing with congregations who need the anticipation of their own part, that is, the melody. This anticipation of the melody note we believe, after more than a quarter of a century's experience in leading all sorts and conditions of congregations, to be the greatest possible incentive to good choral attack. Further, it is not objectionable rhythmically, it being of the nature of a syncopation when the initial chord falls upon an accented beat, and an accented prompting note when the initial chord is unaccented. And it does away entirely with the anticipation of the harmony of the accented beat.

But, of course, the anticipated note must not be obtrusive and must be of limited duration. The late Dr. C. J. Frost wisely remarks: "To indicate slightly to the congregation their starting note before the complete harmony of the first chord is given has the effect of starting them at once, a point they will be a little behind-hand in when the complete first chord is at once played." When the initial melody note is not a part of the final chord of the tune, we would suggest the anticipation of one of the upper notes of the initial chord, more or less closely related to the final chord. Thus, if a tune ended upon a chord of F and began with the first inversion of the dominant seventh in that key, with the subdominant in the melody, we would suggest the dominant as an anticipatory note, taking it in the tenor octave. Such cases rarely occur, but it is well to be prepared for what Mr. Asquith once termed "a remote and improbable contingency." Of course, the anticipatory note must not be preceded by any distressing acciaccatura such as rejoiced the good souls of many organists of a century ago. Nor must the initial chord ever be spread or sprinkled, but, as Mr. J. Matthews says in his "Handbook of the Organ," "pressed down with decision on manuals and pedals simultaneously," or, as Sir Frederick Bridge says negatively, "on no account in arpeggio." We stand, therefore, for the anticipation of the bass note in chants and choral responses, and then at the commencement only; but for the melody note, or a note of the initial chord, in hymn tunes, this anticipatory note to precede the commencement of each stanza. By this latter method we believe we can best help the congregation to a united start in what is, after all, their own peculiar and proper part in our worship music. —The Musical Observer.

A new Estey organ has been installed in the Antioch Baptist Church of Muskogee, Okla. An organ of the same make will soon be received by the First Baptist Church of McAlester, Okla.

Miss Emma Woodbury, dean of the Colorado Women's College died Sept. 28. She was a graduate of the University of Chicago and Radcliff.

The Publication Society is releasing its editor-in-chief of Sunday-school publications. Dr. W. Edward Raffety, Friday and Saturday of each week during the school year, October to June, in order that he may give two courses of lectures in religious education at Yale University.

It may be that some pastor of a small church or of a mission would like a good desk copy of the Bible, well printed and well bound. If so they can have it by applying to Mrs. Wm. A. Montgomery, 144 Dartmouth Street, Rochester, N. Y., and paying the postage. "First come, first served."

Many inquiries concerning the health of Dr. Brink come to this office. The latest word we have is to the effect that he is a little stronger physically and quite cheerful. His condition is still very serious. Thousands of the readers of THE BAPTIST will pray for his speedy recovery.

The Board of Deacons of the City Park Church, Denver, appropriated $50 from our fellowship fund to aid the thousands of homeless destitute sufferers at Swatow, China, where a destructive typhoon leveled to the ground nearly all the homes and seriously damaged our mission buildings. The same week at the missionary meeting the amount usually spent for refreshments together with the offering was set aside for the Near East Relief. The gift amounted to $25.

Francis W. Parker, a prominent Baptist layman of Chicago, died Oct. 9, at his home in Evanston. He was a graduate of Shurtleff College, admitted to the bar in 1880, was twice elected to the legislature. He suffered a breakdown in his health due to the heavy responsibilities he bore in France, where he organized the "Y" activities for the Rainbow Division. He never fully recovered his strength following this strenuous experience.

Bible Sunday is one of the many special days which have come to be regularly observed in many churches of the country. The American Bible Society has for many years suggested that the churches set aside a Sunday in November as a time when the Bible shall be the special theme. The society has prepared special literature which will be available to all who are interested in the observance of the day. A special dramatic service has been prepared and a leaflet in colors for general distribution may be had by writing the society at Bible House, New York.

A pretty good indication of the value of the Literary Digest's (in)famous wet and dry poll is found in the nomination of Grant M. Hudson of Michigan on a dry platform. This district was shown to be overwhelmingly wet, one factory voting 3,403 wet against 270 dry. Mr. Hudson received more votes than the other two candidates combined, and one of the defeated candidates was supposed to be running on a dry platform also. Either only wets voted in the straw vote or else large number of votes were changed when it came to the question of sending a representative to Washington.

Rev. James Many of the East Washington Heights Church, Washington, D. C., without the knowledge of his friends, observed quietly Oct. 8, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate with the church. He came to Washington from Colgate Seminary and has had but the one pastorate.

The church at Media, Pa., has just celebrated its jubilee with special meetings throughout a whole week. Among the speakers were Dr. C. A. Soares, Dr. B. F. G. McGee and Dr. W. D. Thatcher besides local people. Rev. Benjamin P. Hope is the pastor.

STEWARDSHIP AFTER DEATH:

It sounds strange; yet it is true. Stewardship does not stop with the end of life. You are responsible for what happens to your possessions after your departure.

"Ownership of property carries with it a moral obligation not only to properly administer God's bounties during life, but also to prepare for their wise distribution after death."

Your will is your last message to the world; your last opportunity to discharge your obligation of stewardship. This last message should express your love for all mankind.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. George F. Holt, who has served until recently as director of promotion in Western Washington, has accepted the call of the First Church, Lindsay, Cal.

Dr. W. H. Geistweit of St. Louis and Dr. J. J. Ross of Chicago were fraternal delegates to the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec which met with the Walmer Road Church, Toronto, October 20-26.

The Temple Church, Chicago, laid the cornerstone of its new building Oct. 15. The present church represents the combined membership of the Lorimer Memorial and the Pilgrim Temple. The new building when completed will represent an investment of over $100,000. Rev. Wesley F. Disette, formerly of Michigan, is the pastor.

Benjamin Brawley, a Negro, writing in The Bookman for October, on "The Negro in American Literature" advocates an honest interpretation of literature and appraisal of its value regardless of the color of the writer. "Let it portray life realistically—just as it is; idealistically—just as it ought to be, but let it cease to exploit outworn theories or be the vehicle merely of burlesque."

Rev. George G. Whipple, a graduate of Newton Theological Institution, 1920, has entered upon his second year as head of the theological department of Bishop College, Marshall, Tex. Mrs. Whipple is the director of expression in the college. Bishop College is one of the Negro schools supported by the Home Mission Society. Its attendance this year is about 275 of whom twenty are ministerial students.

Rev. Louis Entzminger is spending the month of October with the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland. He is directing a campaign to increase the enrolment and attendance of the Sunday school. The church is determined to make its school not only one of the largest, but also one of the best in the country. The last two weeks will be given to a soul-winning campaign on the part of the church and the Sunday school.

The trustees of the American University of Beirut, Syria announce the election of the Rev. Bayard Dodge to the presidency to succeed the late Howard S. Bliss. Mr. Dodge's acceptance of the appointment has called forth the greatest enthusiasm on the part of every one interested in the university both in this country and in Syria. After graduating from Princeton in 1909, Mr. Dodge spent considerable time abroad. What he saw at Beirut helped him to decide to identify himself with the institution. He is the son-in-law of the late president.

In the "Atlantic Monthly" for October, Ralph P. Boas of the English high school of Springfield, Mass., discusses the question, "Who shall go to college?" He presents current standards among the colleges, the prevalence of social as against scholastic requirements. He discusses at length Jewish restriction and states frankly the reasons therefor. The article presents a depressing picture "of bigotry, superstition, racial intolerance and inverted nationalism within the colleges, and concludes that there is little hope of changing the prevailing point of view." We do not believe that his rather harsh judgments are true of our Baptist schools.

William Avery McClure was recently ordained by the First Church, Tucson, Ariz. C. T. Garnett was moderator and H. L. Fickett, clerk.

The University Baptist Church State College, Pennsylvania, was recently recognized as a regular Baptist Church and welcomed into the Center Association. Dr. Clarence A. Adams is acting pastor. The church proposes to erect a house of worship in the near future.

The First Church, Dayton, Washington, the oldest living church in the East Washington and North Idaho Convention celebrated its fiftieth anniversary Sept. 22-24. Rev. J. A. Ford is pastor. A number of outside speakers were present including A. H. Bailey, and J. R. George of Spokane.

Rev. D. C. Williams, pastor at Santa Rosa, Cal., celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination. The service was of unusual interest. Dr. C. E. Tingley superintendent of the Bay Cities' Union "recharged" the candidate and Rev. Roy H. Barrett of Petaluma offered the ordina-

Two Churches

THERE was a church in our town
Which thought 'twas wondrous wise.

It tried to pay expenses
By selling cakes and pies;
But after years of trying
That plan to raise the cash,
The folks got tired of buying
And the whole thing went to smash.

There was a church in our town,
And it was wondrous wise;
It always paid expenses
By simply paying tithes.
For when 'twas found the tithe did pay,
It seemed so very plain,
Forthwith 'twould have no other way,
Not ever once again.

tion prayer. The "candidate" spoke in the morning on "Changes and Tendencies in Theological Thinking During the Past Quarter of a Century," and in the evening his subject was "Changes which the Past Twenty-five Years have Wrought in the Attitude of the Church on Social and Educational Questions."

The congregation of the Tabernacle Church, Milwaukee, of which Rev. W. T. Dorward has been pastor for several years, recently passed a somewhat unusual resolution. It had been rumored that the former pastor entertained the thought of entering fields of usefulness other than the pastorate. In summing up the resolution the church stated "we feel that his greatest usefulness to the denomination and the expression of his highest ambition can best be accomplished by again accepting a pastorate."

We have received a cut of an architect's drawing for a proposed new temple on the present site of the Baptist Temple, Rochester, N. Y. Its estimated cost is over $1,000,000. If the plans are carried out there will be over 300 officers, a modern Sunday-school equipment, a church auditorium seating 2,000 people, a restaurant, recreation rooms, gymnasium, shower baths and many other modern facilities. The building will be churchly in its appearance and architecture and the last word in office building and church construction. It is expected that within the next thirty days the congregation will meet to pass upon the proposed plans. Rev. Clinton Wunder is the pastor.

Rev. E. L. Humphreys, after fourteen years of service in Porto Rico and four in Central America, is making his home in Rochester, N. Y. During the years of service in Porto Rico he baptized over 700 believers, organized sixteen Baptist churches and directed the construction of nine churches and chapels.

Members of the Calvary Church, Minneapolis, were greatly shocked to learn of an auto accident at Oakland, Cal., in which Mrs. Frank F. Smith and her son Merrill C. Smith lost their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Smith, Jr. were seriously injured in the same accident.

A cablegram just received by the Foreign Mission Society announces that E. W. Kelly, for forty years a missionary of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society in Burma, died very suddenly on Oct. 11. The cause of his death has not been indicated but the cablegram states that full particulars are being forwarded by mail.

One of the most important meetings of the foreign mission board is to be held Nov. 14-15, at Northfield, Mass. Joint sessions are to be held with the woman's board in order to consider matters of mutual interest, such as the general financial situation, the policy concerning government grants to mission schools in India, the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance and the Swatow typhoon disaster.

The latest reports from the Swatow typhoon disaster estimate that approximately $40,000 will be needed to repair the enormous property damage. Fortunately no lives of missionaries were lost, although there was an appalling loss among the Chinese. The Chinese evangelist under the direction of A. F. Groesbeck, was killed together with his wife and all his children. This constitutes a serious loss to the personnel of the mission.

In Northern California the laymen's councils are beginning to function at the beginning rather than at the close of the fiscal year. There were ninety-six men present at four regional councils. In the list we find "Present-day Evangelism," Chapman; "Building a Congregation, by Kreath"; "Training World Christians," by Loveland; "Modern Money Methods in the Church, Agar"; "Manual of Church Methods," Agar; "New Program of Religious Education," Betts; "Help those Women," Agar; "The Efficient Layman," Cope.

Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist Commissioner for Europe, arrived in New York on the S. S. Berengaria on Wednesday, Oct. 11. He had originally expected to reach the United States on Oct. 9. Several days of fog, stormy seas, and the breaking of one of the steamship's four propellers, caused a delay of two full days. He will be in America for a few weeks for conference with the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board, The Canadian Baptist Foreign Mission Board and the board of managers of our own foreign mission society. A limited number of speaking appointments have been arranged and it is deeply regretted that the limitation of time makes it impossible to accept the many invitations that are being received.

We Thought It Was an Obituary

We received last week a document which we read with great interest. As we proceeded the tears began to fill our eyes. We thought a good friend had passed over the river. The epistle sounded so like a funeral oration. "His soundness in gospel doctrines, his excellent analysis, the broad sweep of his thought, the excellent and impressive elocution and delivery, the powerful appeal to the mind and heart and conscience, the spiritual atmosphere and fervor. It was good to have been under the spell of this preacher" etc., etc. Our tears were all in vain it was just an evangelist's press agent advertising this particular evangelist under the guise of "news." We claim such material ought to be paid for at double the regular advertising rates.

Killam's Kollum

Safe and Sane

"We like your safe and sane stand regarding the controversies. If some folks would start in helping to work out Christ's program instead of trying to hold him to their program, the world would grow better faster." These are the words of a prominent layman, Mr. William H. Dorrance of the First Church, Detroit.

Real Competition

A good friend of THE BAPTIST who has sent in many a subscription simply for the good of the order writes that a new brand of competition has appeared on his field. He found that the pastor was planning a campaign for another paper. When pressed for the reason it was learned that in consideration of giving the agent the right of way the pastor was to have his picture and that of his church inserted in the paper. That is surely real competition. THE BAPTIST cannot meet it. Our pages would look like the entrance to a photographer's shop if we were to thus honor all our good pastors who pray and plan and push for its increased circulation. Do not despair, brother pastor. You can get your picture in the secular press from coast to coast by any slight indiscretion.

What Is Your Goal?

There will be more "kick" in your campaign for THE BAPTIST and Missions if you set a subscription goal—a worthy goal—and then stick to the game until you make that goal. We will send sample copies and cooperate with you in every way possible. What is your goal? Let us hear from you.

The Ideal and the Real

THE BAPTIST has two departments. In the business department, the manager deals with subscription matters, carloads of paper, printers, post-offices and landlords. There is all the usual confusion of a business office in the loop. There is also the editorial department. The editor is supposed to be a very learned man who lives above the clang and clamor of such earthly things as mentioned heretofore. He is supposed to be a man of leisure, free to travel, write and philosophize. This is what we supposed would be our occupation when we came into this position. Alas! it is only another mirage on the editorial desert. As a matter of fact, we sit for hours in the business office, we scrap with the printer, we call down Uncle Sam for his poor postal service, we answer a thousand questions from the office and over the phone. We then wave the magic wand and sit for a while above the clouds (of dust and smoke) and exercise the leisure and freedom of an editor. It surely is a great life for one who does not weaken.

Rush a Ship to Russia

Do the people in Russia need help? Their distress is beyond conception.

THERE is to be another "Ship of Fellowship." The great relief achievement of a year ago is to be repeated. Imperative appeals for clothing, particularly from Russia, have been coming during recent weeks, and in response to these appeals the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society has decided to ask the denomination to forward another shipment of relief supplies to Europe. The Woman's Society has heartily endorsed the idea and is already urging the women in our churches to respond with that same enthusiastic cooperation with which they helped to fill the ship a year ago.

Do the people in Russia need help? Their distress is beyond conception. Owing to the disastrous famine of last year, millions of people perished. Those who survived are now so undernourished and without adequate clothing—for in their misery they bartered every possible garment in return for food—that they cannot survive the rigors of another Russian winter unless America comes to their assistance. Relief workers and others who have visited Russia recently, including our own Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist commissioner for Europe, who arrived in America, Oct. 11, are unanimous in the opinion that clothing conditions are far more terrible and destitute than in any previous year since the great war. Last year nine countries were included in the distribution of supplies from the "Ship of Fellowship" and Russia received only her proportionate share. This year Russia is to have the largest part of all that our people contribute.

Transportation from New York Free

The American Relief Administration, of which Mr. Herbert Hoover is chairman, has kindly consented to transport from New York, without expense of ocean freight, all supplies that our churches may contribute. All packages should be sent to the warehouse by express or parcel post prepaid. Baptist Relief Committees will be used in distributing but the distribution, as last year, will be made to all who have need of help irrespective of racial, political or religious affiliations.

The following supplies are needed:

Warm garments of every description; suits and overcoats; sweaters of all sizes; blankets of all sizes; shawls and mufflers; skirts and warm dresses; stockings and socks of all sizes; underwear of all sizes; unbleached cotton cloth with needles, thread and buttons, for the making of underwear suits in Russia. Do not forget the children! Mr. Hoover's remarkable organization fed millions of children during the past famine year in Russia, but like their parents they are today sorely in need of warm clothing.

The two foreign mission societies, therefore, earnestly appeal to Baptists to participate in this second "Ship of Fellowship." We are sure that the satisfaction which so many of our churches derived last year and the blessing which they received from their participation will prompt them to respond enthusiastically and quickly to this second appeal.

The time is short and quick action is necessary. Instead of several month's time, as was afforded last year, it is hoped to have the entire achievement out of the way within a few weeks.

Shipping Instructions

1. Address American Baptist European Relief Warehouse, in care of Abercrombie Corporation, 108-126 Dobbin St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

2. All articles must be clean, serviceable and in good condition. Anything not in good condition will be discarded. The high quality of goods sent last year occasioned favorable comment. A similar quality is desired this year.

3. Ship prepaid by parcel post or express. Owing to freight congestion in the railroads, it is not advisable to ship by freight.

4. Pack garments in well secured burlap or cloth bags, properly sewed. A heavy box or barrel adds considerably to the expense of postage or express.

5. All packages must be delivered to post office or express company not later than Nov. 10. Anything shipped after that date may reach the warehouse too late.

In the interest of keeping expenses at the minimum, it might be advisable for people living in the extreme far West to ship mostly children's garments and light weight garments. People in the Middle West might ship some of the heavier weight garments. Those living in the eastern states might be expected to forward heavy blankets, overcoats and other articles. In this way the postage and express charges would be more evenly distributed.

Inasmuch as the autumn months are known throughout our Sunday schools as the home mission period culminating with the Christmas offering, it is earnestly desired that any response to this appeal on behalf of Russia shall not occasion a diminution of interest in the work and support of either of the home mission societies or in the regular activities of the White Cross circles. In meeting the needs abroad, we must not neglect the needs at home. It has been customary in previous years to forward packages of clothing and other supplies to home mission schools. It is hoped that our churches, in addition to meeting the needs in Europe, will continue to remember these institutions at home.

People Go Barefoot to Save Shoes

Once more Baptists are called upon to express their sympathy and fellowship with the suffering people of Europe. The achievement last year accomplished a measure of good far beyond all anticipation. Thousands of people received clothing and were kept warm and comfortable during the past winter. Some of the most interesting episodes in the reports of Dr. Carter Helm Jones and Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, who made an evangelistic tour in Czecho-Slovakia last summer, and in the reports of Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard, who toured the capitals of Europe, were their stories of seeing multitudes of people at the close of their various services who pointed to the garments they were wearing as having come on the "Ship of Fellowship." These fraternal visitors reported that many people were going barefoot during the summer months in order that the stockings and the shoes they received last year could be conserved for use during another winter.

The greatest good was of course spiritual. Baptists were encouraged in realizing that they were part of the great Baptist world brotherhood. Indeed, it may truly be said that the evangelistic awakening and the large number of converts reported from Europe during the past year were occasioned by the influence of this relief achievement.

Let us do it again. Those of you who had a part last year will gladly respond in order to fill the second ship. Those who did not participate for various reasons are now urged not to neglect this second opportunity. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me."

Miss Anna Hagquist, a member of the Station Staff of our Congo Mission, during a visit to Ikoko examined over 500 people for sleeping sickness. Many others came to her for the treatment of other diseases.

A new catalog with list of stereopticon lectures, classified by field, hymn sets, hymn slides, moving pictures and the list of stereopticon depositories has just come from the printer. Ask for a copy at any depository, at any literature bureau, at any state office or from H. S. Myers, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Prohibition has increased the sales of ice-cream sodas and soft drinks. The total last year was $834,000,000. Baptists did their share and it amounted to about $9,500,000. Almost the sum spent by Baptists for the New World Movement. A careful stewardship would hardly have come out that way.

Mr. Emil Winberg of the First Church, Toledo, has been in attendance at Sunday school every Sunday for the past thirty years. He is librarian and deacon of the church. Mr. Winberg was recently honored by the Sunday school. Is there another subscriber to THE BAPTIST with a better record?

George L. Cutton of Rochester, New York, a graduate of Amherst College and Rochester Theological Seminary and now executive secretary of the Sunday-school Association of Monroe County was ordained at Parsells Avenue Church, Sept. 29. C. S. Savage was moderator and A. E. Isaac, clerk. Pres. Clarence A. Barbour preached the sermon.

The Baptists of Sweden are making great preparations for the entertainment of the Baptist World Alliance which has been scheduled to meet at Stockholm, Sweden, July 21-27, 1923. At least 500 delegates from the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention ought to plan to attend this great gathering. It is suggested that churches begin now to raise special funds in order to pay the expenses of their pastors who otherwise would be unable to make the journey. Attendance at this World Convention of Baptists will furnish an opportunity of rare denominational fellowship. The meetings will be of spiritual power and world significance. Churches who send their pastors are sure to reap the benefits from such attendance in a broader vision and wider horizon which the Stockholm meeting will provide.

The Baptist

The Unfinished Task

ON the cover page is a table of figures, dull figures to the uninterested. This front cover has been for weeks dedicated to the service of good cheer. The material thereon has been inspiring both in its message and expression. It has breathed the spirit of faith and hope. In so placing the table showing the relative standing of the several state conventions based upon the percentage of payments made upon the pledges to the New World Movement we have not departed from our purpose to inspire courage and hopefulness. Beauty of expression, it is true, is wanting.

A comparison of the table with those of other months will show several striking changes in the standing of some of the states. Missouri still stays at the top of the list. Rhode Island has changed from the eleventh place in August and the twenty-fifth in September to the second in October. Delaware has changed from the sixth place in August and second in September to the third in October. New Hampshire was third in August, fifth in September and fourth in October. Vermont held the sixteenth place in August and September and is now fifth. The Metropolitan Board of New York was thirty-fifth in August, fourth in September and is now in the sixth place.

First of all these figures awaken a feeling of grave concern. Can it be that the comparatively small amount paid to date indicates the actual financial condition of our membership? This may be true in isolated cases, but taking the country at large we do not believe that there is any good reason for such a conclusion.

That full payment has not been made is due to a number of circumstances:

These pledges were taken at the close of the most intensive campaign ever put on by the denomination. Facts concerning the all-inclusive program of Baptist activities were gotten to the people to an extent never before realized.

We were still under the urge of the spirit of generosity born of war conditions. We must not shrink from the fact that the ardor of many givers has cooled. We have not succeeded in keeping a stream of interest-creating facts going out to the whole constituency.

Pledges were taken for a five-year period, payment extending over a period of four full years. Our people have not been accustomed to sustained cooperative effort over long periods of time. In our work of conservation, we have not given this fact sufficient consideration.

Local church boards of promotion or committees on benevolence are human institutions. They are not, in the majority of cases, everlastingly on the job. This is loudly true of the five-months' period covered by these figures.

We, the pledgers, also possess human traits. There are a thousand and one calls for our money. The more insistent calls have first attention. These are some of the elements which enter into our partial payment problem.

We need once and for all to dispel the notion that we are not able as a denomination to meet every dollar of the pledges made to our work. We could without impoverishment multiply the sum several fold. It is not a question of ability, but rather of disposition.

Let us not forget that the facts concerning our work at home and abroad will make the same powerful appeal to the Christian heart today as they did three years ago. A large part of our problem may be traced to the failure in securing wide circulation for THE BAPTIST and Missions.

Finally, we may well be cheered by the knowledge that our people are an honorable body of men and women. The obligations of Baptist individuals at the bank are met promptly. The grocer, butcher, tailor and automobile agent are paid in full and we believe with all our heart that the obligations to the work of the kingdom of these same men and women will be paid one hundred cents on the dollar. Wise publicity, conscientious work upon the part of the pastor and his workers will soon transform the figures on the cover page.

Lloyd George—Fighter

THE political maneuvers in Great Britain are so different from our own that it is hard for a Yankee to understand just what is taking place in England today. The majority of the ministry refused to support the policies of David Lloyd George. He in turn handed his resignation to the king, with the suggestion that Bonar Law be requested to form a temporary government until a general election can be held. The king has made the request of Mr. Law and the doughty little Welshman has rolled up his sleeves and plunged into a whirlwind campaign with the purpose of forming a new party which will support him in his policies.

The ministry which has just resigned after ruling the empire for six of the most critical years of its history was a coalition government. The crisis which the empire faced led to a blending of political parties for the sake of effectiveness. In recent months there has been a growing restlessness upon the part of the conservative party and for a much longer period the extreme elements of the liberal party have dogged the steps of the premier. Lloyd George leaves office without any party back of him. He believes that a majority of the conservative party leaders and of the liberal party will endorse his principles for dealing with mooted questions at home and abroad. He proposes to make a new "party of the center." It will be of the greatest interest to watch the outcome which will be manifest in a few weeks. In the meantime we understand that the premier went down to defeat smiling. In a speech in London Mrs. George is reported to have said of her husband, "He loves a fight, and his spirit goes up and his health improves when there is a fight going on. I am always pleased when there is a fight for he gives me far less trouble. A fight is like a tonic to him." This might have been said by Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt. It is a safe guess that David Lloyd George, if he lives, will continue to be the most outstanding figure in British public life for some years to come.

The Breadth of the Baptist Principle

AS Baptists we claim to stand by the Word, staunch and true, but just as inveterately, if we be true Baptists, we stand with each other as brethren broadly, and generously, holding the truth in love. The roots are deep and strong, but the line is gone out into all the world and amongst all kinds and conditions of men, and we have taken them all in to be humble followers of the Lamb and seekers after the faith in a very large sense. The doctrine and fellowship of the Baptists, in a protestant way, is the biggest ecclesiastical tabernacle under the sun, and covers a larger variety of faith and fealty than any other evangelical denomination. Make your confession as you will, or make no confession at all, save in your life—but stay by the Book in its strong, clear declarations. You are a brother Baptist.

This is our pride, and this is our peril. We have a great Bible, and we have a great liberty. We take it "as it reads," but as it reads to us, as individual souls, always using reason and judgment and standing by the faith once delivered. That is the reason there are so many of us, because indeed there are so many kinds of us—and we are all Baptists holding to the Book we profess our sufficient authority and following the Christ we love. The more we love the Christ the more we love the brethren however variant our minds and ways; so only we dispute not the essential verities of his Word.

Let a man alone with his Bible, and as Dr. Gambrell in the South used genially to say, "his conscience working right," he will come out all right—our brother in the faith. Only don't hinder or hamper him. Let him come his own way, and give him the glad hand when we meet. That is the way Baptists grow and that is the way Baptists came to be. It is the way, we believe, those two great contingents of the simple faith that are just now emerging from the confused welter of things in Russia, the Baptist evangelicals and the Christian evangelicals are going to get together. In simple fealty to the truth and in generous fraternity to each other, they will meet—God grant it soon—and there will be a new broad-sweeping testimony to New Testament faith and practice, that will be one of the solacing marvels of these vexed days of world transition.

It behooves Baptists to be calm today, and stand true. "He that believeth shall not make haste." God's hand is upon us. Let him work out his sovereign will. Only be loyal to the Word, the whole Word and love the brethren.

The Air of Finality

"NOW this is final," was a statement made emphatic by threefold repetition in a communication which was read recently before a denominational committee. A gentleman commenting upon the letter said, "This letter seems to have an air of finality." Most men who have lived past their first score of years have learned, however, that life, notwithstanding the air of finality, is for the most part a matter of adaptation and adjustment—a matter of give and take.

In the great railroad shopmen's strike there was an air of finality about the statements issued by the contending parties. Representatives of the railroad officials stated once and for all that "seniority rights" would not be restored in the case of employes who did not return to work on or before a certain date. Spokesmen for the shopmen were just as emphatic in their declaration that the strike would never be settled until the seniority rights and former wages were restored. Both the form and words used in these official statements made it appear that the last word had been spoken. The result was a deadlock which continued for many weeks. As the strike was in the process of settlement, the conditions of settlement as published clearly indicated a compromise. The words "seniority rights" were studiously avoided but the benefits signified were vouchsafed the men whose wages were reduced. This is a fair illustration of what takes place every day in the business world, where life is constantly a matter of give and take.

In the family everything is not settled for life when assent is given to the questions of the marriage ceremony. Even when the wife promises to "obey" and the man promises to "endow," most women continue to have their way and find it necessary to get along with "pin money." Broken homes, to our shame as a nation, are increasing in number and the cause can often be traced to the failure to give and take, passed off under the guise of incompatibility. S-e-l-f-s-u-r-r-e-n-d-e-r spells happy home. The air of finality upon the part of any member makes for discord.

Even more marked in the church is the evil wrought by those who possess the air of finality. Some persons among us insist, as if wisdom came into the world with them and would perish at their going, that in theology nothing is fixed. Everything is in a fluid state. On the other hand another group, with equal confidence, asserts that everything is fixed. With the members of this group to contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints means to contend for a definite body of doctrine. They would formulate this doctrine and make it the measuring stick of orthodoxy. The other group stresses faith as the "divinely wrought, loving and hearty reliance upon God and his promise of salvation through Christ." Is one group right and the other wrong? Is it a case of either this or that? We think not. We believe that there is a doctrinal foundation for our faith and we also believe that in the last analysis the religion of Christ is a way of life rather than a system of theology. A man may have convictions without being dogmatic. The note of authority need not be the air of finality.

No More War!

THE Christian world is discussing everywhere a thrilling challenge to the churches issued by Dr. Jowett through the columns of The British Weekly. After describing in vivid fashion the restless condition of Europe today he pleads with the Christian churches to exercise their prophetic function. Here are some striking sentences that give the gist of his appeal. "The most commanding social necessity of our time is for the church of Christ to organize her powers against the forces which are working for international bitterness and alienation." "Can any one doubt that the baser passions are burning again, engendering suspicion and misunderstanding and driving governments into mistrust and alienation?" "The politicians have failed in establishing a righteous peace and everywhere men are feeling the need of some power which shall lift all political relationships out of the rut and the mire in which they are fallen and create the possibility of national and international fraternity." "But fraternity must have a moral core. It is not a matter of just feeling nice to one another. It is the high necessity of establishing the will of God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, in all the relationships of mankind." "I am therefore eager that the church should play her part in the fateful hours of our own day." "On some appointed day let the believers in Jesus Christ go to their churches, as they went in the early days of the war, and in some simultaneous act of dedication and audible declaration, let them proclaim their desire and purpose for a sacred peace and their belief in the common brotherhood of mankind." "I would go further than this. In every nation I would have representative leaders of the Christian church meeting together, not in councils of war, but in councils of peace, to express the luminous principles of our Lord on some of the grave matters which are now plunging the world into confusion and strife."

What should be the answer of the churches in America to such a challenge? Europe appears to be drifting rapidly to a new war. The civilized nations of Europe and Asia are more impotent to dispel the war clouds than they were in 1914, and their attitude toward one another serves to fan the flames of suspicion, hatred, animosity and conflict of interest. No constructive leadership seems to be emerging to give direction to the blind impulses that are struggling aimlessly toward the light. If war results in Europe upon a scale of any breadth, experience has proved how impossible it will be for the United States to stand aloof. From every side are heard the voices of statesmen declaring that in the extremity of statesmanship only the practice of the principles of the Christian religion can suffice to ward off calamity. Says the New Republic, "If a nominally Christian civilization is destroyed or is definitely retarded as a consequence of a flagrant ignoring of Christian ethics, the church whose office it is to perpetuate the gospel of Jesus on earth will become an object of contempt."

Gladly would we welcome a great gathering of Christian leaders in this country called to consider the supreme necessity of peace on earth and the principles and practices which alone can make peace possible. Let differences of name and creed and claim be for once forgotten and buried beneath a great consuming passion for humanity and Christ! Difficulties there are doubtless, but love can find a way! Let Christian intelligence and conscience awake, and speak with a united voice in tones that all rulers everywhere must hear and heed! Let them say without equivocation that there must be no more war!

"When Winter Comes"

FOR our own souls' sake we dare not become calloused to the cries of suffering and misery from over the sea. The New York Times under the above title gives us a picture of the dread with which millions face the coming of winter:

"In the thoughts of millions in Russia and Turkey this is not the title of a popular novel. It is their shuddering cry at the approach of a dreaded fact. For us in America, now that the mines are pouring forth their coal again, winter has no great terror. It brings to children and youth and to most of the mature a certain zest of life in its challenges of frost and ice and snow with the Christmas season at its heart. But it will be a very different season for hundreds of thousands of refugees, mostly women and children, on the shores of the Aegean this year, shelterless and without sufficient food or clothing, having gone forth as Hecuba from that same coast of Asia Minor all of whose ways were 'filled with fire,' and seeing, as that ancient queen of Troy, nothing in the hand of God save the 'rod of their affliction' and 'the eternal hate.'"

"According to our correspondent's dispatch from Moscow, there are millions who will be facing starvation when winter comes in Russia. In July the reports were hopeful. Not only was there enough food for all Russia in prospect if it could be distributed, but the Soviet government estimated that it would have by way of revenue in kind, through progressive food taxes, $100,000,000. But the harvest is ended, and there's another story. An editorial in Izvestia says 'famine won't finish this year.' Winter, which is summer's heir, finds that it has but a meager heritage in Russia, not enough to go around, by five or seven millions. Locusts and local droughts, shortage of cattle and weakness of the laborers have come as cumulative causes upon the heels of communism. And yet Trotzky is talking of a more powerful army! Will ever national common-sense or international good-will come to make glorious summer of this winter of discontent and misery that is creeping upon the earth in these autumn days? What America does will more than anything else determine."

Our Ship of Fellowship is destined to meet the needs of some of those who shiver with the cold without sufficient clothing and without suitable food.

Preach Christ Crucified

Acts 18: 1-11; II Corinthians 1: 14-17; 2:2.

A sermon preached in Hampstead Garden Suburb Free Church, London, England, on September 29, 1922

By DR. T. REAVELEY GLOVER

PAUL was brought into Europe by a vision, a dream, and it seemed to be a dream, this idea that he could make an impression on the ancient world of European Greece and of Italy and of the regions beyond. He speaks in one place and another: he is put in prison, he is beaten, he is persecuted, he has to fly. He goes to Athens and is given a hearing, until he reached the center of his story, and then the assembly broke up in laughter. The politer people said they would hear him again, and we know what that means.

And then he came to Corinth. I want you to think for a little of that ancient city, restored by Julius Caesar about a hundred years before. A great port, a great center of the shipping and mercantile life of the Mediterranean world, with all the mixture of races that you get in such a place—the flavour of New York and Calcutta and London and other places like them. All the races of all the world, with all their ways of thinking, which were not often very deep, and all their ways of living, which were generally superficial: the satisfaction of the moment, the zest of business. "Live today," said the Epicurean, and they lived when they were in Corinth. It was a proverb that it was not every man's luck to go to Corinth, and I need not elaborate the meaning of the proverb. It was a foul city, a city of shame, squalor, and slavery—a horrible place. Jews, Greeks, Romans, Syrians, Armenians, Egyptians—all sorts and kinds of people, living in this present world, living in the superficial, living in the phenomenal, in the pleasure of the moment and the business of the day. A society, one might almost say, of dissolution, nearer dissolution than it realized.

No Improvement in Five Hundred Years

A great Cambridge scholar has lately brought out that the whole agricultural system of the ancient world was breaking down. Industry and agriculture alike were based on slavery and the supply of slaves. The wars were over and there was no opportunity of enslaving mankind. Industry was unsound; slavery was still rampant, with all that it means in the degradation of man and the degradation of woman and the stagnation of industry. In five hundred years or more there was no improvement in the tone of that world. The population declined. Slavery militates against marriage, against the family. There were the rich and there were the vulgar and the people connected with the great financial interests of Rome; and at the bottom there was another area of society, squalid beyond what we can guess.

And what of the higher life of the city? There surely must be something that is right in a city like that; surely I am blackening the picture too much. Go, you say, north of Corinth, look at the beautiful life that scarcely a generation later Plutarch pictures in Boetia, a country depopulated, agricultural, with small towns. But we are talking about Corinth—what of the higher life of Corinth? Were there no philosophers, no public teachers? Was there no religion? There were these things, but, unhappily, philosophy had begun to repeat the words of the ancients in new combinations. Safety in numbers, safety in eclecticism, safety in compromise. Nothing new, except a new blending of things that ought to be incompatible if you thought them out—but by not thinking very deeply you can make all sorts of things agree. It is a British characteristic, so we ought to understand it. Were there no popular preachers? I think of one a little later than this, there may have been others like him; a man of great learning and great rhetorical gifts. He went through a conversion, a conversion from the quest for praise to a sense of mission, so that he had to go round the world and teach men and women to live a higher life. Chrysostom did his best and there may have been men like him in Corinth. And religion? The great temple was the temple of Aphrodite. It was consecrated to shame—like temples I have been in in India. And people talk about the contribution that Hinduism is to make to Christianity! You will forgive me if I think of those temples and what I have seen and known there. That was what religion was doing in this place.

Now what was Paul to do? What was the Gospel with which he was in charge? What can you say to a community like that? Have you ever thought? Well, I have had to think. I have stood in an Indian town in the South and seen the masses of the people going by, dark-skinned—you see dark skin in the South, and the long hair of the Hindu; masses of people, as you see them at Liverpool Street Station in the evening—dark skinned and with another language. Think of the conditions—ingrained beliefs. Do you know what it is to stand in a crowd like that and wonder what impression for Jesus Christ can ever be made on these people, on these masses, and with all that lies behind them? Paul stood in the middle of these people, and the passage that we have read tells us that he had the same experience; he was "pressed in the spirit."

A Neglected Paul

I want you to realize that Paul has been neglected for the last twenty years in our pulpits and in our thoughts. I think there have been more silly things, sillier things, said about St. Paul than about any other part of the Scriptures in the last twenty years, and that is saying a good deal. I want you to realize that Paul grew up in a Gentile town, that he played with Gentile boys, that he watched Gentile sports, that he learned in school with Gentiles and that he loved Gentiles. And I want you to realize how idolatry pressed on that spirit. Do you know what it means? Do you know what idolatry means? I have gone over temples in Southern India, as I said, and at the end felt a sympathy that perhaps you would not call Christian—I do not know what you call Christian today, I do not mind much by now; you may not call it Christian, but it was a sympathy with the Mohammedan who swept over and through the mountains into that country and destroyed those temples with their carvings of shame wherever he could and broke those obscene idols and stamped the whole pollution under foot as far as in him lay. Well, that is not the way that India is going to be won for Christ.

Paul's Method

But that is the burden of idolatry; and Paul, with the love of men in his heart and the flaming Jewish monotheist hatred of idolatry, is in the middle of that town, and what is he to do? Oh, approach them on their best side and see what is good in the other religions! Very well; he tried it. He tried it at Athens. He quoted from Aratus. That is the way to approach some people. Compromise again; and he would not compromise. What was he to bring? He had sacraments—baptism. Oh, they had baptisms, much more striking and effectual baptisms than the Christian—I need not pause to describe them; the description is well known—and much more impressive, with a longer tradition, with a rich association of spiritual ideas—at any rate, religious ideas I mean; older baptisms than Paul knew. It is very interesting that Paul never refers to his own baptism in his extant letters. He thanks God that he baptised none of these people, except about three or four. And then there is the Lord's Supper; some of you know quite well how lately an attempt has been made to make that the center of the early Christian message, to show that Christianity was neither of those so-called mystery religions. It was not so that Paul looked at it. Do remember in all these speculations that Paul was a Jew, of the race to whom had been entrusted the oracles of God, who could not confound God with the vile abominations of the heathen. You may not sympathize with the Jew, but if you wish to understand Paul you must take that in.

Paul was courting disaster in going straight across all the religious associations of the people: the minimum of sacrament, no compromise with their religious ideas, no compromise with their philosophic outlook; and preaching the story that men had laughed at in Athens. "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ"—that is bad enough—"and him crucified"—that puts the acme of the ridiculous on the whole thing. Yet the Christian church was made by that. I am convinced more and more that that is the only message that the Christian church has that is worth giving.

We live in an age, it seems to me, very like that age of decline. As you know, there are those—who are perhaps laughed at at times in the daily press but who perhaps know more than those who laugh at them about the subject under discussion—who ask whether we are not very much in the position today of the people who saw the ancient civilization break down and die and give place to an age of barbarism. A man came and talked to the students of Cambridge in the first term of the war and said the war was going to mean the spiritual regeneration of this country. Inside a year the Y. M. C. A. sent me to work in a venereal disease camp where there were 1400 patients, and they came in thirty and forty a day. It was a curious comment on that talk. And some of you know what some of the streets of London were like—I don't think many of you do. I don't think that you English people can know how London impressed the colonial and how it impresses the colonial at the best of times.

Where is the moral fiber in this country today? In the government? In the Christian church? Do you think that if the Christian church made a protest against war or against anything that there is any mass of public opinion that would pay the least attention to it? I wonder. What would the practical people say? They would want to know how the Christian Church was going to vote at the next election. As I look at the story of our native land, and I have given some attention to it, I wonder if we were ever so short of principle or anything that could pass for principle, since William the Fourth died. What do we propose? Chiefly compromise on every question that rises; and simultaneously, as is pointed out by others, the old paganisms are rising from their graves. The Witch of Endor is not very far away; you can see her whenever you like, and she can bring you into communication with Samuel, I suppose, and anybody else. Why, even today a man whom once we called a man of science thinks it worth while to discuss whether there is whisky and soda in the next world! That is what spiritual things have come to—compromise with paganism, reaction, everything cloaked by the word mysticism, which, as Dean Inge has said, is the most ambiguous of words, as ambiguous as socialism.

Not Tired of Jesus Christ

What is the Christian church going to say or do? Now the longer I live and the more I see of things, the more I am convinced that the Christian church must take the stand of Paul in Corinth. It must preach Jesus Christ. I have been about a good deal, and I find that wherever anybody will speak with any degree of seriousness about Jesus Christ, people will listen—I find I do myself. You hear splendid sermons about all sorts of things, and you forget them, but if in the course of the sermon something has been said that seems to shed a gleam of light upon that life and upon that character, you remember that. That is my experience; it is what gives value to the whole story. Men and women are not tired of Jesus Christ.

The thing that comes to me is this: That you and I in the Christian church have been afraid of our message and afraid of our Master. And I will say this: I do not care what you preach about Jesus Christ as long as it is real. Any kind of preaching of Jesus that is real—if you do not like to call him real God call him real man, mere man, if you like—anything that will bring him into the hearts of men as real is going to help men and women. And we all need help as we never did before. I wonder how many of you have any hope for the future. When I came back from the colonies I did not like the way the English people talked about them; no, on one side or the other. These things mean

The Decision

*I HAVE a life in Christ to live,
But, ere I live it, must I wait
Till learning can clear answer give
Of this and that book's date?
I have a life in Christ to live,
I have a death in Christ to die;
And must I wait till science give
All doubts a full reply?*

*Nay, rather, while the sea of doubt
Is raging wildly round about,
Questing of life and death and sin,
Let me creep within Thy fold, O Christ, and at thy feet
Take but the lowest seat.
And hear thine awful voice repeat
In gentlest accents, heavenly sweet,
"Come unto me, and rest:
Believe me, and be blest."*

—JOHN CAMPBELL SHAIER

so much to you. What is the hope for the British Empire? What is the hope for a civilization? As I think of these things the words of the old hymn—I don't suppose you often have it—come back to me:

"Plunged in a gulf of dark despair,
We ruined sinners lay."

Except that we do not say we are sinners, the rest is true; and I know no hope for a rational person apart from Jesus Christ today. Philanthropy without him is no good—why in the wide world should you be philanthropic? is the question. Ethics are no good. Amelioration? We want something more. We want somebody who believes in man and believes in God; and by now Jesus Christ is the only teacher who answers to that description.

Then I want you to think of him crucified. Men and women, what lies before you and me? Once I was in Russia; and what has happened to the educated people there, to the cultured, to the business people? Four million of them have been killed, I hear. Don't you think that to some Russians there is a new meaning in the "Jesus who was crucified"? Don't you think that there is meaning for people today in the story of the Saviour who came and went through the kind of world that we know today and came to the dreadful end, went through serenely, believing in God, and knowing that by bearing the cross he was going to win men for God? I want you to study history, I want you to look back, to realize that it was the crucified Jesus that did save the world, that did take away the sin of the world.

You say I have drawn a dark picture, and now I talk of the sin of the world being taken away. Yes, it is a darker picture than I ever dreamed could be drawn of Europe, and it is true, but not yet is it as dark as that world; and to you in despair about the world, in despair about something else, you who have set out to get the world better, to get the world saved, to stand between your children and the world, the flesh, and the devil—and there are very few people who will stand between them and those things today if you do not—can you do it? I do not know how you can with hope, unless Jesus Christ and he crucified has something to say; and if he says it you will trust the children and you will trust the Saviour, you will be able to look forward and you will realize that you have got a message. After all, that is why we feel such poor fools today, because with all this you and I are like "the pious Aeneas" of Virgil, preparing and hesitating to say many things; in the meantime, has not the unhappy Dido gone to her death? When we believe Jesus Christ we have something to say. As we know him better, we shall have more to say, and as we live with him we shall have more still to say; as we live deeper and deeper into his life and realize what he can do in saving us from sin and saving our dear ones and helping us to build up a crumbled world we shall have more and more to say.

One of the great discoveries I think is to realize how little we know about Jesus Christ and to realize that if eternity is as long as people say we shall still be learning the meaning and the value. There are many things, many questions, that occupy a man who is serious about the spiritual life, but after all to me it has come more and more to be summed up in the chorus of that Keswick hymn:

"Jesus, I am resting, resting in the joy of what thou art,

I am finding out the greatness of thy loving heart."

We know that it is a loving heart, because he was crucified for us.

Now do you believe that a message like that will really appeal to the sin and sorrow of London or Corinth or Chicago or any other place? As I was coming here a passage came to me from the diary of David Livingstone. He tells us how when he was travelling—writing the diary while he was doing it—in South Africa, with savages, filthy in body, in conduct, and in conversation, foul as the savage is, and he alone, a white man, sick and in danger among them—he writes in his diary, "I love to preach to them about the passion of the great Mediator." Fancy speaking to people like that about the sufferings of Jesus Christ! He goes on "It warms my own heart." It told. These men realized the great man; savages as they were, they realized that, and the message was part of what they realized. Do you and I believe that people will respond? They are so slow. That is what all we teachers say about our pupils; their fathers and mothers who believe in them more than we do say that if they had better teachers perhaps they would not be so slow. Shall we consecrate ourselves to be better teachers of Jesus Christ? Shall we give ourselves to know him, to think oftener about him, to ask ourselves oftener what is the meaning of the cross? I think some of these things ought to be preached about in season and out of season. I do not think it matters very much whether you quite understand them or not. I do not think we shall understand them for a long time; but to go face to face with a great thing like the cross of Christ and honestly realize how far above us and how far beyond us it is, is a means of grace. May I urge you to think of Paul in Corinth, of Livingstone in South Africa, and to recall oftener to yourselves and for those about you the life of the Great Mediator, Jesus Christ and him crucified?

Father, Keep Us

DOWN on the hills gently falling,
Comes the mantle of closing day,
And our souls on thee, Lord, calling,
Thus to thee humbly pray.
For only on thee relying,
We offer our evening prayer,
And we pray thee, Lord, for Jesus' sake
To have us within thy care,
Ever keep us within thy care.

Thus while we are helpless sleeping,
And thine angels do watch our rest.
Grant thy care to our absent loved ones
May they heed thine saving behest,
And ever our Father save them
From Sin and from error's night,
And save them at last we humbly pray
Within thy home of light.

The Place of the Layman in the Life of the Church

By E. M. BOWKER

IN the subject for discussion, there can be no misunderstanding or serious dispute. The church should play an important part in the life of every man. It should be a factor in his business and in his home. To make the most of life, he should have a love of Christ in his heart. We agree to this extent.

We must, however, first, lay hold of the layman and secure his membership in the church; this is the work of every member. I know that this problem has been close to the heart of every minister present. It must have been the subject of his thought during wakeful moments, and one that he has pondered over more than I have.

From the layman's standpoint, the Protestant church has been a failure in regard to securing and holding the membership of the men in the church. It has done somewhat better with the women. Now I am not saying that the church is a failure. Far from it. It has battled for the right for the poor, for the oppressed, all down through the ages. Moral standards have greatly improved within the memory of those present. Business and professional standards have improved and the ethics of the particular trade or profession are discussed at almost every meeting held in the interest of the different trade and professional associations. Only a few years ago, the managers of large private business corporations apparently believed that if their conduct was within the strict and technical rules of law, it was immune from private and public attack; that if no public law was violated, the corporation should be permitted to earn unlimited profits and treat its customers and employees with indifference to moral principles. Weaker competitors were forced out of business. Competition was the death of trade, not the life of it. And perfection is not yet. The profiteer in the sale of the necessities of life and comfort, and the laborer who asks for extortionate wages, as well as the professional and expert who ask for unreasonable fees are still with us.

Youth Know Right Standards

The church has certainly not been a failure in the moral education of youth during the last few generations, which has been indelibly impressed upon the minds of the active men and women of his day. They know the right standards of conduct, even if they do not always follow those standards. This is not the work of man, but of woman. Man contributed financially, indirectly, but the active work of the church and Sunday school for the last few generations has been largely performed by the women.

In ministering to man, the church is not doing the work that it should. Over one-half of the American people are outside the church. Not one man in one hundred goes to church with any regularity. Less than half the boys go to Sunday school and they all graduate at sixteen. Those who go every Sunday secure only twenty-six hours of instruction during the year.

The church is securing fair financial backing. The ministers are being paid a little better than they were ten years ago. Some progress has been made with the over-church problem and the different denominations are working together with somewhat more love each for the other. The Sunday schools are being organized and managed more carefully and the average attendance has been increased somewhat during the last few years.

But coming back to our subject again, we must admit that the men are not even going to church, to say nothing of their becoming members. The church is not appealing to them. They have not been made to feel that there was something in the church for them to do, but rather that the church was for the women and children to attend and manage. They insist upon their children going to church, but set no example themselves.

A "Joining" Age

The instinct for social stability and group attachments is in us all. This is a "joining" age. The men are joining the secret organizations by the thousands and paying large initiatory fees for the privilege. Evidently, the greater number consider organized religion as dull and barren. I do not believe that the secret society promises anything that the church cannot and should not give. Sociability, friendships, position, charity, social work, the study of public morals and business ethics, citizenship, Americanization. These can all be as well given to man by the church and should be promised to him, and held out as an inducement to secure and retain his membership, and promised with some expectation of accomplishing something in the immediate betterment of his own community.

The layman does not want merely to be preached to. He says to himself, "I am honest and upright; I am kind to my wife and children; I am providing them with every comfort that is within my means; I stay at home and do not quarrel with my neighbors; I do my part in every public charity; I support the church. Why should I attend? I do not need any reforming. What is there for me to do that the women are not doing?"

Why does he stay away from church? Simply because there is nothing for him to do. He wants to work, not necessarily to hold office. He wants something Big to do, something tangible, something constructive, and he wants to hit hard.

There are a large number of things that can be done to change this condition. The opportunity for doing good in our own community is unlimited. The poor we have with us always. The mentally defective and the delinquent are in every town. Problems between the rich and poor, capital and labor, unemployment, child labor, ignorance, disease, crime, are some of the things that the church has very little to do with, although it stands for betterment and improvement all along the line. This work, however, is being done by the selectmen, the overseer of the poor, the Red Cross, the Children's Aid Society, Parent-Teachers Association, secret societies, Americanization bureau, and other social agencies, and not by the church.

The reason why this work is being done through other agencies than the church is somewhat more difficult to explain. My personal opinion is that they will not work for an organization of which they are not a part. A large number of the best workers in different lines of social work are not members of the church. Naturally they want to share in the glory and enthusiasm of success. They profess to be Christians; they are living in Christian communities. Morally there is no reason why 95 per cent of the men should not be accepted as members.

I certainly would not want the church to lower any of its standards for admission to membership. You certainly would not make any drastic change, if I should recommend it. This is, however, the place where we come ashore. A belief in God and a willingness to take Christ as a leader should be sufficient to entitle any one to membership. To stand up in church and make a confession of faith is repellent to most men. They know that they have made mistakes, that others know it, and they will not play the hypocrite.

Of the whole number baptized by the churches represented by this association last year, how many were men? I will venture the statement that not one was over twenty-one years of age.

Baptizing the Child

I understand something of the unwillingness of the Baptist to force acceptance of Christ upon an irresponsible child, who does not know who he was or what he taught. You are not baptizing the men, and you cannot, because of your belief, baptize the infant. Your only field of work to secure male members is during a few years in the early adolescent period or earlier still, from ten to twelve. This being true, is there any reason why you should not baptize every child when he becomes, let us say, ten years of age? Certainly before that time, he knows something about Christ and why he lived and suffered. If he has attended Sunday school with some degree of regularity for a year, he has formed some idea of what the church stands for and no embarrassing questions should be asked.

I have been a Sunday-school teacher of a small boys' class for seven or eight years. I have boys of my own. There is a time in the life of the boy when he is willing to join anything and everything, and without any reflection upon the church, I say, that that is the Golden Age for male membership. Baptize him and receive him into membership. He may go wrong after that, but the church will exert a splendid influence in his life for good and a part, at least, of the problem of the layman and the church will have been solved.

Whitefield, N. H.

IF you want power in your house, in your Bible class, in your social circle, in your nation, or in the church of Christ, then come into contact with Jesus, and you will be able by faith to influence your family, by faith to overcome the world, by faith to bless others, by faith to live a life to the glory of God.—Andrew Murray.

Gandhi's Gospel: An Open Letter for American Readers

Reprinted from "Indian Witness" for May 31, 1922

By BRENTON THOBURN BADLEY

REFERENCES in American papers, religious as well as secular make it appear that America is getting a wrong "slant" on Gandhi's standing and significance in this land. His supporters in the United States have shrewdly succeeded in putting forth just those aspects of his life and teachings that are calculated to captivate American thinking. They purposely do not draw a full length portrait. The man has never had the support of the best Indian intellect. It has evidently been kept from America that he has as many and bitter opponents among the conservatives and liberals of the Indian camp, as among any who hail from Britain or America.

It apparently has not been brought to light for the general reader in America that a large and influential section of Hindus feel that Gandhi has played all along into the hands of the Mohammedans who have their own ulterior motives to serve. The fact is that Islam has been back of this non-cooperation movement with all its strength. Indeed, without them the movement could probably never have gone as far as it has. It is not too much to say that Mohammedan fibre has stiffened the entire fabric. The Moslem-Hindu unity may be regarded as a purely political weapon, and to outsiders it seems unthinkable that these two utterly dissimilar elements would hold together if Britain withdrew.

Watching China

Thinking India has been watching China and knows that an independent democracy could no more be set up here than a modern republic has been established there. Elements are not wanting in our population that would welcome chaos such as China is experiencing; but they are the classes who would prefer to live in anarchy, for they subsist by plunder. If 90 per cent of America's male citizens could not read or write, and 98 per cent of the women were wholly illiterate, and American statesmen believed that we could still have a safe and enlightened republic there, they might be invited over by Gandhi's followers to help run his show over here!

Gandhi's movement really failed before the end of 1920, when he invited Indian lawyers to give up their practice in British courts of justice and they refused; when he urged Indian educators to break up the educational system established by the British, and they went on with the work of the schools and colleges; when he appealed to Indian students to quit the government-aided institutions, and they would not be persuaded; when he besought Indian members elected to the new legislative councils to withdraw from those assemblies, and they ignored his pleas; when he remonstrated with Indian merchants in the matter of handling foreign goods, and they persisted in doing so.

Gandhi thus wholly failed to win the educated classes for his fantastic theories; and that was the time for him to see that he was wrong and to retire. What did he do? He turned to the masses; he deliberately chose to try to educate the rabble in his political schemes. This was fatal,—alike to him and the country. One cannot educate a rabble in anything! He did succeed in a marvellous way in imbuing them with a hatred for the existing government and a contempt for all established authority. Riots, murder and massacres became the order of the day, and Gandhi did not deny that they were the direct outcome of his teachings. Instead, he did penance and fasted, and talked spiritual piffle on the occasion of each new violent outbreak. His followers were not yet sufficiently "purified" to be expected to act as they should. He saw that he could not guide or control the masses whom he aroused; but he would not desist from teaching them to hate and oppose what he termed the "satanic" government of Britain in India. Law-abiding sections of the community, through great and influential journals all over the land, urged him to reconsider his methods, but in vain,—he had received the ultimate enlightenment! Multitudes of intelligent and respectable Indians despised his methods, yet did not come out openly against him: some from fear of the consequences; most of them because of the profound respect his personal life has inspired throughout India.

No student of Indian affairs can doubt that Gandhi is a visionary, an idealist unable to face the facts of national life, unwilling to admit that the impossible cannot be the expedient. Who but a blind devotee to a theory could have announced to India in the summer of 1920, that by December 31 of that year India would have home-rule, a new government independent of the British? And on what conditions did he offer this boon? On condition that every Indian household would take to the hand-spinning-wheel, discarding foreign cloth of all kinds; that a fund of 10,000,000 rupees ($3,000,000) was raised for the new cause; and on condition that there should be a boycott of all British-Indian institutions, together with a purification of self by sacrifice. It was the declaration of a mind so obsessed with its own theories as to be unable to think in terms of actual life. When December had gone and nothing had happened to fulfil his prophecy, Gandhi changed the date to the following March, and after that date he pushed the hope still further into the future. Now no dates are announced!

Could America read calmly that the non-cooperators had announced mass civil disobedience as one weapon to be used; that the loyalty of the Indian army was openly tampered with; that the refusal to pay taxes was to be instituted? What could all this effect, but lawlessness and bloodshed? The British government, tolerant to an amazing and dangerous degree, finally was compelled to call a halt to such an infamous procedure. This surely was not India on the true road to self-government!

Political Camp Filled with Squabblers

And so Gandhi is in jail, convicted on his own admission of sedition and treason to the government. India is apparently relieved! Perhaps no one breathes more easily than Gandhi himself, who thus manages to get away from a situation he had created and was not able to control. There is general regret that so saintly a man should be behind the bars; but even a saint must not insist on working with his eyes shut, in a busy and hurrying world, or insist on multitudes following him in his dangerous course! Meantime, his political camp is filled with squabblers. There is no leader for his movement. The "charkha" (spinning wheel) claims have not materialized. Subscriptions to the seditious "Swaraj" fund do not seem to have solved anything. Wearing "khaddar" (homespun cotton) seems useless, as the mills have been turning out quantities of it (why not, since there was a demand?); and one cannot tell whether it is made by the sacred charkha or the diabolical mills! The railways are as popular as ever; the postal and telegraphic system continues its "baneful" work; while modern science and inventions thrive, despite the anathemas heaped upon them by the great politico-philosopher of Hindustan.

Why should America think that all India is so foolish and shortsighted as to prefer the negations held out to them by Gandhi, to the constructive, far reaching reforms introduced by the British-Indian government; granting as large a measure of independence as the country is now prepared to assume, and guaranteeing ultimate home rule within the greatest empire the world has ever known? How could it better the situation that Gandhi was a man in personal life above reproach, himself spiritually minded and living a life of self-sacrifice? If he were fitted to be a philosopher, he might well have taken a chair in some neo-Hindu seminary; but why mount a political platform and attempt to dictate anarchistic and revolutionary theories, coupled to impracticable

The Challenge

*HUNGER and Want are abroad in the land,
And behind them is stalking Disaster.
Children aweary are crying for bread,
And receiving a stone as their answer.*

*Many and great are the bodily needs—
Sunshine and shelter and nurture.
Greater by far are the needs of the mind
For the poise and control of the body.*

*Greatest of all are the needs of the soul
For the light and love of the gospel
Countless the lives that are twisted with sin,
Stunted and broken and famished.*

*In the heavy-sweet scent of the Orient dusk
Or the hard, garish light of our cities,
Benumbed and bewildered they hopelessly wait
The long-delayed message of comfort.*

*Ours is the terrible failure and want,
The want of a Christ-given vision,
Poverty bred in the self-centred soul
Is the saddest of all life's disasters.*

*Let us wake then, oh women of visionless ease,
Lest our own souls be shriveled and starving
In pity and love let us answer their cry
And go forth, bearing bread for God's children.*

and absurd conditions, in a land where by nature and training they are doomed to failure? Remarkably enough, he was doing this before he had any assurance or even plan as to what government was to succeed the one he sought to overthrow! Chance or luck or God,—at any rate something would, in some way, raise up a government to take the place of the present "satanic" one!

Could sane India swallow such drive? Could American missionaries, trained to practical politics and accustomed to use their reason in all things, be expected to look favorably upon such a cause, even though Gandhi propagandists in America had succeeded in tingeing the American press with sentiments favorable to this seditious movement and even comparing it on equal terms with the American Revolution?

It should not be supposed that a large body of American men and women coming to this land for missionary service will lose their natural instincts, forget their American principles, and forsake their American point of view, thus becoming un-American. Individual variations and eccentricities may always be expected; but, fundamentally, a body of Americans in India will substantially interpret a situation out here in the same way that would another lot of Americans, who might be imported to study the situation, especially when the latter had had time to understand fully what they heard and saw. If, on a question that affects India, the American press takes a view different from that generally held by representative missionaries from America on this field, the chances are all that the American press has been misinformed, or is too far away to get at all the facts. This is what seems to have happened with regard to the Gandhi Movement.

Let one fact always be remembered:—American missionaries who have not seen eye to eye with Gandhi, did not differ because he advocated home rule. Home rule has been, and always will be, an American ideal. The quarrel between the moderates and liberals under the guidance of most of India's intelligent leaders, and the extremists under Gandhi's influence, is not as to whether home rule is desirable or not, but as to how it may be attained. The British government must not be supposed to be opposed to home rule in India; on the contrary, it has repeatedly declared just this to be its ideal and plan for this land. How and when are the words that have split India on this issue; and so far as the general body of American missionaries in India is concerned, the conviction is that Gandhi has been wrong, both as to the how and the when.

If space permitted mention would here be made of several other points, more especially of the marvellous way in which Mr. Gandhi has succeeded in stirring India, in arousing her from a lethargy of thought and action that no true friend of this land has ever regarded as good for her. This had to come before any real progress or self-dependence could be achieved on a wide scale. Mr. Gandhi's service to India in this respect is without a parallel. Had he had the political wisdom of the Rt. Hon. Mr. Shastri, he might have become India's true leader into the new age.

finished, I knew I couldn't be the leader of those women—I don't know anything about missions. Something was said about a school of missions. That must be meant for poor souls like me. I'll call the minister and ask him about it. (Goes to 'phone') Red 35. Is this the Pastor? I heard you were to have a night school where one could learn all about the 'How and Why of Foreign Missions'—Oh, good, it is for every one! How splendid!—Classes for every one from the nursery to the oldest man or woman. Thank you, I will surely come. Goodbye.—There I have promised and yet I hate to show my ignorance before those men and women. I think I'll take another dose and join a younger class and also that World Wide Guild. I would rather be really young. Besides the minister is a bachelor."

(Exit.)

(Enter young woman):

"It certainly has wrought a miracle on me. Here I am young and I hope attractive, but no wiser. Is there no short road to knowledge? I went to the World Wide Guild and again advertised my ignorance. They had a fine time but the place for me is in that school of missions. I wish it would start. But I would need to join the baby class. Then I'll have to take another capsule and there might not be any I. What shall I do? I'll try half a dose. Then I'll join the Children's World Crusade. I surely will know as much as they do." (Takes half a dose. Exit.)

(Enter child):

"Oh, I just feel like shouting and dancing and crying all together. Playing because I'm a child again and crying because I made a fool of myself at that C. W. C. meeting. They were talking about a couple of people named Carey and Livingstone and I had to up and ask, 'Are they new people here,' and those children laughed. I never had such a good time as those children seemed to have, but I am not young enough. Yes, there is the school of missions. I hate to go alone and I don't know anyone my age. Oh, it is awful! I didn't get a good start in life. I am going to take the rest of this—I don't care what happens. I am going to start right."

(Rings bell, maid enters.)

"Ann, you know better than anyone what a selfish creature I am and how I want to make up for my wasted life and you know about the Elixir. Because you are such a good Christian girl and go to all the missionary meetings and the school of missions, I am going to trust myself in your hands. Yes, I am going to take almost all there is left and you are going to start me right. Please Ann, when you find a baby in my place tomorrow, take it—me—and enroll me at once as a Jewel. And then, Ann, don't let me miss a session in the school of missions. Here goes the last of this and I must be started right." (Swallows capsules.) (Exit.)

(Enter Maid and Baby):

"Here is all there is left of my old mistress. She shall be raised as a little missionary. I'll take her right now to the Jewel lady and she can go in the baby class in the school of missions, Sunday—bless her." (Exit.)

(The above may be obtained in leaflet form.)

The Elixir of Life or The Essence of Missions

By MRS. MILTON FISH

Characters:—Four young women made up to represent one very old woman, one middle aged woman, one young woman, and a twelve year old girl. One maid. One baby.

(The four parts should be taken by one person or by people of the same type.)

Announce that 24 hours elapses between scenes.

(Platform arranged as a living room. Enter aged woman and sits by table.)

"Today is my seventy-fifth birthday and I am an old, old woman without friends or dear ones—old because I have never had any interests outside of myself. I have led a gay and irresponsible life. My husband was always indulgent and I had no children to bother with, and as for the church, I never gave either time, money, or service to it. I always thought the biggest fools of all were the foreign missionaries. As I have never done anything for anyone, no one cares for me now in my old age. Mine has been a wasted life. Oh, that I might live it over again! I would never think of my own comfort first, but give my life wholly to the service of others."

(Maid knocks and enters, immediately hands a box and letter to the old lady. She opens the letter and reads aloud.)

"Dear Friend of my Childhood: It is years since I have seen you. You had got then found the secret of true living and I am wondering if you are satisfied with your life. (I should say not.) My son has made a wonderful discovery called 'The Elixir of Life' or 'The Essence of Missions.' It is guaranteed to renew one's youth. This will give the opportunity to you to live again those wasted years. Each capsule will make you twenty-five years younger. May you enjoy this second chance. Your old friend, Janet."

(She opens box with trembling fingers.)

"Wouldn't it be wonderful to be a vigorous woman again? I understand the Baptist Mission Circle is looking for a president, perhaps I could serve them and so do something worth while. I'll certainly try it." (She reads) "Take one capsule before retiring. In the morning look in the glass and behold the transformation."

(Exit shaking with excitement and repeating over and over, "Will it work? Will it work?")

(Enter middle-aged woman):

"The rejuvenator worked all right. Just look at me; but, oh dear, I was so humiliated this afternoon when I went to the Mission Circle. They needed a president all right and I was just about to offer my services when the leader said, 'We will now hear something about the Jubilee,' and I said right out, 'The only Jubilee I know anything about was Queen Victoria's, and I thought that was years and years ago.' Why couldn't I have kept still? Then she explained all about the forming of the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society fifty years ago. When she

The Bivalve Christian and the World Awakening

The average man has a post-war expansion of intelligence. There is awakening in many lands. Sunshine irradiates Congoland. Free youth must be fed and sped.

By P. H. J. LERRIGO, Home Secretary American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

THE average man has suffered a post-war expansion of intelligence. Being unused to the process he reacts painfully to it and would close in upon himself like an irritated bivalve. But the daily press and an avalanche of significant world incidents prevent him from doing so and there is hope that he may yet become habituated to the experience and grow to find it agreeable. Should this result happily come about he will find himself emerging from the stage of bivalve mentality and to his delight becoming a reasoning being with world appreciating capacity. In other words, he will cease to be an oyster and become a world citizen.

Such a fortunate soul will soon appreciate that world events today present a preeminent spiritual significance. Post-war advocacy of the rights of subjects and feeble peoples bases itself upon the Christian principle of the value of a human soul. The obligation to protect Christian minorities grows out of the compassion of Christ. Rising national consciousness is rooted in the realization of personal gifts capable of contributing to the world's good. True internationalism—not the false Marxian kind found in the third international—is the logical product of the principle of world-brotherhood in Christ Jesus.

Turned the World Upside Down

A combination of the above factors striving in the presence of wide-spread reactionism and organized selfishness, has resulted in turbulence, turmoil and apparent world confusion. It was to be expected. Not unintelligently were the early Christians dubbed "those who have turned the world upside down."

Bursting through the dark clouds of disturbance and unrest breaks a blaze of spiritual light from many lands. The evangelical movement is at flood tide in Europe. Pastor Shilov of Petrograd writes: "Death gets a prey of tens of thousands daily in our country" and immediately adds "It is a time of great blessing here. Fifty years ago we had in all Russia only a few Baptists and now at our convention in Moscow we had delegates from 3650 Baptist churches." Pastor Vince of Eastern Siberia writes: "There is so much blessing in the service that the people after spending four and five hours in the meeting would not leave their seats and protest against such an early closing to the meeting."

In India, Gandhi leads the people in a great movement of protest which while unwisely directed and productive of great difficulty and damage throughout the land still has in it an element of spiritual advance. Revolt and non-cooperation have not checked the Christian movement. Judson College has a student body 80 per cent Christian and the students themselves support a missionary working in the Shan States. The power of Christian faith seeps out beyond the bounds of the Christian church and modifies thought and teaching.

In China the awakening native church leaps to a glad self-consciousness. Among the 1100 delegates to the great Shanghai Conference last May half were native leaders. A ringing challenge to the Chinese people was issued by the commission headed by Rev. C. Y. Cheng under the title of "The Message of the Church." The pronouncement therein given is significant of Chinese Christian conviction. The quotation of a paragraph or two will show the tenor of this remarkable document.

"We hereby call upon all followers of Jesus Christ to go forth with renewed zeal and consecrated hearts, with persistent efforts, and through united and definite programs to evangelize every part of China."

"We hereby declare that in our evangelistic efforts we stand solidly on the evangelical faith of the Christian church, the faith which has given us our genuine religious experience and which has led us into intimate relationship with God our Father through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Japan was profoundly affected by the Washington Conference. Following upon it there has been a growing sentiment in favor of disarmament. Among the many ways in which we are able to help to direct this softened sentiment toward Christ is through our Mabie Memorial Boys' School with its 600 students. The recent entering class included 130 boys and young men who gathered in the new assembly room with their parents at the opening of the year, many of them to hear of Christ and the New Testament for the first time.

In a recent conversation Rev. W. O. Valentine spoke of the manner in which our dormitories for boys and girls are affecting for the better the whole life of the government schools at Bacolod in the Philippines. He spoke of the Christian Endeavor meetings attended by 150 to 200 young people, of a special day of prayer when eighty confessed Christ and of the recent convention at which Mr. Jose Aguilar now a student at Denison University in Ohio, had spoken on life service. The ringing words of this young Christian leader: "If we are going to have a nation worth while in the future we must have men to lead the forces of righteousness" led fifteen to decide for a definite Christian service.

Sunshine still irradiates dark Congoland. Mr. MacDiarmid's last letter says: "We are just back from Nsele. One hundred sixty were baptized. God has been working in the hearts of the people in a wonderful way. The work here is assuming such enormous proportions that it is almost impossible to do justice to it with such a small force of missionaries." Dr. Leslie writes: "I have opened two new outposts in the wild Bamputu country. One is in the village where the boys expected we would be eaten a few years ago and one just beyond that."

The American conscience newly awakened to world horizons will find an awakening world at the dawn. In these post-war days we know infinitely more of the present tormented world than we knew of the placid world of the pre-war period. The message of Christ has had its part in producing the turmoil. It does turn the world upside down. We respond to the new stimuli with our eyes wide open and our response is with the offering of life if we are young enough and free. With the crystallized products of life if we are otherwise, for free youth must be sped and fed and this means outfits, steamship tickets, houses, tools, schools, churches. We have them all; they lie sleeping in our banks and pocketbooks. Let the imagination dwell upon the bank book and the bond until they change before our eyes into the means, vital and material, which will convey Christ to peoples who greet the dawn with the question: "What is it that has awakened us?"

A Photograph

All of the teachers and missionaries appointed by the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society to the Chinese field in San Francisco wax enthusiastic over the possibilities of this work. A letter just received from Miss Marguerette A. Calder, a newly appointed teacher in the Chinese Baptist Mission school describes vividly her experiences with a class of older boys who have just come over from China. One boy in particular, Miss Calder mentions. He has been in America only a month but has already learned quite a little English with Miss Calder's help. He decided one day to leave California and go to work with a friend in Phoenix, Ariz. Before he left, however, he brought his teacher a slip of paper on which was written the single word, "photograph." She pronounced the word thinking that was what he wished. When he could not make her understand what he desired he finally left the room returning with a friend who could serve as interpreter. The mystery was solved quickly. The young man wanted to have his picture taken with Miss Calder—teacher and pupil—as a remembrance! Needless to say she went with him to a photographer's and the young Chinese student carried the picture proudly off to Arizona.

The New Chapel Auto—"Crawford Memorial"

This will visit hundreds of Mexican cities. It will sow the good seed in construction camps; among the cotton pickers; wherever Mexicans are gathered at work.

By SAMUEL G. NEIL

THE American Baptist Publication Society has just purchased from the White Company, of Cleveland, a new type model—50 chassis, with a special transcontinental home touring body, to be used in missionary work among the Mexicans in California and Arizona. This initial car is the first of a large number of such models which will be set apart for evangelistic work along the highways of the country.

It has been disclosed in an exhaustive study that the new chapel car auto will reach the out-of-the-way hamlets and small towns, often many miles removed from transportation facilities, and it is felt the specially constructed, long-wheel base truck of well known quality will fill a long-felt necessity. This chapel car auto has several of the most important features essential to such conditions as may arise in the performance of many miles of various road conditions. It has a 50 h. p. unit power plant, a wheel base of 198, extra-long and flexible springs, a low center of gravity, a stream line in bonnet and body. The long wheel base enables the mounting without excessive overhanging of a body designed to look correctly proportioned, and the long and flexible springs, the low center of gravity, and the long wheel base combine to make riding easy.

To give the maximum of service and so as to avoid all worries of tire trouble, Overman cushion tires have been used throughout and are adapted for urban or interurban work. The car is also equipped with a 12-volt leece Neville starting and lighting system, and the interior is lighted with a six 4-candle-power lights from the battery.

The body, specially designed by the Brown Body Corporation of Cleveland, is the last word in furnishings and equipment. A missionary and his wife have everything at their convenience to make life comfortable and their work effective as they travel from place to place. It is waterproof in that it has a specially constructed roof and pullman-tight windows. On the outside of the body are the names of the two societies cooperating in the work—"The American Baptist Publication Society" and "The American Baptist Home Mission Society." There is a Scripture passage in English "The seed is the word of God." On the central panel of the car are the words in Spanish "Carro Capillo Mexicano" and a scripture verse in Spanish "By grace are ye saved through faith and that not of yourself. It is the gift of God." On the opposite side of the car there is another verse in Spanish—"The wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The interior equipment and furnishings consist of a driver's seat for two people, a 50-gallon fresh water tank and waste, a wardrobe and bookcase built right into the frame, a couch heavily trimmed (convertible at night into a double bed) and covered with imitation leather, drawers for linen, etc., an awning over the rear platform, which is used for preaching purposes, a washroom and toilet, also, a three-burner gas stove, and a folding table. The rear section is so constructed as to be convertible from a bedroom during the night to a reception room during the day, and is furnished with wicker chairs and furniture.

A specially constructed tent is a part of the auto equipment, the tent being so arranged that the rear of the chapel car auto, with its pulpit platform, can be backed into the end of the tent and become the pulpit platform inside the tent. The tent itself is 16x30 feet and will accommodate a congregation of about 100 people. It is equipped with an Estey pulpit organ (the gift of the Estey Organ Company, Brattleboro, Vt), collapsible chairs, a Coleman lantern lighting system (the gift of the W. C. Coleman Lighting Co., Wichita, Kan.), and every modern and up-to-date convenience for the work of evangelism in isolated and needed places. A trailer is a part of the auto equipment. This will be used for carrying the tent, chairs, and so on.

The car will be known as "Chapel Car Auto Number 1—Crawford Memorial." The funds for its construction, as well as for its upkeep and the maintenance of the work, were given by Mrs. Effie M. Crawford of Santa Ana, as a memorial to her deceased husband—Mr. Will C. Crawford. The car, with its complete equipment, costs about $9,000.

The missionary in charge of the car is the Rev. Pablo J. Villanueva, of Phoenix, Ariz. Mr. Villanueva is a Mexican and is well versed in the Spanish language. He knows the Mexican people intimately. He has demonstrated his ability to reach the Mexicans in a large way through his ministry as a Bible worker and a colporteur missionary. His appointment to this important task is in the way of a promotion and a recommendation of faithful and efficient service. He has had good educational advantages and is well-equipped for the evangelistic and missionary work to which he has been called. An assistant will travel with him. They will visit the hundreds of Mexican communities in and about the cities and villages of California and Arizona. They will, also, sow the "good seed" in construction camps, among the cotton pickers, and in scores of other communities where the Mexicans are gathered for employment in connection with our industries.

The car will be dedicated on Sunday, Nov. 5, in Los Angeles. The dedication services will be in charge of the Rev. George L. White, joint division secretary for the Publication Society and the Home Mission Society in the Pacific Coast States. Mr. White has been a very hearty and enthusiastic collaborator with Dr. S. G. Neil, Bible and field secretary, in inaugurating this new phase of chapel car work, and much of the credit of the successful launching of this work is due to his untiring efforts.

All For Me!

"My shepherd"—It is a personal and individual relationship. The emphasis of the Bible is ever on the individual. The modern tendency (perhaps, indeed, it always has been the tendency) is to lose sight of the unit in the crowd; to merge the individual in the mass. It is only a few highly placed or greatly gifted individuals who seems worth counting separately. But the Bible individualizes. It personalizes. God loves not masses, but men, individual men. God has an eye for the unit, for the humblest and most modest unit. "This poor man cried; the Lord heard him." His care is a personal love. "He calleth his own sheep by name." Do you remember how St Paul, contemplating Christ's cross, takes that mighty sacrifice all to himself and cries, "The Son of God loved me and gave himself for me?" Calvary was all for him, he says. And he implies that if he had been the only lost sinner in the world Christ would have thought it worth his while to bear that cross in order to redeem him.—J. D. JONES, "The King of Love."

State Conventions Gather in Annual Session

Distinct progress shown during past twelve months. A closer fellowship and union for future work is felt. The fact is emphasized that there is "something for each of us NOW to do."

Fifty-Fifth Annual Meeting of Nebraska Baptists

By F. W. AINSLIE

THE fifty-fifth annual meeting of the Nebraska Baptists, held at First Church, Lincoln, Oct. 7-12, came to a close Thursday evening Oct. 12. About 500 delegates registered. To this must be added many who did not register. The interest was well sustained to the very last meeting.

Auxiliary Organizations

The sessions of the state young people's organization occupied the time from Saturday afternoon to Monday noon. Monday afternoon the ladies held their meeting in the First Church while the ministers met in a nearby Swedish church. The good progress which Negro Baptists are making in Nebraska was evidenced by the laying of the corner-stone of the Mount Zion church Sunday afternoon. The Student Council, of which Dr. C. J. Pope is the moving spirit, held its semi-annual meeting Tuesday. Grand Island College alumni and friends also had a meeting on Tuesday.

Spirit of Cooperation

The spirit of good fellowship in a great task characterized the whole convention. No one was asked whether he was a "pre" or a "pro." There was neither Swede nor German; Negro nor Anglo-Saxon; male nor female. All were one in Christ. The great question of the convention was "What about the task, how goes the work?"

A Story of Achievement

It was a convention of "good news." Dr. Lerrigo thrilled the delegates with his story of the spiritual awakening in Central Europe and other fields. Dr. Bowler gave some facts about our finances which seem to promise well for the future. Mrs. Coleman referred to the spirit of prayer in the churches. Dr. Fowle's report revealed the fact that one-fourth of the baptisms of the year were in the fields occupied by the missionary pastors. Another fact brought out by his report was that the year of greatest missionary giving was also the year when baptisms were largest in recent years and third largest in the history of the state. The finances of the state convention are in good condition. Rev. Ezra Duncan reported that the Omaha churches are in the midst of a church building program aggregating an outlay of over $500,000. A very successful summer assembly at Grand Island College was reported by Rev. J. D. Collins. Two hundred and six were enrolled. Under the leadership of President Wells Grand Island college is making steady progress. The indebtedness has been reduced, extensive improvements made on buildings and the student body is larger this year than it was last. The Swedish conference reported a per capita giving to missions of $40 a year. This conference also voted to make English the official language of its organization. The work for Baptist students at the university is on a firm footing and last year was the best in its history. These are some of the many items which made this convention notable for its "good news."

The Social Challenge

Running through the meetings there was a feeling of responsibility for the great kingdom enterprises at home and abroad. The rural work of the state as presented by Rev. F. W. Benjamin, "The New Home Mission Task" as seen through the eyes of Dr. Brooks; the story of India's child widows told by Mrs. W. T. Elmore; the call to stewardship given by Dr. Cassidy; "The Message of Amos" from the lips of Dr. Wells; and the Near East relief presented by the resolutions committee; all emphasized the fact that there still is "A work for me and a work for you Something for each of us now to do."

The sense of the extent and difficulty of the task led to repeated emphasis upon the need of prayer. Twelve young people offered themselves for definite Christian service.

Changing Leadership

THE BAPTIST has already published the changes in the secretarial staff of the convention. There is a wide-spread feeling of regret over the resignation of Dr. Fowle. It was not possible to announce his successor during the convention. There was not so much change in the lay officers of the organization. A. B. Newell is to be the president. Most of the board members whose terms expired were returned to office. Mrs. J. D. Collins was selected as president of the ladies' society. Rev. Geo. Van Winkle of Omaha was selected as head of the pastors' conference. J. M. Sorenson succeeds himself as president of the young people's convention. The Calvary church, of Omaha, is to entertain the convention next year.

South Dakota Baptists Active

By STEWART G. COLE

THE Baptists of South Dakota have just concluded their forty-first convention at Dell Rapids. Under the genial leadership of the state superintendent, Dr. S. P. Shaw, the 300 delegates in attendance were convinced of the distinct progress we have made during the past twelve months and the splendid harmony that prevails as we enter the new year. The status of the convention program has been noticeably raised and the objectives for 1922-23 set forth in challenging order.

Superintendent Shaw's annual report emphasized the salient points in our state enterprise. There are approximately 10,000 Baptists scattered over the broad state of South Dakota, served by ninety-two ordained ministers of whom forty-eight reside on missionary stations. During the year eight men have come into the state to assume charge of Baptist fields, one of whom is President Fred G. Boughton of Sioux Falls College. For benevolences the churches raised $53,279.13, the women supplementing this amount with an offering of $8,075.55. Nine hundred and eighty-eight additions were made to our church membership by letter or baptism.

The people of Dell Rapids entertained the delegates at the recent convention in commendable manner. Hon. John Sutherland opened the session with a presidential address in which he bared some of the questions provoking unrest or friction in our religious thinking today and treated them in such a Christian spirit that he evoked support to our Baptist cause from all our people. The convention voted to circulate this address among all the Baptists in the state.

Drs. C. L. White, Frank Peterson, and J. C. Robbins and Mrs. G. W. Coleman and Miss Mary Noble, as visiting speakers, brought us stirring messages from their respective fields of endeavor. It was a disappointment to the delegates that Dr. Edgar L. Killam could not be present. Dr. C. L. White, after nine years' absence from the state, presented a series of informational and inspirational addresses which provoked in us confidence and courage for our progressive program of Baptist missions. Miss Mary Cressey of Ningpo, China, one of South Dakota's daughters, set forth the immediate problems of the people she represents. Dr. George Earl of St. Paul proved a jovial toastmaster at our convention banquet.

Commendable Features

Two features of the convention program that called out considerable favorable criticism were the series of expositions of Minor Prophets and conferences on such topics as "Pastoral Problems," "Christian Citizenship," "Church Publicity," and "Our Denominational Program a Cooperative Task." The success of these innovations warrant a repetition of similar ones in the future. The former lent Biblical instruction to the occasion and the latter gave the men an opportunity to raise their problems and contribute the benefits of their experience to each other.

Pioneer Missionaries

Perhaps the most beneficial service to the convention was made by our state pioneer missionaries themselves, as one after another, nearly two score, reported in brief the character, the urgency and the joy of their task. At least one of these men has ministered a quarter of a century to scattered settlers "across the river" in the Rosebud or Black Hills regions. One faithful servant rides a pony, "Roger Williams," in his long itinerary among cross-country stations in the White Owl district. The Ford has become a favorite means of conveyance for these men. Nothing other than a firm faith in a saving Christ and a heroic optimism in the cause of the kingdom carries these loyal workers through the privations they share in common with the people to whom they minister.

Rev. W. H. Bayles, as director of religious education, is doing fine work among the churches by way of raising the standards and efficiency of the young people's organizations and the church schools. His report proved that the youth in our churches are receiving more just consideration in the Baptist program than heretofore. The summer assembly at Sioux Falls College promises to become an effective agency in training our young people for Christian leadership.

Resolutions were adopted voicing our gratitude for the recovery from illness of our beloved superintendent and Mrs. S. P. Shaw, speaking our hearty support of the faculty and work of Sioux Falls College, approving of the maintenance of the state sheriff law and Sunday observance law as presented in the approaching primary section, urging the teaching of Bible in our public schools, supporting the program of our Northern Baptist Convention, and exhorting to full responsibility in the matter of Christian citizenship.

Among the objectives raised for the ensuing year, the following are deserving of special mention: South Dakota's unstinted cooperation in the program of the New World Movement, assuming responsibility for her quota of $58,000 for 1922-1923; "Bigger and Better Baptist Church Schools" throughout this constituency; more thorough missionary education among the churches by employing workers from the foreign fields; the organization of a circulating library for departmental leaders, the books to be stored in the college; and the boosting of Sioux Falls College now under the leadership of President Boughton.

The officers of the South Dakota Convention were elected as follows: President, Mr. Joseph Swenson; vice-pres., Mr. J. M. Coon; clerk, Rev. A. B. Claypoole; reas., Mr. E. A. Loomer; historian, Professor Martini.

The convention voted to meet in 1923 at Vermillion, the university city of South Dakota.

Kansas Baptists Meet

By J. T. CRAWFORD

THE sixty-second annual meeting of the Kansas Convention was held in Hays, Oct. 10-12, preceded by the all-day sessions of the Ministers' Association and the Women's Missionary Union. Hays is on the Union Pacific Railway in the "short grass" section of the state, 140 miles from the Colorado line. It is the site of the Fort Hays Normal, an important department of the state normal schools. The Chamber of Commerce of Hays and the management of the school joined with our local church in extending the invitation and took active part in showing us splendid hospitality.

The register of delegates and visitors reached 403, indicating a total attendance of more than 500. Probably three-fourths of the entire company came by autos, many driving as much as 400 miles in the round-trip. The proportion of lay members was far above the average of years.

The Program

By mutual agreement the denominational program of the year was projected helpfully during the three busy days at Hays. At the ministers' conference a theme for discussion was "The Pastor and the Denominational Program." During the women's session, Mrs. H. E. Goodman of Chicago, presented "Our Women and the Denominational Program." During the convention proper four topics were considered, as follows: 1. "A Praying People"; 2. "A Soul-Winning People"; 3. "A Tithe-Bringing People"; 4. "A Christ-Exemplifying People." Each topic occupied a full hour and was presented by a pastor and a layman.

The out-of-state speakers during the convention were: Pastor W. H. Rogers of Muscatine, Iowa, who brought two exceptionally helpful messages before the Ministers' Association and delivered an inspiring address on Wednesday night on "Comrades of the Cross." Dr. Chas. A. Brooks, associate secretary of the Home Mission Society, gripped us in a remarkable way in his recital of tasks and achievements on the home field. His theme was "The New Home Missions." Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo of the Foreign Mission Society, brought the closing message of the convention. It was a thrilling review of recent revivals in Europe and on many foreign mission fields.

Among our own speakers we mention the sermon before the Ministers' Association by Pastor Alpha Ingle, of Salina, and the annual convention sermon by Dr. Louis S. Bowerman, of Kansas City. Each was a masterpiece and Dr. Bowerman was requested to submit his message for publication by the denominational press. An interesting feature of the meeting was discovered in the fact that about two-thirds of the persons who presented topics had never taken part on our convention program before.

High Tides

A paragraph taken from the report of the board of directors giving a summary of its missionary work for twelve months is as follows: "The 121 workers served 4111 weeks or a total of more than seventy-eight years. They preached 10,919 sermons, attended 6392 prayer meetings; made 29,110 religious visits; baptized 1042 converts and welcomed 836 other persons into membership of our churches. So far as we seem able to discover these figures represent a fruitage at least 20 per cent larger than any preceding year in the history of our convention. Sixteen of the churches aided were under the load of building or improving properties or of purchasing parsonages."

The character of the meeting will be remembered by all who were present. A spirit of devotion, of harmony, and of intense purpose prevailed. At the close of the topic "A Soul-Winning People," Pres. H. M. Culter good-naturedly expressed the feeling of all when he said, "Brothers and sisters, I feel that we are not far from a revival of religion."

The financial situation brought its serious mood. The convention year closes with a deficit of approximately $6000. This fact was faced by the board of directors in forecasting the work of coming months. After careful survey of all conditions, however, recommendation was made that Kansas accept its full part of the $10,000,000 goal for the year and put forth united effort to secure these funds in support of our missionary, educational and philanthropic enterprises. This recommendation was adopted by unanimous vote of the convention.

Constructive Work

The entire convention meeting seemed to be bringing us into closer fellowship and uniting us for further advance. Among formal actions taken was one creating an advisory committee of the convention to sit with the trustees and the executive committee of Ottawa University in their regular meetings. This committee will report back to the convention annually. We all regard this step as a constructive piece of work that will help establish and maintain hearty cooperation between the convention and the school. Helpful plans were projected for the church edifice department, the Sunday-school and young people's work and the denominational program in the state during coming months.

The New Officers

Prof. H. M. Culter, a member of the faculty of the State Normal at Emporia, was chosen president of the convention. Pastor Wm. Little of Horton was elected president of the State Ministers' Association. Mrs. J. N. Atkinson of Topeka, is president of the Women's Missionary Union. The board of directors re-elected J. T. Crawford as general secretary and director of promotion.

Indiana Baptists Convene

By U. M. McGUIRE

FOR high spiritual fervor, for evangelistic zeal, for perfect harmony, for breadth of outlook and for platform power, the meeting of 1922 has been rarely, if ever, surpassed in the history of Indiana Baptists.

Evansville is in the remotest corner of the state to the southwest, an ambitious and growing city of 90,000 people, on the Ohio River. Ninety per cent of the Baptist population of the city came from Kentucky, and they are Baptists of the strictest sort. But they are as loyal to the work of the denomination as they are jealous of its doctrines.

The First Church has had a long, hard pull throughout its history. Since the coming of Rev. J. F. Rakę to its pastorate some years ago, it has entered upon a new era of growth, which culminated in the dedication last year of a new, large and beautiful house for work and worship.

There are three other "Missionary" Baptist churches in the city, Calvary, Rev. J. W. Jenkins, pastor, withdrew its co-operation from the Northern Baptist Convention two or three years ago and joined the Illinois Association, but some of its members support the New World Movement. Immanuel and Fairview are smaller churches under the care of Rev. H. B. Farrell.

It was expected that, owing to the location of the city, attendance from the state at large would be comparatively small, and, comparatively, it was so. But all parts of the state were well represented and the crowd filled the house.

Interest was sustained from first to last, with no sag anywhere. All of the spots were high spots; and this is no cheap buncombe; looking back over the program after it is all over and "the captains and the kings depart" one does not recall a boresome moment. Dr. John R. Sampey, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, gave a series of daily addresses on "Bible Evangelism," with the power of an old-fashioned revival. Rev. Hugh R. MacMillan, of Franklin, preached before the ministers' conference with Scotch incisiveness, breadth and boldness, on "God's Fellow Workers." Brig. Gen. W. G. Everson, of Muncie, in the convention sermon presented an impassioned appeal for consecration of life. Rev. P. C. Wright "sold" the ministers' pension plan to the convention. Dr. Samuel Z. Batten flamed like a prophet of the kingdom of God, and produced a profound impression of duty to the social order. Miss Nellie Prescott gave a thrilling outlook upon the dawn of a new day in foreign missions. Dr. Harry B. Benninghoff, of Waseda University, Tokio, luminously portrayed the social and religious dissolution now taking place in Japan. Dr. Frank M. Goodchild, with fine tact and much power, set forth the chief contribution which the Baptists have made to the world's best life. Dr. Frederick E. Taylor sketched a racy narrative of his recent tour in Europe.

President W. P. Dearing, of Oakland City College, the most distinguished and scholarly leader of the General Baptists, delivered one of the principal addresses, and was heard, as always, with delight. This section is the very heart of the General Baptist people, in which they outnumber "missionary" Baptists five to one. They have a distinct denominational organization, but a genuinely Baptist culture; and since the negotiations of eight

THE MEANING OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

Matt. 28:18-20; Eph. 2:19-22; I Tim. 3:15-16.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

"Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

"The great majority of the New Testament passages use the word church to indicate a local body composed of believers in Jesus Christ who are associated together for the cultivation of the Christian life, the maintenance of the ordinances and discipline, and for the propagation of the Gospel."—Mullins.

These two quotations indicate something of the meaning of church membership:

1. There is a recognition of the principle known among Baptists as a "regenerate membership"—the acceptance of Jesus as Saviour before baptism and church membership. This is one of the great principles of our faith. It stands out boldly against the teaching of other bodies. For Baptists, there is no such thing as ceremonial or institutional salvation.

2. There is a clear recognition of the responsibility involved when one becomes a member of a Baptist church. Note some of these responsibilities:

(1) Each one is expected to be a soul-winner. "Go" is the imperial command. The individual cannot escape his responsibility by saying that it is a foreign missionary command. For convenience and administrative purposes, we have developed a terminology such as home, foreign, state, district and city missions. In reality, there is no division. "Go" reaches all the way from the individual to wherever there is human need, be that next door or in China.

(2) Individual stewardship responsibility. Certainly, there are tasks to be done in the local church and the one who refuses to assume his share of this responsibility should be ashamed of himself and should ask for his name to be taken off the church roster. If he doesn't mean to be true to his confession and to live up to his responsibility, he should insist that the church have a back-door revival and that he be allowed to escape via that route.

Membership in the local church means that one must give of his money for the support of the church. The minimum should be one-tenth. To neglect or to refuse to meet this responsibility means a dwarfed spirituality. There is no escape from this result.

(3) A world-wide responsibility. To become a member of a Baptist church means that one obey his Lord's command, "Go . . .

teach all nations." What an unusual opportunity! The lowliest individual in the smallest Baptist church in the whole world can share in the Master's program for world redemption.

(4) A teaching responsibility. At last we are measurably recognizing the fact that the church must not only win men to Christ, but we must teach them. Education is the handmaid of evangelism. The body of believers which neglects to educate its people will ultimately lose out. "Consecrated ignorance" will not get us very far in these days of educational advancement. This teaching responsibility is not only in the local church. It extends on up through our higher institutions of learning. The plea made by some in these days that we should let our colleges go their way will fall on deaf ears. We love our educational institutions. We believe in them. We are going to support them with our money. We are going to send our boys and girls to them for training.

The young people who try conscientiously to live up to their responsibilities, will hear the Master say to them

"Lo I am with you alway."

On To Boston

July 4-8, 1923

Judging from the experience of hundreds of other conventions, it is unquestionably true that a convention held in Boston attracts a maximum attendance. There are many reasons for the large attendance at Boston conventions.

Most of the South and West was settled by New England stock and consequently there are millions of Americans who would love to come back and visit the homeland of their ancestors. The early beginnings of American history and of most American institutions were in and around Boston, and the historical associations, the countless monuments and markers possess an intensive interest not only to the student of history, but to the citizen who has any pride in his homeland.

I. Conventional

From a purely convention standpoint, Boston is well situated. The great buildings which will house such a convention as ours under one roof are conveniently located. At least a dozen large hotels could for the most part accommodate all the visitors and delegates to this convention. The Back Bay district is conveniently located to the shopping districts and undoubtedly excursions will be arranged through the funny little crooked streets of Boston, where statesmen and poets and famous early Americans have trod for ten generations.

II. Recreational

From a recreational standpoint, Boston is probably the most favored city on the western continent. Its northern gate begins the famous North Shore region, which has been described as stern and rock-bound, and is exquisitely beautiful in its wild, rugged setting. Just south of Boston begins another entirely different seacoast line, stretching down into the sand dunes of Cape Cod, which, as its people boast, faces four seas. Steamboats ply between Boston and Gloucester on the north shore, and from Boston to Plymouth and to Provincetown on the Cape. Many other steamboat trips are taken at different seasons of the year to the beautiful islands in the ocean to recreational beaches such as Nantasket, and these places are for the most part also connected by railway, trolley and automobile roads with Boston.

The summertime is fast coming to be the favorite vacation period in New England because of the rich and gorgeous foliage of its trees and the excellence of its roadways. Undoubtedly, many delegates to the Boston convention will take advantage of the opportunity either before the convention opens or after it closes to tour for a week or two in the mountain and lake region or along the seacoast of New England. The notches in the White and Green Mountains will be open and they are declared to possess the most beautiful views and attractive panoramas to be found on the American continent. Those who come in their automobiles to the Boston convention will be amply repaid by a drive through the Berkshire Hills or over any of the roadways leading to or from Boston.

III. Industrial

From an industrial point of view, Boston possesses many attractions which will appeal with striking force to the delegates to the B. Y. P. U. Convention.

Begin Now

July is a long way off, but so is Boston to a great many of our Baptist young people. It is not too early to begin laying aside a little money for the trip. All Baptist young people's organizations of whatever name should plan to send delegates. The registration fee for the convention will be $1. This will entitle delegate to all privileges of the convention.

January 28, 1923

The above date will be Denominational Day for all Baptist young people. The general theme will be "Religious Liberty." The B. Y. P. U. of America is preparing in leaflet form the great address on this subject by Hon. Charles E. Hughes. All state and city young people's secretaries or directors will have sufficient copies to supply one to every society. All Baptist educational institutions throughout the United States and Canada have been invited to join with all young people's societies in the observance of the day.

Asilomar

By BARON McLEAN

Asilomar means to Northern California and Nevada Baptist young people the biggest and best summer assembly we have ever had, 320 being registered during the ten-day period, July 21-31. Asilomar means the most ideally equipped and located conference grounds on the Pacific Coast. And it means in the lives of hundreds of young people vital religion, born of communion with God and bred by sound educational principles.

Nestled comfortably among the pines, at a stroll's distance from the old Pacific, stand the three main buildings. The administration building first greets the newcomer with its cozy log fireplace and afterwards meets his needs with a postoffice, ticket office, bank, business desk, bookstore, assembly headquarters and social hall. The dining hall seems to be the rendezvous is the evening bell sounds and old friends meet and new friends greet. With a huge fireplace at either end of this spacious room crackling out a welcome, we soon get into the atmosphere. After our first sunset service, the chapel begins to be filled with young people who feel its reverent atmosphere, look out its huge windows upon scraggly pine, white sand dune, and fading light, or look up at the words of the Psalmist inscribed upon its walls.

Then following "night caps," our good-night frolic, we turn in to downy beds in tent houses on the hill; tent houses as commodious and well equipped as palaces, yet possessing that vacation land lure.

Next morning before breakfast a score or more of early risers start the day by a quiet devotional service. Meeting in a natural cathedral of rocks upon Asilomar's sandy shore, we see the sand dunes pure and white, the pine trees strong and true; we hear the booming of the surf on the shore, and feel God's purpose for our lives as sure as the breaking of the waves on the rocks, his love as endless as the movements of the sea.

The morning hours are filled to overflowing in class work under an all-star faculty. The thirteen classes enrolled 182 students. Real college-grade work was done; papers were handed in daily, were graded by the faculty, and returned for future use. Twenty-four credit cards (ten or more units), ninety-one certificates (twenty or more units), and nine diplomas (completed three year—sixty unit course) were awarded at the commencement exercises the last Sunday evening.

"Jimmy" White and "Johnny" Snape were perhaps the outstanding favorites of the faculty.

Dr. John Snape, pastor of Oakland First Church, loved by all, cleared our minds and challenged our lives as he presented the great doctrines of the Bible every morning to a crowded chapel.

Dr. James Asa White, general secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of A., drew 125 into his class on young people's methods. Crowding a double classroom, sitting on the floor and windowsills, we listened, and his personality as much as his subject, was a message to us.

Junior B. Y. P. U., elementary Sunday school, Sunday-school organization and administration, "Building with India," "India on the March," "The Trend of the Races" (the Negro problem), personal evangelism, stewardship studies, denominational democracy developing—all were ably covered. Each member of the faculty made a unique contribution. Mrs. Sallie Lee Burgess (junior personality), Mrs. A. Watson Brown (elementary Sunday-school plans by demonstration method), Miss Myrtle M. Love, American Baptist Publication Society (some "Doctor"), Dr. C. E. Shepherd, "Building with India" (being a returned missionary from the Orient gave us the Oriental attitude), Miss Helen E. Hobart "India on the March" (gave us the vision), Mrs. Carrie A. Robinson (met the Negro problem squarely), Dr. Arthur V. Willey, state evangelist (the cream of the assembly in a large class the last hour before dinner), Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, general secretary of American Baptist Publication Society (interesting stewardship studies—a class of leaders), Dr. C. W. Brinestad, executive secretary of Northern California Baptist Convention (strong Biblical exposition of denominational work based on Luke 9—look it up).

Mr. Ralph M. Rowe deserves much credit for the splendid music of the assembly. Hugh W. Thomas is an expert at young people's methods, but at "Night Caps" he made a place in our hearts that will not soon be crowded out. Dr. Millard L. Thomas, dean of the faculty, led this, his eighth successful assembly through in a remarkable way. The Northern California

B. Y. P. U. executive committee were a valiant crew. We think they can't be beat.

Meal times find our pent-up enthusiasm bursting all bounds. Only an afternoon's recreation could work it off. Baseball games, hikes along the points, to the dahlia gardens, and Pacific Grove Submarine gardens, trips to Del Monte Hotel grounds, the plunge and surf, and historic Monterey, and drives along the seventeen-mile-drive, occupied our afternoons. No words can describe the forest met ocean, the blue sea, dark mountains, and incomparable land and seascapes of the seventeen-mile-drive.

The sunset services are an inspiration indeed. As we sit on the ocean side of a sand dune amidst the pines, and look out to the descending ball of flames, or see the sun as a Japanese lantern touching the East, our hearts raise themselves to God in a prayer for a vision as wide as the universe and as definite as Christ's command, "Go ye."

Stunt Nite with a bonfire on the beach; Chinese motion pictures by Dr. C. R. Shepherd; the "Ship of Fellowship" shown by William C. Lippard, associate secretary American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who went with it; the report of the St. Paul Convention by our president, M. L. Askin; the flapper debate, the musical, the program, the banquet,—all deserve more words than can be given them.

To see "Jimmy" White with a big rodeo hat, red kerchief, yellow vest, and high boots; or "Willey" dressed as a male flapper, powder, paint, rouge, wrist watch, vanity case, and all; or to hear "Johnny" Snape, was worth going to Asilomar. And when these three notables contended that a flapper should flirt opposing three assembly delegates, the effect was disastrous to one's dignity.

The big banquet seated 285 to big eats, much yelling, and rival and ensemble singing and a good program of toasts. It was a six-cylinder banquet for six-cylinder Baptists from six-cylinder B. Y. P. U.'s. The six cylinders were: 1. Evangelism; 2. Daily Devotions; 3. Stewardship; 4. Life Service; 5. Education; 6. Denominational Cooperation. The toasts were: 1. "Manufacturer," Miss Harriet Tingley, Berkeley; 2. "Gasoline," Miss Marion Jackson, Clovis; 3. "Oil," Irving Ford, Oakland; 4. "Electricity," Miss Ruth Stucky, Sparks, Nev.; 5. (a) "Steering Wheel," Warren Shoemaker, San Jose; 5. (b) "Chauffeur," Miss Margaret Shaw, Sacramento; 6. "Roads and Maps," Lawrence Sawles, Oakland, and "Fellowship with Christ as We Go Forward"—the destination of our Baptist Young People's program machine, toastmaster, Baron McLean, Fresno, president San Joaquin Valley B. Y. P. U.

On the last Sunday morning following the model Sunday school, came the spiritual climax of the assembly, Dr. White's life-service sermon. At that sermon's close 25 joined those who had already made a decision for full-time Christian service and swelled the ranks of the California-Nevada Volunteers attending the assembly to sixty-one. The tears of joy were hard to keep back. It was not an emotional call but it gripped our hearts. It came as a fitting climax to Christ's walk with us at the assembly. We asked him to abide and he yet does.

Ode (Owed?) to A Cook-Book!

*TO the girls who wish to be
All that masculinity
Would require of you to make a perfect wife:*

*Do not use too many hours
To develop brainy powers,
In the hope that these will hold him through his life.*

*Nor much reliance place
On just a pretty face,
Though 'tis wise to be as pretty as you can,
For 'tis mostly how you cook,
More than how you talk or look,
That appeals unto the heart of mighty man.*

*You will not need to flirt
If from soup to the dessert
You can prove to him that you can really cook, cook, cook.*

HELEN HICKS BATES

A League of Rations

UNDER this clever title, a delightful little new book of "recipes garnered from Europe and Asia in America" has just been issued, and if you are weary of cooking the same old things in the same old ways you will surely welcome this booklet in your kitchen, for old world cooking is just enough different from ours to add piquancy if your palate is jaded by every-day stews, hashes and pot roasts. There is also the quaint appetizer of new names, for example:

"What are we going to have for supper, mother?"

"Dolma!" you remark, quietly.

"What?" clamor the voices of the family, spellbound by the novel sound. On page six you will find two delicious Armenian recipes (Dolma and Sarma) for stuffed tomatoes and stuffed peppers cooked in one pot.

"Buchty" is a Bohemian cheese cake that fairly cries aloud to cottage cheese, raisins, flour and eggs for a chance to assemble "in a moderate oven" (page 8), while "Buhkty" which may sound a bit like it, is a Czecho-Slovakian recipe for sweet buns that makes your mouth water—especially when stuffed with pot cheese or jelly (page 10).

Then what fun to announce "Poupies" for dinner! Are they puppies or hot dogs? You are all wrong, sir! They are Finnish beef olives described on page 13. And what about "Dolmothes"? Cabbage stuffed with appetizing things according to a recipe from Salonika, Greece (page 17). Also Greek are "Seker Ketesi," or stuffed cookies, and only one egg is needed, ye economical cooks! (page 18). "Hungarian Goulash" speaks for itself on page 20, while half a dozen pages farther on we come to "Borsch" and "Burakowa Zupa," two different ways to make Polish beet soups. "Ponczki" are Polish doughnuts, and on page 28 you will find "Picadillo," a Spanish hash that will cause you to order one pound of fresh chopped beef from your butcher instantler.

As for pages 30 and 31 you will envy the Syrians their dish of "Yabrk"—even if you can't pronounce it the first time, you won't have any trouble devouring it, and the family will like "Koose Muhshy" (Syrian stuffed squash); "Koube Mamdoody" has a very quaint sound and as quaint a taste; while Turkish preserved quince under the name of "Ghlyco-Kedonya" will be a sweet morsel.

These are only a few of the many new recipes which abound in this little book with its red, white and black check dishtowely cover, and the best part of it is that you can afford it! Ten cents! Moreover, interlarded with the hundred or more recipes are some rare tidbits to give food for thought. You will of course want a copy for yourself, and I think you will be inspired to see what a unique Christmas card this will make instead of that flat and well-remembered ten-center: "I am thinking of you today because it is . . . and will think of you tomorrow because it will be . . ." Here is something newly suggestive for the 365 days ahead of your friends. Indeed we are so confident that you will send for dozens of copies that we almost feel like saying with the magazine gentlemen: Please mention the Chimney Corner when ordering—so confident are we that you will deluge the Woman's Home Mission Society! And when you order, get them to send you a copy of their "Almanac," it is free—and splendid!

The Kitchenette And—

By ARTHUR H. FOLWELL

*A kitchenette is where we cook
Our meals from day to day;
In bedroomette, a tiny nook,
We sleep the nights away.*

*A picturette adorns our walls,
A carpetette, our floor;
A bathroomette is off our hall,
Exactly three by four.*

*Within, our bathtubette behold,
With showerette on high,
We've waterette, both hot and cold,
Our flesh to purify.*

*When winter makes its icy threat
And round our window drums,
We seek our radiatorette,
And up the heatette comes.*

*Abbreviated lives we live;
But time is passing fast:
We have this promise positive—
A roomy tomb at last.*

Too Many Cooks

that we know would see no burlesque in the humorously pathetic last words of the old woman who was

*"Going
Where washing ain't done, nor churning, nor sewing,
And everything else will be just to my wishes;
For where they don't eat there's no washing of dishes!
Don't mourn for me now, nor mourn for me never,
For I'm going to do nothing forever and ever."*

The Old Kitchen Griddle

*O H, dear to my heart is the old kitchen griddle
That fond recollection presents to my view, Whose fumes never failed to untangle the riddle
Of what for our morning repast would accrue.*

*How gently it simmered when cascades of batter
Were shed on its black oleaginous disc,
And sputtered anon when to make the thing fatter
The greaser o'erspread it with impetus brisk—
The old kitchen griddle, the fat-frying
griddle,
The griddle whose fruit was at epicure's risk.*

*How well I remember this griddle's profusion
Of "buckwheats" and kindred confections galore,
And likewise the subsequent paunch's protrusion
That scattered vest buttons all over the floor.
How well it revives, too, the sweet sorghum wallow
Wherein plunged the cakes in our gorging pursuit.
And ah! the dyspepsia so certain to follow
Our jousts with the old griddle's various fruit—
The soot-smuttled griddle, the lardlathered griddle,
The griddle that caused for me pangs most acute.*

The Young Reserves

The Blue-Beards of the Family

LONDON is an enormous city, as you doubtless know. So you can understand how it came about that after they had shown him the miles upon miles of streets, crowded with omnibuses and carriages in endless traffic, and after they had also shown him the spacious palaces, the mighty cathedrals, the magnificent houses of parliament, and the great stores, and after they had taken him down into the subway to show him the vast underground railroads—that then the pagan ambassador from Africa began to realize that if this was London, one city, then what, oh, what must the rest of England be like?

So when they ushered him into the presence of Queen Victoria he displayed a keen interest in her country, and finally asked—with bated breath—a question which has become world famous because of her unhesitating answer.

"Your Majesty," this pagan ambassador begged, "tell me, what is the secret of England's greatness?"

Whereupon the wise queen did not point out the strength of England's navy, nor the valor of English soldiers, nor the power of British finance; she merely held up a copy of the English Bible and quietly replied: "This is the secret of England's greatness!"

And the pagan ambassador realized for the first time that there must have been an age, long, long ago, when England was as heathen as his own land, but that on the foundation of a Book its present greatness was evolved.

Perhaps you hardly realized this yourself; since history is a get-it-over-with-quick study, without much personal romance attached! Yet ancestors certainly are ancestors, although there is this to be said: many of them would have been mighty risky persons to live with! Especially the Blue-beards of the family—provided you went far enough back in history to meet them face to face.

"Horrors!" you would shudder, with eyes like saucers, "is . . . that . . . unspeakable . . . painted . . . barbarian . . . one of my ancestors? Mine? Can he belong to me—nice, gentle, educated little me?" And the bravest football hero on the team would begin to quake and quail!

For it's all very well to have statues in museums draped only in skins torn from wild animals, but to have a veritable flesh-and-blood ancestor brandishing fiendish spears and tossing his tawny locks at you would be decidedly uncomfortable. Moreover, his beard would be a gorgeous blue, stained to make him more ferocious; and when thirsty, your blood would run cold to see him quench his thirst from water scooped up in the polished skull of some unfortunate enemy. Is he hungry? Watch him chase a frightened sheep, and savagely rip its limbs apart. Ugh!!

There have been times at Christmas and on birthdays when the best of us have wanted to keep on the good side of a grandfather; but surely we would do our very utmost to have that Blue-beard great-great-great-grandfather let us severely alone! There is no favor that we wish of Blue-beard, except that he will kindly stay one thousand years back in history.

Sprung from such ferocious and unpleasant ancestors, surely we must feel a spark of curiosity wondering when the members of our family began taming down! There was, of course, the little matter of a war with Julius Caesar. Those of us who have gallantly waded through the dreary Latin prose of Caesar's Gallic Wars will be remembering how his legions crossed over into Britain, and had a bloody mix-up with the savages there. After Caesar, other Romans fought those blue-stained pagans—but four hundred long years later a Roman army is heard complaining to its general: "The savages drive us to the sea, and the sea casts us back upon the savages." Showing how our ancestors continued to be fierce and stalwart fighters.

Yet that green island, girdled and buttressed by white cliffs, had exercised a gripping fascination over other men than soldiers; for several times in the early part of the second century after Christ some one brought Christianity to those shores, stiff with icy cold. No one but God himself knows the names of those earliest heroes who ventured to approach your Blue-beard ancestors and mine. But paint in your imagination a little picture of a wooden boat crossing the choppy English Channel, laden with brave men so full of Christ that even chilly waves and wintry blasts could not crush out their hopes. Watch that boat bouncing on the sapphire sea; watch our blue-stained ancestors begin to rush toward the beach to meet these newcomers.

"Ha! Ha!" cried my own great-great-great-grandfather with a horrible growl, rubbing his hairy hands together in high glee, "I'll take the coat from that fellow in the bow!" "And I'll take his hat!" roared your excited Blue-beard greedily. Indeed, unable to wait for the beaching of the little boat, they probably dashed out into the icy waves and began their cruel welcoming of strangers. Yet somehow those strangers must have cast a magic spell upon the Blue-beards—can't you see them on the yellow sands lifting up their voices above the boom of breaking surf to speak their message from the God of heaven? Add other pictures of long wintry evenings when they crouched by driftwood fires and told stories of the Saviour. Coming from some land more civilized, they had a taming influence on those wild barbaric hosts of theirs—yet no one knows their names, so we cannot say a thank-you to those heroes who started us as Christians in that far, dim, distant past.

Then in other wooden boats came a horde of conquering warriors from Germany—Engles, Jutes, and Saxons, with Hengist and Horsa as their leaders, driving Christianity out with one fell swoop! Yet it still lived on in Wales and Ireland, from whence it spread to Scotland. But the southern part of Britain was as pagan as before.

Then one day in sunny Italy, in that beautiful city of Rome, a good priest named Gregory saw some fair-haired boys being sold as slaves, and curiously inquired where they were taken captive. Being told that they were Angles from the pagan island of Britain, Gregory made his famous pun: "Ah, not Angles, but angels,"—and from that moment the idea lodged in his heart that missionaries ought to be sent to Christianize the fair-haired men in Britain.

Some years later he was made pope, and selected a company of forty monks, with Augustine at their head, to undertake this adventuresome mission. Watch them tramping up over the Alps, into Gaul, across green meadows until they reach the shores of France. Then see them tremble as tales of the uncouth islanders to whom they were going chilled their enthusiasm. Some of their number were so insistent about turning back that Augustine was forced to go to Rome to notify Pope Gregory. But Gregory would not allow such cowardice, and to his set determination to see the Angles Christianized you and I owe an enormous share of all our modern civilization.

Fortunately for the timid ones, Augustine's party of monks had no unpleasant encounters on that memorable day of their landing in the year 597. Oh, to have been there ourselves—to have seen Ethelbert, king of the Saxons, come marching out with his host of wild soldiers to meet Augustine, a giant in size, towering head and shoulders above his forty monks, all of whom were tonsured and bareheaded, wearing hooded brown garments, walking two by two, chanting Bible songs in Latin, and carrying a huge silver cross.

And since for every king there is a queen, you will be glad to know that Ethelbert's wife, Queen Bertha, had been a Frankish princess and was already a Christian, so Ethelbert let Augustine live peaceably among them, and was soon baptized himself, and all his subjects. So that in the city of Canterbury the first little Christian church was built in England.

There have been ups and downs to Christianity in England since that day, but our Blue-beard ancestors had tamed down to calm and normal individuals. Yet you can see for yourself that even as Queen Victoria said to that pagan ambassador, the secret of England's greatness has certainly been the Bible, for without the exploits of those early book-lovers you and I, sitting here so intelligently today, might still be savagely lurking in windy caves, smeared with barbaric paint, lying in wait for our enemies.

*"Shall we whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we to men benighted
The lamp of life deny?"*

Religious Education

An "Impossible" Class

By JANET THOMAS

Specific examples of difficulties with classes and how they have been overcome will doubtless be helpful to some.

Miss S. was a young woman, keen of mind and interested in children, particularly those of the intermediate age. There was turned over to her a class which had passed through the hands of a succession of teachers, each giving it up as impossible. Three boys who were considered incorrigible in the public schools and by the town in general were in this class. There had been talk of forbidding these to come to Sunday school, as their sole purpose in coming seemed to be on a par with every act of their life—that of creating a disturbance. But Miss S. spoke most decidedly against any such course. "If anybody is forbidden the class work," she said, "let it be Clarence, or Clinton or Deane—any except these three boys, because all of the others have Christian influences at home. If they were cut off from the Sunday school they would still be in contact with Christian teachings. Of course these boys from Christian homes are not going to be cut off from Sunday school, but I merely say that if any are told to stay at home they should be the ones. Joe and George and Curly are the ones of all others we want where we can reach them. The lesson must be made so interesting that the worst boy in the class will be reached, not the best. If the worst is interested, you may be assured the best and all the others will be."

Miss S. took charge of the class. For the first time in months that corner of the room was quiet. The boys were interested, even and especially Joe and George and Curly. Yet Miss S. seemed to be doing nothing except quietly teaching the lesson. Certainly there was no sensational method being used. Every one was anxious to know how she had won the class which the superintendent had once designated as the "sore spot" of the Sunday school.

"Wait awhile," she said. "This is only the first Sunday."

But the following Sundays were the same and at last she was persuaded by a few friends to tell them the method she had used.

"It really is so simple, so exactly what should be done with every class that I hesitate about telling it—as though it were anything for which I deserved credit. This is the way I look at teaching the Sunday-school lesson, to any age or sex: The Bible is the most gripping book in the world; the person who does not enjoy a good story, and especially if it is a true one—a recounting of something that has actually happened, is the exception. Young people especially love stories. Therefore, if they are not interested in the Bible lessons presented to them on Sunday morning it is because they have not been made to grasp the significance of them. Just now we are studying the life of Jesus. How that story in all of its majesty and beauty and humanness can fail to reach the heart of every person in the world is beyond me. Perhaps it is because I feel it so intensely myself that I have the power to make it real to others, but every Christian can feel it intensely if he so desires. To be specific this is the method I took that first day:

"Joe, have you a grandfather living?" I asked.

"Bet!" he answered.

"The other boys giggled but I paid no attention to them.

"Did he ever tell you about men he knew years ago?"

"Joe's dark face lighted. 'Say, he saw Abraham Lincoln once!' he said proudly. 'And his grandpa saw George Washington!'

"I had heard that this was Joe's boast at school and I used it for my own ends. 'And I suppose your father's grandfather knew or saw some great man, too, and if we kept on going back and back to those the grandfathers of grandfathers knew, after awhile we would come to some who had seen Jesus or at least who knew others who had seen Jesus,' I said.

"Was Jesus real like Abraham Lincoln?" demanded Joe.

"I took that first Sunday to explaining how real Jesus was and is. They saw with me the Son of a carpenter in the little town of Nazareth. I think they all feel as though they had been in Nazareth and had seen the boy Jesus helping his father about the shop and watching his mother sweep the room, set the bread and do all those other common tasks from which later in life Jesus drew some of the great lessons he gave to men. That's all there has been to it. Jesus has been made a real person to them. They are listening each Sunday to the actual doings of a real man who lived upon this earth just as their nearer-in-time heroes have, but with a difference all in his favor. They not only listen to me, but they come and tell me things—there isn't a Sunday that Curly and Joe and George do not come with their own contribution to the lesson."

Miss S. meant no condemnation upon much of the present method of teaching in the Sunday school, but she had unwittingly given it.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 12

JESUS THE GREAT TEACHER

Lesson: Luke 6:1-49. Golden Text: Luke 6:31.

Introductory

In last Sunday's lesson we considered Jesus the Great Physician; in today's we consider him as the Great Teacher. Although more briefly recorded, Luke 6:20-49 is probably the same address of Jesus which Matthew gives in chapters 5, 6 and 7—"The Sermon on the Mount," as Augustine named it. The "mountain" was one of the hills around the sea of Galilee. The words were spoken directly to the disciples of Jesus—his chosen ones—although there were crowds of people nearby.

The Lesson

Just preceding the printed text of the lesson Jesus has been pronouncing woes upon the worldly man and from this he turns to his own and expounds to them the great principles of loving one's enemy—"Do good to them that hate you, bless those that curse you, pray for them that despitefully use you." He asks what merit there is in loving those that love us, in doing good to them, in lending to them—for do not sinners do the same? This leads at once to the thought if then it is so natural to love those who love us and to do good to those who love us, will not the enemy whom the disciple of Jesus loves find it easy in turn to love that disciple (erstwhile enemy), to do good to him? In verse 31 we have the so-called Golden Rule. It has been said often by enemies of Christianity that Confucius too had his Golden Rule, but his was a negative one—"The thing that ye would not have done unto you, do ye not unto others." How much stronger is the word which says "Do unto others" rather than the negative form "Do ye not!" Living this life of love, the disciples of Jesus shall be sons of the Most High who is "kind toward the unthankful and evil." "Even as your Father is merciful, be ye merciful"—that indeed is the high measure of the Christian. And, finally, the reward of the generous and loving attitude of mind: "Judge not—ye shall not be judged; condemn not—ye shall not be condemned; give—it shall be given unto you, in measure running over, for with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured again."

Leading Thoughts

1. "Love never faileth." 2. The ideal is high, the reward is great. 3. God expects great things from those who bear the name of his Son—Christians.

The Worth of Mission Study

The Student Volunteer Movement has sent from American and Canadian institutions of learning 8,140 representatives to the nations of the earth.

In Denver, 1919, the question was asked, "How do you explain the success of this movement?" The answer was, "It began a mission study department in 1894, and stressed it as fundamental. In 1918 it had enrolled 47,666 students in nearly 3,000 classes, studying under trained leadership.

Does it Pay?

The Open Forum

THE PRAYER HABIT

The title "If I were Pastor," to an address published in your issue of Oct. 14, prompts me to suggest this:

We Baptists have recently declared afresh our loyalty to the New Testament as our sufficient guide to faith and practice. Everything desirable in the way of results of individual or combined work for God is promised positively in his word in response to prayer. Therefore, it would seem to be a pastor's first work to develop in his members the prayer habit, and to make the most possible of the church prayer-meetings. That appears, from the New Testament, to be the direct route to a successful pastorate. Is any other conclusion reasonable?

OEBD

"LOST BAPTISTS"

The article in the "Open Forum" headed "Lost Baptists" suggests a problem of vital importance to the future of our denomination and the work of the kingdom. There is no doubt that many of those who move from the smaller places to our great cities fail to form church connections in the latter. Doubtless here in Philadelphia there are many who are thus situated. Memorial Church, of which the writer is pastor, has a constituency that is city-wide and we are this year giving special attention to following up those who move to the City of Brotherly Love and extending to them a welcome. We would be very glad if pastors, clerks or others who may know of Baptists moving to this city would write us about them giving names and Philadelphia addresses.

JOHN HENRY DAY

SOME FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF BIBLE INTERPRETATION

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Tim. 2:15.

1. The Bible teaches what it teaches last.

2. The Bible teaches what it teaches as a whole.

3. The message of the Bible is first of all a message to the people of the times in which it was written. To get that message we must, as far as we can determine the date, the circumstances of the times, enter into the consciousness of the people addressed (Heb. 1:1-2), the limitations of knowledge, the understanding of God, plus, as far as we can, the mind of the Father, and the mind of Christ. Thus we shall find the message of the Bible the message of God for all time.

4. The Bible was given us to serve the Gospel, and not the Gospel to serve the Bible.

5. A recognition of the Bible's inspiration and infallibility as these relate themselves to God's historic action in Jesus Christ and his cross, to atonement, redemption, the way of life and salvation in Jesus Christ the Son of God, and the God-man Jesus Christ, the ultimate triumph of the will and purpose of God as set forth in the Gospel of his redeeming grace, the answer at last to the age-long prayer "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven."

6. If we are rightly to divide the word of truth we must as best we can distinguish between that which is literal and that which is figurative. We must distinguish between such literary forms as poetry and prose, history and drama, lyric and dogma. Moreover we need to distinguish between that which represents God and that which represents man; between Judaistic legalism and that which is spiritual and Christian; between that which makes for salvation, and sectarianism; between that which makes for denominational unity, cooperation and fellowship, and denominational schism, division, warring factions; denominational and evangelistic failure, and denominational and evangelistic success.

7. To make these distinctions aright is the task of the devout student of the Word. It is the task of consecrated scholarship to lead to the church its best aid in arriving at the truth as it is in Jesus. This requires study. This requires prayer. This requires the Holy Spirit, and that

Missionary Education Institute In Pennsylvania

An intensive piece of missionary education work was done in Western Pennsylvania under the auspices of the Pennsylvania missionary education department. The institute was held in the First Baptist Church, Pittsburgh.

Object: To train and inspire leaders for all missionary departments of the church.

Plan: Two days of intense preparation under qualified leaders. Exhibit of study books, maps, charts, pageants, handwork and demonstration of teaching and storytelling.

Attendance: Delegates from eleven associations. 264 representatives from sixty-eight churches.

Result: Two life dedications.

A program for: Increased number of study classes; extensive participation in reading contests; adoption graded stories in Bible schools; "Schools of Missions" made part of church program; multiplication of regional institutes.

This plan reaches the largest church areas by the shortest route. It is hoped that many churches will undertake such institutes through the fall and winter.

assistance and insight that he and he alone can give. This leads us to be humble, and to take the attitude that where good and devout men sometimes differ in their interpretations we cannot always afford to be too dogmatic.

MANDATES

Our denominational paper THE BAPTIST is usually a live, wide awake and interesting paper. We are all feeling very proud of its management and fairness in a most trying situation, and we have every confidence that in the days to come it will even more efficiently serve the denomination. We are therefore jealous of its reputation and feel chagrined when it makes blunders as it did in an editorial under the above caption. If this were the only occasion it might be overlooked, but several articles breathing the same spirit have appeared since the paper came under the new management. This causes us to fear that there is something wrong in the attitude of the editorial department toward international questions. The "Mandates" and other articles show a very unsympathetic and total want of appreciation of the difficulties of the situation confronting the European powers and a seeming willingness to believe the worst concerning them.

A whole nation (British) and a policy (Mandates)—arrived at by the united intelligence of the representatives of the majority of the nations of the earth—is sweepingly adjudged and condemned. The charge is that the British—with the connivance of the powers in the league of nations—are guilty of a most bloody and cruel massacre perpetrated on peoples over whom they were given a mandate.

This indictment is based on the unconfirmed report of a Chicago Tribune correspondent.

The editorial writer does not wait for further inquiry but seems eager to have an opportunity of venting his biased judgment on Britain, the league of nations and governments in general.

His want of appreciative understanding of world conditions is clearly shown in the following quotation from his article on "Mandates."

He says: "The grim reality is a world whose governments, commerce, science, finance, are paralyzed or manipulated by selfish ambition and self-seeking intrigue."

Sweeping, is it not? Maybe after all the anarchist is right and the only thing to do is to blow civilization to pieces.

Still, we are hopeful that the editors of THE BAPTIST will yet see world conditions from a different angle, and exercise a little more faith in the good intent of governments.

Our Own Folks

Ohio Letter

By J. W. WEDDELL

A Final Epistle

My "on-the-wing" address hereafter will be Morgan Park, Chicago. These have been good days down in Southeastern Ohio. There is productive Baptist soil all over the state, none better anywhere. "Papa, are we Americans or Baptists?" said my little girl across the table one day. "Both," I said. They go together and nowhere better than in the wholesome, normal Buckeye State. I have tasted it in boyhood days in Canton and Wooster and Dayton where the fathers wrought unwearyed by divergences of faith. I have tested it in blessed service in Cincinnati and Cleveland and Oberlin. Brethren, it is good fighting all along the line. Down here at Marietta, these latter days, I may say most of all. The work grows harder, perhaps, but the faith grows stronger, and the love sweeter as the days go by. The one thing Baptists find most healthful and helpful in latter days as well as former is to preach the truth, the whole truth, and live it and love the brethren. I never knew a day when we needed more the full doctrine of the old Book and I never knew a day when there was more need of our keeping generously together, holding the truth in love. In these days of earth with our partial sight we can afford to wait for each other to lay hold or be laid hold of by the whole truth. Tomorrow we shall, if we be His, see eye to eye. But take the light as fast as it comes from the precious page, and look for more. This is the way we try to live hereabouts.

Hebrew and Greek

In the good providence of the Lord on the way, expounding the Word and hearing it, I have been permitted to look in upon sundry of our colleges, seminaries and Bible schools. These latter in some fair way we must recognize. With all their brevities and simplicities, they are, by God's good hand, here and they are here to stay. Make the most of them and give credit for what they do. But what impresses the student of the Word most, and grievously so in all our schools, is the neglect being given to the divine original, the Hebrew of the Old and the Greek of the New. In one college, I found but two in the Greek class—one a wide-awake young woman. In one divinity school there was not a Greek Testament in sight; they were not teaching it this term. It was an optional study. I recalled those days under Dr. Harper and Dr. Boise at Morgan Park, where the Bible text was in the forefront, the main daily study, and our classes were being taught under the alert Harper to read the Hebrew at sight—it can be done—and under the scholarly Boise to go straight through the Greek New Testament from Matthew to Revelation—every word as it stands. A young theologian informed me that in our seminaries today that is left for experts; he and his so-called classmates were giving themselves to social applications of the text. That, I was free to say, they can leave to God's guidance in the future. What we go to school for, now, or ought to, is to get at the Word of truth in its derivation and deep signification. With all my heart I believe there ought to be a return to these true cultural and withal practical studies in the original. Some Bible schools, indeed, are enlarging their course to take it up.

John's Nunc Dimittis

In our Sunday-school lessons of the quarter John the Baptist now disappears: Jesus only stands out before the eye. This is as it should be, as the mighty man of the wilderness himself said, "He must increase, but I must decrease."

But in John's lowly decrease what a lesson he leaves! He has done his work—Behold the Christ! Too much has been said gratuitously by some regarding John's momentary relapse from the faith, so called. That is, that his fears led him to appeal to Jesus, "Art thou he that should come?" On the contrary, was he not issuing the closing manifesto of his mission, and by getting the confirming voice of the Messiah, sealing the faith of his disciples in the Christ that was to come?

Jesus responds at once, "The blind see, the lame walk," as the assuring signs of his deity. It is enough. Immediately John retires, his work done. He has, by God's providence, introduced the Christ. "Now testest thou thy servant depart in peace." It is in reality John's nunc dimittis.

John the Baptist had one distinct errand. It was to prepare the way and point the way for "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." His one word was, "Turn from sin: turn to Jesus." Having faithfully prepared the way and presented the soul's Redeemer, he dutifully retires from view. In this he sets an example for every teacher and preacher, every Christian. Point and retire—Christ alone is our salvation and the one object of our worship—Exeunt omnes!

The Hungarian Baptist Convention

By STEPHEN FAZEKAS

The annual convention of the Hungarian Baptists was held at Homestead, Pa., this year, the very place that gave it birth fifteen years ago. At that time the conference scarcely embraced a half dozen struggling churches; this year the number has increased to twenty-eight. We have a ladies' aid society, a B. Y. P. U. and a Sunday school association, all three of which are functioning effectively even though they are young. The yearly meetings of these organizations are held in connection with the convention. Our ladies' aid society functions helpfully in Europe and America. It renders aid to the poor, maintains missionaries in Hungary and the occupied territories. A few of our local societies are so vigorous that they maintain their own missionaries in the homeland besides meeting their obligations to the central organization.

Three publications are maintained, one a fortnightly religious paper, at once our official organ, a tract published weekly and a Sunday-school quarterly. The A. B. P. S., grants us generous aid in meeting the expense of the latter, which is a publication of great importance, inasmuch as the major part of our Sunday-school teachers are unable to read in any other language. Some distinctive features of the convention were the foreign missionary scenes and the pageant presented by our young people and the open-air demonstration calculated to arrest the attention of our people in Homestead. Music was furnished on all these occasions by the excellent band of the New Castle, Pa., church and the local brass band. Our convention rejoices over the progress made the past year and looks into the future with hope despite the fact that we are meeting with all the obstacles which every wide-awake Christian organization encounters in the modern world. Delegates and guests numbered 150, a token of profound interest in the work of the convention. The accommodations and courtesy of the Homestead brethren were unsurpassed. The live pastor of this live church is Rev. A. Stumpf. Next year we shall meet at Cleveland, Ohio. The officers of the convention are: Rev. S. Gazsi, president; Rev. S. Orosz, vice president; Rev. S. Fazekas, secy.; Rev. M. Fabian, treas.

Buffalo Association Holds Institute

A registration of 340, representing eleven denominations and seventy-five churches—forty-six of which were Baptist—is the report of a missionary institute held by the women of the Buffalo Association at the Delaware Avenue Church Sept. 28-29.

The combination of Dr. Helen Barrett Montgomery and Dr. C. A. Brooks as instructors, an intense interest, and glorious autumn weather, could only result in the unanimous verdict—"The best meetings of the kind I ever attended." From the opening devotional, led by Mrs. Volney P. Kinne at ten o'clock Thursday morning, to the closing conference Friday afternoon, there was no abatement either in attendance or interest.

"Building with India," the foreign study book for this year, was the text used by Mrs. Montgomery. Dr. Brooks divided his time between the Negro and immigration problems, referring to the home study book, "The Trend of the Races" in discussion of the former topic, and "Through the Second Gate," in stirring addresses on the immigrant. The mass meeting Thursday evening was characterized by the large number of men present and the stillness of the audience as they listened to the addresses of Mrs. Montgomery and Dr. Brooks. The generous offering that followed was a practical manifestation of their vital interest.

The institute closed with a dinner at the Mandarin Cafe in honor of Mrs. Montgomery, Dr. Brooks, and three members of the Promotion Board Team—Mrs. Nathan Wood, vice president of the Women's Foreign Mission Society, Dr. W. H. Bowler of the promotion board, and Missionary Longwell, of Assam. A happy incident of this dinner was a gift of flowers to Mrs. Montgomery from the boys of the Chinese Bible Class of Buffalo. Mr. Moon Wong, president of this class, made the presentation in a few well-chosen words, ending with—"The Chinese people are grateful for what you have done for them, and China never forgets." Out into Western New York has gone from this institute an impetus of incalculable value in the missionary work of the year—the new point of view, the deepened interest, and the $159.58 spent in mission study books taken back into those seventy-five churches.

A Recognition Service

No happier event ever transpired in Brooklyn Baptist Temple than the recognition service for Rev. E. LeRoy Dakin held on the evening of Oct. 12. The church was well filled with members and their friends, some coming from out of town for the event. An interesting feature was the reading of letters from Governor Miller of New York state, Governor Morgan of West Virginia, Mayor Hylan of New York City, Mayor Hall of Charleston, W. Va. and a number of the denominational leaders. The singing of the great Temple choir was inspiring.

Mr. G. Howard Estey, chairman of the pulpit committee presided. Rev. Walter I. Southerton, moderator of the Long Island Association, welcomed Dr. Dakin into the fellowship of that association. Rev. Avery A. Shaw spoke of the happiness the Baptist preachers felt in having Dr. Dakin join them. Rev. John F. Carson, D. D. in his address of welcome spoke of the great opportunity so important a platform as the Baptist Temple gave its pastor. He referred to the Temple as one of the three greatest preaching stations in America and welcomed Dr. Dakin as a man too broad minded to tolerate fads and "isms" in religion. Col. F. P. Sellers, religious editor of the Brooklyn Eagle told of some of the Brooklyn preachers of bygone days. He said a man filling the pulpit of the Baptist Temple, "must play ball or sit on the bench." Rev. John Y. Aitchison, Director of the Board of Promotion, said the eyes of the entire denomination were upon Dr. Dakin and the Baptist Temple and expected great things from this church in the future as in the past. Mrs. Dakin was called to the platform and Miss Jessie Thomas Dorman, chairman of the women's work of the church in a charming manner presented her with a bouquet of roses from the women of the Temple.

When Dr. Dakin arose to speak he was greeted with great applause showing he had won a large place in the affections of his people, though on the local field only three weeks. After the recognition service a reception for Dr. and Mrs. Dakin was held in the lower Temple.

Our Schools

Linfield College

Linfield College, McMinnville, Ore., opened Sept. 19, under auspicious circumstances. The faculty has been increased by three new members, all of whom enter upon their work with excellent preparation and successful experience. Improvements on the campus during the summer months add to its attractiveness. The addition of new equipment in the laboratories and class rooms enhance the efficiency of the various departments. The development of a more adequate library fund has made possible the addition of many new volumes to the library.

The enrollment is in advance of any former year and bears testimony to the approval of the institution on the part of its constituency in the Northwest. With a large percentage of the older students returning and with the largest freshman class ever enrolled the student body has entered enthusiastically upon the work of the year both in the class room and in other student activities.

The opening exercises of the year were held in the college gymnasium, Sept. 20. After words of welcome from the president of the board of trustees and the mayor of the city the new members of the faculty were introduced by President Riley. Dr. William J. Sly, our new professor of religious education and sacred literature, gave an address on "Pearls of Great Price," mentioning Christian education, Christian enthusiasm, Christian character, Christian service and Christian citizenship as pearls which should be coveted by every college man and woman. Professor George R. Varney, D. D., who comes to the department of public speaking, also gave an address, in which he emphasized the qualifications of the man for the needs of the present age.

At the first prayer meeting of the college year a large representation from the college was in attendance and helped make it one of the best services in the memory of the membership of the church.

Colgate University

The inauguration exercises of Dr. George Barton Cutten as president of Colgate University were held in the University chapel on the morning of Oct. 7. Representatives from about one hundred colleges and universities were present, and the attendance of alumni and friends of Colgate was the largest since the time of the centennial celebration in 1919, when 30 per cent of the alumni were on the campus.

The program included a prayer by Dr. C. A. Barbour, president of Rochester Theological Seminary; presentation of the key and charter by Dr. James C. Colgate, '84, president of the university board of trustees; and congratulatory addresses by Hon. Frank P. Graves, president of the University of the State of New York; Dr. Livingston Farrand, president of Cornell University; Dr. A. P. Brigham, '79, for the faculty of the university; George W. Cobb, '94, representing the alumni, and Arthur B. Suchy, representing the student body.

Honorary degrees were conferred upon President Barbour, who received the degree of Doctor of Divinity; President Farrand, Doctor of Laws, and President Graves, Doctor of Humane Letters.

After the inauguration there was a reception in the gymnasium for the guests of the university and the alumni, followed by a football game on the athletic field between Allegheny College and Colgate, which was won by Colgate by the score of 19-0.

President Cutten had as the subject of his address "The Reconstruction of Democracy."

Frances Shimer

The Frances Shimer School, Mt. Carroll, Ill., opened Sept. 20 with 179 girls in attendance and a faculty of twenty-one. Of the pupils seventeen are college sophomores, fifty-one college freshmen, twenty-two are specials taking only music, art or expression, and eighty-nine are doing regular academic work. The house pupils number 143, enough to fill all the buildings, including the new one soon to be completed. The surplus ones are being housed in town temporarily.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MASSACHUSETTS

A RECENT MARRIAGE in Cambridge will be of interest to Baptists throughout the country: That of Miss Gertrude A. Montague, to Fred T. Field, a prominent Boston lawyer, graduate and trustee of Brown, trustee of Newton Theological Seminary, ex-president of the Boston Baptist Social Union. Miss Montague is a daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Richard Montague, former pastor at Lawrence, Providence, Colorado Springs, and Newton Center. She has been a high-school teacher in Cambridge, and with her husband, is a member and interested worker in the First Baptist Church of that city. Congratulations to bride and groom are many, and are emphatic with joy and sincerity.

THE GREAT WEST SOMERVILLE Baptist Sunday School has been jubilantly celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. Organized in 1872, two years later it had grown into the church which now is one of the largest in the commonwealth. The school has a membership of 1,875, and constantly increases. It is thoroughly up-to-date in its organization and methods, and has a men's class with an enrolment of 500. Pastor F. M. Swaffield is the teacher of this class, and the spirited and resourceful leader of a large and growing enterprise. Our State Convention is meeting at this church.

THE FIRST BAPTIST Church of Boston, into which was merged the Warren Avenue Church two years ago, has by the sale of two properties held by the latter church, greatly increased its endowment fund. The first sale was of the lot on Huntington Avenue which was purchased a few years ago by the proceeds of the disposal of the old Bowdoin Square property, when those two churches joined, and during the successful pastorate of Dr. Herbert S. Johnson contemplated a large Baptist Tabernacle. The other sale was of the Warren Avenue meeting-house to the Seventh Day Adventist Society. These fortunate transfers will give the Commonwealth Avenue church an endowment of nearly $150,000. All of the activities of the united churches will now center in the imposing home of the First Church. These developments hearten Dr. De Blois and his people, and they expect that the marked recent quickening and growth will be consolidated.

AT THE BOSTON BAPTIST Ministers Meeting Oct. 9, Dr. F. B. Greul gave a masterly address on "The Significance of the Title 'Son of Man' as applied to Jesus." The paper evoked unanimous commendation as a thorough study of the subject, and general agreement with its closely Biblical positions. Dr. Greul is a safe theologian.

CALIFORNIA SHOULD gratefully salute Massachusetts for sending her such a man as Rev. Herbert Handel, formerly assistant pastor at Tremont Temple, who resigned to take a similar position in the First Church, Pasadena, with Dr. John Marvin Dean. One appreciative brother exclaimed—"Handel for thirteen years was the jewel of the Temple!" It is so close to the truth that it ought to be repeated. Hard it will be to fill his place. In his tender leaving he was loved, appreciated, and supplied with money to buy a home. And he was worthy of it all.

REV. FRANKLIN HUTCHINSON surprised the members of the congregation by reading his resignation as pastor of the church in Framingham, Mass. No wonder they were shocked for they have not been accustomed to such procedure. For forty years the pastor has served this church coming to it from the seminary as a young man. Last May the church and community celebrated the event. The resignation is to take effect Jan. 1, but the family will move to Wellesley at once where they will make their future home with a daughter.

FIRST CHURCH PITTSFIELD, was organized in 1772. Its one hundred fiftieth anniversary was observed Oct. 15-22 by a series of services featured by the presence and messages of former pastors and greetings from those unable to be present. The observance began with morning worship on Sunday, Oct. 15, at which the preacher was Rev. H. S. Johnson, pastor of the church 1893-1899, who was given leave of absence from the War College, at Washington, to participate in this service. In the evening Rev. Maurice A. Levy, the present pastor, gave the historical sermon. Monday, Oct. 16, was community night, with greetings by representative pastors in the city. Tuesday, was young people's night with an address by Rev. C. P. MacGregor, of Manchester, N. H., pastor of the church 1909-1918. Wednesday was observed as reunion and reminiscence night. Supplementing Rev. A. B. Whipple's history of the church his daughter, Miss Phylla M. Whipple presented chapters of "Recent History." Former pastors are Rev. O. P. Gifford, Pasadena, Cal. (1877-1879); Rev. Orville Coats, of Berkeley, Cal., (1887-1893) and Rev. F. W. Lockwood, of Watertown, Mass. (1902-1908). This church was the first pastoral charge of Rev. Wayland Hoyt. The address was made by Rev. G. G. Johnson, of Washington, D. C., pastor of the church 1900-1902. Thursday, was Sunday-school night with an address by Rev. Edward Holyoke, of Providence, R. I., pastor of the church, 1884-1887. Friday, October 20 was denominational night with addresses by Rev. H. A. Heath, secretary of the Massachusetts Convention, and Rev. Austen K. De Blois, of Boston. On Sunday, Oct. 22, the pastor spoke in the morning on "Facing the Future" and in the evening Rev. James Grant, a former associate pastor and first pastor of the Morningside Baptist Church, Pittsfield, preached. In connection with the observance an anniversary Scrap Book was prepared by Miss Nellie L. Whipple.

CONNECTICUT

BAPTISTS COOPERATED in the missionary institute held under the auspices of the Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford Seminary Foundation, Oct. 11-12. Mrs. Julia Dixon Swift, of New Jersey, taught the adult book on "Home Missions"; Mrs. Daisy Dean Futch, of Hamden, taught the intermediate book "India on the March."

THE FAIRFIELD ASSOCIATION met with First Church, of Bridgeport, in its eighty-fourth annual session, Wednesday, Sept. 27, Rev. D. B. MacQueen, pastor. Rev. Walter Gay preached the annual sermon. Rev. A. B. Coats, represented the work of the state convention. Rev. H. B. Benninghoff spoke at the afternoon session on "Kingdom Building in Japan," and in the evening on "The Hope of the Orient." The speakers at the woman's session were: Miss Marion Lathrop, on "Christian Americanization," and Miss Ina Burton, representing the W. A. B. H. M. S. Mrs. T. S. Gray, of Stamford, presided. The W. W. G. girls presented most effectively the drama, "Internal Revenue." Rev. Ellis Gilbert, pastor of First Church, Danbury, conducted a Round Table on young people's work. Officers elected for the ensuing year: Moderator, Rev. J. H. Schoeppler; vice-moderator, T. T. Phillips; clerk and treasurer, Rev. F. S. Clark.

NEW YORK

THE CHURCH at PRESTON HOLLOW, on Sept. 29 called a council of the churches of the district to consider the ordination of their pastor Stanley B. Smith. The ordination sermon was preached by Dr. J. F. Vichert of Colgate Seminary and the charge to the candidate by his father, Rev. C. B. Smith. B. L. Elsbree was the clerk of the council.

Baptist Week in Rochester

The Baptist hosts of Rochester and Monroe County made much of Baptist Week, Oct. 5-8. On Thursday evening about 350 people representing all but two or three of the thirty-six churches in Monroe County sat down to dinner together at the Lake Avenue Church, with Walter S. Hubbell, leader of the famous men's Bible class of First Church, presiding. After a delightful time of fellowship and the presentation of some phases of our local work, Dr. H. B. Benninghoff delivered a charming address on his unique work at Waseda University among 10,000 students. This was followed by a gripping speech by Dr. James H. Franklin on the present European situation and the opportunity for Baptists. He stressed the great importance attaching to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in 1923, at Stockholm, Sweden, and reminded Rochester Baptists that two of our people are to have important parts in the program, Mrs. W. A. Montgomery and Dr. Clarence A. Barbour. The whole evening was one of joyous Baptist fellowship.

Friday evening was young people's night. About 200 young people from Rochester and Monroe county sat down to dinner at the Baptist Temple. The church at Walker, twenty-five miles from Rochester, won the banner for the largest percentage of attendance, the young people present equalling 20 per cent of the entire membership of the church.

Dr. A. W. Beaven, of Lake Avenue, and Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, of Indianapolis, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, were the speakers. At eight o'clock the auditorium of the Baptist Temple was well filled to hear Dr. Taylor as he spoke on "The Call of Christ to the Young People of Today."

On Sunday morning the pastors spoke in their own churches on "Baptists in the World of Today," and a special campaign was conducted for subscriptions to Missions and THE BAPTIST. A thousand subscribers is the goal.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

FIRST CHURCH OF WILMINGTON under the leadership of Rev. F. L. Vernon is entering upon what promises to be the greatest period of real service in its history. A woman's league, a combination of the missionary and aid societies has been formed. The men of the church have organized a Baptist brotherhood with the idea of greatest possible service. The pastor is preaching a series of ten sermons on "The Making of the Bible."

Dayton Association

Pastors of the Dayton Baptist Association held their October meeting at First Church, Dayton, Oct. 3, Pastor J. M. Cosby presiding. Pastor Brandt led the devotions. Pastor Brandt finds his people rallying for the fall work. A number of his young people have organized into a gospel team. They are ready for service.

The First Church is happy in that it has been able to secure Dr. Kurtly as acting pastor, until a successor to Dr. J. B. Slocum has been found.

Pastor Scruby is doing excellent work at Haynes Street. There has been large percentage of increase in all departments. The untiring efforts of pastor and wife are bearing fruit. They are evangelistic. Pastor Staley is going to assist them in meetings.

Pastor Bagby has resigned and closed his work with the Colorado Ave. Church. This leaves an important field without pastor. Mr. Bagby has done excellent work.

Pastor Swigart has just returned from his vacation. He is rallying the forces at Greenville. This field is one of many difficulties for the Baptists. Mr. Swigart has shown great fidelity to his task.

Pastor Staley at Central conducted a successful summer meeting. There were fifteen additions. The Sunday school is growing.

Pastor Otto Roth, the new pastor of the Fourth Street Church was introduced. He is getting a hold of the work.

Pastor Hall is keeping the missionary spirit aglow on his field. There are three study classes each Sunday evening. The evening sermon is devoted to missionary activities illustrated by slides. Four persons received by letter.

The North Dayton Church will dedicate its new house this month. One baptized and one received by letter.

Pastor Miller, of Degraff, finds the forces rallying. Prayer meetings excellent. Bible school work growing.

Pastor Copeland at Clifton Street, Springfield, is making improvements in the building. He has a Bible class which studies each Friday night. About fifty are interested in the class. This class gave into the church treasury $58.

Pastor Vuker at Sinking Creek has been away filling engagements for Bible conferences. Pastor Vuker's people are glad to share some of the good things he gives them. They manage to take care of the local work while he is away.

Pastor MacFarlane at Memorial is doing a splendid constructive work. All former records were exceeded in attendance on Rally day. A number await baptism.

Pastor Sloman of Third Street has an enthusiastic staff of workers around him. Nearly 100 gathered for a supper and to plan the winter's work. The vacation Bible school is a great asset in their field.

Pastor J. M. Cosby has some things to encourage his heart at Tippecanoe City. His people joined with two other churches last summer to conduct a vacation Bible school which had an enrolment of more than 350.

Pastor Charles Walsh, of Sidney, is planning to start special meetings soon. The auditorium is being decorated.

The meeting was addressed by Dr. Kurtly. It was a masterful and logical presentation of Baptist objectives.

NORTH DAKOTA

THE BAPTIST WORK IN FARGO seems opening up promisingly this fall. Dr. R. W. Hobbs after his well-earned vacation is back and hard at it at the First Church. On Oct. 1 the Sunday school of the First Church almost reached 500 present, and fine audiences greeted the pastor. The first prayer meeting after Dr. Hobbs' return presented a most encouraging spectacle, sixty persons being in their places. The annual meeting of the church held Oct. 4, was largely attended and took steps which must spell progress.

THE IMMANUEL CHURCH DURING the last two months, C. W. Finwall, pastor, enjoys growing audiences and a Sunday school which tries to keep pace with the good-sized evening audiences. During the two months since the coming of the new pastor, the church has adopted a new constitution, has bought a new large church sign, a new individual communion set, has installed a new furnace, and has made other improvements—all paid for. At its last communion service nine new members were given the hand of fellowship—two had been baptized two weeks previous.

AT THE SWEDISH BAPTIST Church new life is thrilling since the coming of the well-endowed young pastor, G. W. Holmberg, recently from St. Paul, Minnesota, where he has completed with honor a full course at the Bethel Academy and the theological seminary. Here too the congregations are growing and larger things looked for.

THE RED RIVER VALLEY Association met with the Grafton church, Sept. 25-26. The attendance was larger than the two previous years. Rev. A. E. Bigelow of the Philippine Islands brought the missionary messages. At the close of the service the second evening one person accepted Christ as a personal Saviour. The association will meet next year with First church of Grand Forks. William McIntosh, of Crystal, was elected moderator, and Mrs. B. E. Groom, of Langdon, clerk.

THE NORTHWESTERN ASSOCIATION met with the Sawyer Baptist church. About sixty visitors and delegates were in attendance. J. H. Burkhart of Berthold was chosen moderator, and Rev. W. A. Daniel of Minot, clerk. The association will meet next year with the Roseleg church in its new building located in the country twenty miles south of Ryder.

REV. J. E. NAYLOR, state evangelist began a series of revival meetings with the First Church of Bismarck, Oct. 10.

REV. WILFRED G. HOLMBERG, pastor of the Fargo Swedish Baptist Church was married to Miss Ruth E. Carlson, Minneapolis, Sept. 12, by Rev. R. A. Arlander of the Elin Swedish Baptist church of Minneapolis.

THE NORTH DAKOTA Association met with the Lisbon Church. Mr. Murray and his wife, former members of the church, drove 150 miles to be present at this meeting. Rev. R. W. Hobbs, of Fargo, preached the annual sermon. S. W. D. Folger, of Fargo, was elected moderator; Mrs. H. H. Hirschy, clerk. The association will meet next year with the Page church.

ILLINOIS

AT A REGULARLY CONVENED council, consisting of pastors and delegates from the various churches of the Salem Baptist Association, at Littleton, Sept. 15, Brother O. H. Gerstenkorn passed a satisfactory examination, and upon the vote of the Littleton Baptist church, of which the candidate is a member, the council proceeded to set him apart to the work of the gospel ministry in the Baptist denomination. L. M. Westrate, moderator; J. B. Martin, clerk; Rev. H. F. Jones, evangelist preached the sermon.

CHICAGO BAPTISTS have been called upon to give up another of their workers to the general missionary cause. Rev. Vincent Wacek, who came here early in the year from Detroit and worked with gratifying success among the Serbians of the city, has been commissioned by the Foreign Missionary Society to Serbia and Croatia to organize the Baptist work there. The Serbian Baptist church in Detroit is the first and only Protestant church among that people. The one in Chicago is the second. Work was started in fourteen centers in Croatia and Serbia by Baptists from Czecho-Slovakia. Mr. Wacek is to look after this work and see that it is carried forward.

THE SECOND SERIES, 1922, OF LECTURES upon the William Cleaver Wilkinson Foundation will be delivered in the chapel of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, 3040 Washington Blvd., Chicago, by Prof. Albert Henry Newman, D. D., LL. D., of Mercer University, formerly of McMaster and Baylor, as follows: "A High Critic of Our Own Time: William Cleaver

BAPTIST GROUP, SUMMER ASSEMBLY, JAMESTOWN, NORTH DAKOTA, JULY 10-16, 1922

Wilkinson as a Religious Writer and Sermon-Critic," Monday, Nov. 6, 11 a. m.; "A 'Higher Critic' of the Second Century: Marcion of Sinope," Tuesday, Nov. 7, 3:30 p. m.; "An Orthodox Heretic of the Fourth Century: Nestorius of Antioch," Wednesday, Nov. 8, 3:30 p. m.; "An Anti-Pedobaptist Holy Catholic Apostolic Church: The Paulicians of Armenia," Thursday, Nov. 9, 3:30 p. m.; "A Christian Stoic of the Sixteenth Century: John Calvin," Friday, Nov. 10, 3:30 p. m. The Chicago Baptist Ministers' Conference will be the guests of the seminary on Monday, Nov. 6, at 11 a. m. All friends of the seminary, however, are invited to any or all of the lectures. The committee in charge of the lectures announces President L. R. Scarborough, D. D., LL. D., of the Southwestern Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Tex., as the speaker for 1923.

THE WOMAN'S BAPTIST MISSION UNION (Chicago Association) held its first meeting of the year with the Berwyn Church, Oct. 10. A large and responsive audience was presided over by Mrs. R. P. Fales. The music, furnished by the entertaining church, was especially noteworthy. Mrs. Milton Shirk, foreign vice-president of Central District Board, gave an illuminating talk on missionary work in the Philippines, with especial stress on those of Central District, and closed with a brief report on some of the outstanding speeches of the All-Christian Conference held in Shanghai, China, last May, at which Mrs. Shirk was a delegate. "The Call of Youth" by Miss Bess Stickney, for the World Wide Guild, and Mrs. E. S. Osgood for the Children's World Crusade, was "Answered" by Mrs. Milton Lamoreaux. The climax of the program was an address by Dr. Carl D. Case, of the Oak Park Church, on "The Church and Internationalism."

Chicago Social Union Program

The Board of Directors of the Chicago Baptist Social Union consider themselves fortunate in being able to announce the programs for the three meetings of the season, and it is hoped that this action may result in an enthusiastic and sustained interest which will make this one of the most satisfactory years in the life of the organization. All meetings will be held at the Hamilton Club. The three programs follow:

"Baptist Night," Friday, Nov. 3. Speaker: Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, president, Northern Baptist Convention. No man in our denomination is better able to speak in an authoritative way on matters denominational than is Dr. Taylor. He has just returned from abroad where he visited the stricken fields of Europe on a commission from the foreign mission society. Music by the imperial quartette.

"Civil Night" February meeting, definite date later. Speaker: Hon. Henry J. Allen, governor of Kansas. As a public speaker of national reputation, a statesman and leader in matters of national import, Governor Allen needs no introduction.

"International Night," April 24. Speaker: Prof. Abraham Lincoln McCrimmon, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., president, Baptist convention of Ontario and Quebec. Chancellor of MacMaster University, Toronto, Ont.

KANSAS

THE QUARTERLY SUPPER OF CLAY Center Church was served Wednesday evening, Sept. 20 to about 150. Rally Day was observed in the Sunday school on Sept. 24, with a large attendance and a good program. A reception was held Oct. 3 for high school students and faculty, also church members and friends. About 200 young people attended.

IOWA

REV. W. H. ROGERS, OF MUSCATINE, gave three addresses before the Kansas State Convention at Hays Oct. 9-12.

Dr. WM. A. WALDO, WELL KNOWN in the denomination as having held prominent pastorates, is now in the midst of a union revival campaign in Muscatine, with twelve churches cooperating. He came here direct from Europe where he had been holding an evangelistic campaign in the Great Assembly Hall, East London. The meeting is well organized with a chorus choir of 100 voices and is progressing with unusual interest. A considerable number have already indicated their desire to accept Christ as Savior.

Rocky Mountain States

ARIZONA

THE LONE STAR Church, Prescott, has called the Rev. W. F. Bristow of Redlands, Cal., to become its pastor. The Prescott church is one of great possibility, and Brother Bristow comes splendidly prepared for an aggressive work.

IDAHO

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL session of the East Idaho Association was held with the Pocatello Church Oct. 2-4. A team consisting of Mrs. P. C. Wright, M. D. Eubanks, Mrs. O. R. Judd and Miss May Huston presented the denominational program in an effective manner. Dr. James A. Francis, of Los Angeles, gave a searching address on "Stewardship." The closing session was given over to the young people who held a rally. Rev. E. L. Burkett, home on furlough from China, gave a stereopticon lecture. At the close he called for volunteers for life service and some responded. Many felt that there was a spiritual atmosphere throughout the whole session. Pastor Waldo E. Maring, of Idaho Falls, was elected moderator, and Kittie C. Carter of Pocatello, clerk.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE BIBLE SCHOOL OF REDLANDS First Church had an attendance of 651 on Rally Day. Mr. F. K. Arthur is the new superintendent. The fall work of the church began auspiciously. Large numbers are being received at every communion service. The school of missions opened Oct. 22. Many letters have come to Pastor S. Fraser Langford from parents and pastors of university students asking his special interest. The women of the church issued 150 invitations to a dinner for the freshman class for Oct. 15.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

MRS. MELISSA CARR, WHITAKER, wife of Rev. William Carey Whitaker, pastor of Oak Park Church of Sacramento, entered into rest September 26. Mrs. Whitaker was best known for many years as Melissa Carr, missionary to Burma. She went to Burma in 1890 and became a pioneer missionary in Sandoway, Arakan. Her life as a missionary encompassed twenty years of the prime of her womanhood. In 1910, while at home on furlough, she was married to Rev. William Carey Whitaker, then pastor at Willits, Cal. Six years they labored together in that field, and then in obedience to a call from the Oak Park Church of Sacramento they moved to that city. Almost another six years of blessed ministry had been rounded out when sickness laid her low, and after five weeks of intense suffering she went away to be at home with God. Rev. C. H. Hobart, an old friend of the family, conducted the funeral services, assisted by Rev. Bryant Wilson of First Church, and Rev. A. Watson Brown, pastor of Calvary Church. Two of her stepsons, Rev. Robert B. Whitaker, and Mr. Leslie C. Whitaker are now on the foreign field, and another son, William Carey Whitaker, Jr., is under appointment and hopes to be sent out next year.

State Conventions

years ago, the line cleavage between them and the "missionary" Baptists has become an imaginary one.

Convention work in its several departments was exhibited in reports, addresses and on the screen. They showed a fine summer assembly held with an enrolment of 505; a large gain in the enrolment of students in Franklin College; two new church buildings dedicated; seventeen financial campaigns with churches, raising $176,926; forty churches aided in the support of missionary pastors; three district superintendents, one state evangelist, one elementary worker, one literature secretary, one district secretary for women's work, one elementary worker, one state superintendent of religious education and a general superintendent.

The amount of money raised for missions was $348,963; for pastors' salaries, $365,923.68; for other current expenses, $307,746.91; for buildings and repairs, $282,062.32; for Sunday school supplies, $74,550.65; for other objects, $34,217.83; total, $1,363,464.39. Rev. S. G. Huntington showed that the average giving of resident Indiana Baptists has now reached approximately the standard of the tithe—their number being about 53,000.

Much interest was aroused over the program proposed to follow-up the New World Movement. It included the careful formulation of a budget six months in advance of the annual meeting of the convention, the apportionment by associations to be passed on by associational board, then by local churches. The program was unanimously adopted.

A notable advance was made in the revision for social service. A regular department of social service was created, coordinately with the departments of religious education, women's work, men's work and evangelism. Another proposed advance is in the line of evangelism. At the suggestion of the general superintendent, C. M. Dinsmore, the members of the ministers' conference unanimously, and with deep feeling, endorsed a proposal to put evangelism at the forefront of the coming year's work, to carry the gospel into neglected places, and to attempt state-wide propaganda with a view to pressing the gospel message upon the state as a whole.

A third project, entered upon with much enthusiasm, is a state-wide campaign, to be handled by the young people, to put the state paper, the Baptist Observer, in every Baptist home in Indiana, to be completed by April 1, 1923.

Resolutions called for the enforcement of law, and specially of the eighteenth amendment, for efforts to settle industrial and international peace, for intervention in some form to bring to an end the atrocities in the Near East, and for another Ship of Fellowship.

Rev. O. A. Cook of Bedford was elected president; Mr. J. G. Allen of Washington, vice president; Rev. I. C. Overman of Greensburg, secretary; Mr. W. R. Adams of Indianapolis, treasurer. Vacancies in the board of promotion for the term expiring in 1923 were filled by the election of Rev. A. A. Cohn of Sullivan and Mrs. V. Thompson of Dana. Vacancies for the 1924 term are taken by H. N. Spear, D. of Bluffton, Rev. Shelby Lee of Annamaker and Mrs. William Wise of New Albany. Members for the full term expiring in 1925 are Mrs. Mae Hougland, Cottsburg; Mrs. T. A. Freeman, South Bend; Mrs. W. W. Fry, Vevay; U. M. McGuire, Greencastle; Rev. S. D. Huff, Peru; Hon. C. F. Remy, Indianapolis; Rev. H. C. Odell, Elwood; J. P. Sandidge, Vincennes; C. M. Beincamp, Aurora; Rev. J. F. Rake, Evansville; Jay C. Smith, Seymour; W. B. Cartwright, Covington.

The chairman of the department of religious education is Rev. U. S. Clutton of Indianapolis; of women's work, Miss Della Dearborn, Indianapolis; of men's work, C. S. Dearborn, Indianapolis; of evangelism, Rev. Roy B. Deer, Terre Haute; of social service, Rev. U. M. McGuire, Greencastle.

Rev. U. S. Clutton will preach the next convention sermon, with Rev. J. M. Osborn of Bicknell as alternate. The next annual meeting will be held at Lebanon.

The Minnesota Meeting

By MRS. A. F. GALE

BEAUTIFUL October weather; a splendid town, the seat of Pillsbury Academy, and easy of access by train and auto; the abounding hospitality of the town's people and the academy; in the meetings a minimum of business and absence of controversy; practical discussions and inspiring addresses by magnificent speakers, combined to make the sixty-third anniversary of the Minnesota Convention the best ever held, in attendance and enjoyableness. There were 213 delegates registered and 100 visitors, besides many others in attendance.

The only minor strain was the feeling of sadness as we missed the familiar face and voice of the late Dr. E. R. Pope, who for twenty-nine years, had been the efficient and beloved secretary of the convention. The first session Monday evening was a memorial service. The chapel is to be the Pope Memorial. Dr. Henderson, his pastor, said, "His soul's desire was to be a good minister of Jesus Christ."

A noticeable feature of the convention was the fact that almost the whole audience remained through, whether woman's or general work was being considered, in marked contrast to the shifting audiences of the past. This indicates how a feeling of oneness and cooperation in the whole task is growing under the leadership of the General Board of Promotion.

The women gathered Monday afternoon for a pre-convention conference, well attended and helpful in its discussion of plans and methods. In the general sessions were talks on missions in the Sunday school and in study classes, and reading contests, emphasizing the value of training in youth and urging the use of missionary stories. The reading contest banner was awarded the Lake Harriet Church, Minneapolis, and the "North Star" banner was awarded to the First Church, Albert Lea. Mrs. Earl gave report of the White Cross work and stated that we still had $1,500 at interest in the bank as a result of our White Cross Bazaar. The W. W. G. Work was reported by the secretary, Mrs. Berry, and new plans were so live, definite and concrete as to be full of promise for the new year. Mrs. Thorsen's report of the Americanization work was

The New Social Order, by Harry F. Ward. New York: Macmillan Co. $1.50.

The Macmillan Company has just reprinted "The New Social Order," at the reduced price of $1.50.

Vandemark's Folly, by Herbert Quick. Illustrated by N. C. Wyeth. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Co. $2.

A story of pioneer times in Iowa, when that state "lived in the future." The reader, as well as the hero of the tale, feels now and then "the suck of the forests" and catches a breath of the prairie winds. A swiftly-moving, absorbing story. Approaching greatness in its simplicity, directness and accuracy to locality and the spirit of the times, it is likely to be more than a book of the moment.

"Apostolic Optimism", by Rev. J. H. Jowett. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

What is the use of reviewing a book by Dr. Jowett? Everyone knows his ability as a preacher of the gospel. There are in this volume twenty sermons, including the great address delivered before the Free Church Congress at Cardiff on "The Art of Effective Preaching." This chapter is worth the price of the book to any minister. The volume is one of inspiring and suggestive worth.

Carnac's Folly, by Sir Gilbert Parker. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippencott Company. $2.00.

It is difficult to believe that the author of "The Weavers" is responsible for this French-Canadian melodrama, sketchily written, and without any particular distinction. It is what might be called "a rattling good story" for pastime reading; but it involves some rather preposterous situations on which the story turns, and is after all just another light novel, with a series of love affairs, licit and illicit, but with a happy ending. There are altogether too many typographical errors in the book.

"The Social Trend", by Edward Alsworth Ross. New York: Century Co.

Whew! It is like a fresh gust of wind from the prairie. It is not outlaw radicalism; it is trenchant criticism and clear interpretation of the present order of society, and it points out where we are going if we don't watch out, as well as where we may go if we do watch out. This eminent teacher in the University of Wisconsin, always brave and scientific, is here at his best. In a series of short essays he tells what has become of our old-time liberty and why, what is to be done to prevent a future murderous clash of races, why private charity "with strings to it" cannot take the place of social reform, how prohibition saved the Russian revolution, why a "good" lawyer is likely not to be a good citizen, why social service requires people with "spunk," why the public must know the secrets of business, and why the league of nations (or something of the kind) is a necessity. It is readable, quotable and practical.

The Divine Initiative, by H. R. Mackintosh. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.25.

Four lectures originally delivered in London at a school for missionaries on furlough, are reprinted by the Student Christian Movement. In the preface the author says that "the title is intended to mark the fact that stress is everywhere laid on one cardinal point, which may be put thus: all that Christians are they owe to the spontaneous love of God." College and university students will find the Gospel stated here in an appealing way.

The Master Key, by Frederic C. Spurr. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.35.

The sub-title, "A Study in World Problems", suggests the outlook and purpose of the writer, who in a few years since his return to London from Melbourne has made for himself a conspicuous place in the Christian ministry in England. He succeeded Dr. F. B. Meyer, his long-time friend and counsellor, at Regent's Park, London, and when that congregation was forced this year to disband, Mr. Spurr was called to Hampstead Road Church, Birmingham. He is among the foremost Baptist leaders in Great Britain, combining fearless and independent thinking with the utmost of devotion to the living Lord. "The Master Key" is, as the author says, "an attempt to set forth the Gospel in relation to the present travail of the world." He finds that master key indicated in Eph. 1:10: "The world unity men have ever sought, and still seek, is centered in a living person, Jesus Christ. All things are to be 'summed up in Christ.'" Here is a book which represents hard thinking and conscientious toil and an earnest quest for light. It is one of the strong books of the season.

NEW BOOKS ON MUSICAL SUBJECTS

From the H. W. Gray Co., of New York, comes a series of handbooks for the musician primarily, but of great value and interest to all lovers of music. Before taking up the individual titles for consideration, notice should be made of the American Organ Quarterly, issued by this sterling firm of publishers. This is a journal devoted to the work of the organist, a practical mode of supplying the church and recital organist with legitimate and practical repertoire.

Below I will list the titles of the books, together with a brief resumé of the object and virtues of each in turn:

"The Technique and Art of Organ Playing," by Clarence Dickinson. This important work, unique in its system of instruction, is by a virtuoso who reveals the secrets which lead to great achievements and the perfect mastery of the organ.

The many problems which beset the church and concert organists are squarely met and definitely solved; and the mass of material presented in the work is arranged and treated with the utmost clearness and in accordance with sound pedagogical methods, carrying the student systematically from the elementary studies to the highest artistic attainments.

The work is in one volume, music folio size, containing fifty pages of text with eighty musical illustrations, and 200 pages of graduated exercises and musical compositions. Handsomely bound in cloth boards. $5 net. Cloth gilt $6.

"The Art of Transcribing for the Organ," complete textbook for the organist in arranging choral and instrumental music, by Herbert F. Ellingford, Organist to the city of Liverpool at St. George's Hall, the first and only book published on this important topic by a practical master of the subject. Every organist is nowadays compelled to transcribe all sorts of compositions for his instrument for church or concert use. This book gives him the actual technique which enables him to do so. For he choral and orchestral work there is given a full page score, its pianoforte equivalent, and the method by which it is transferred to the organ. The scheme includes small orchestra, string orchestra, hammer and pianoforte music and songs. With this book the whole world of music becomes available at the organ bench.

There are 216 musical illustrations in the book, of which 137 are transcriptions, and seventy-nine full-scores by such composers as Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, Weber, Wagner, Tchaikowski, Grieg, Liszt, Chopin, Sullivan and Rachmaninoff. Board, $5 net. Cloth, $6 net.

"Organ Stops and Their Artistic Registration," by George Ashdown Audsley. There has always been a desire on the part of organists and lovers of the organ for a work that shall be more than mere glossary of the names of organ-tops, accompanied by a brief outline of their usual external forms.

The organ student and young organist must know what is the true and full effect every useful stop holds in the economy of the organ as a musical instrument; what its tonality is or should be; what its powers are in scientific combination, and, above all, in artistic registration. On the other hand, those interested in the history of organ development along tonal lines desire to know, as fully as possible, the special tonality and the peculiarities of form and construction—which have led to the production of such tonality—of the old stops which have had their day; have fallen into desuetude; are now lost to sight and hearing; and are, for the most part, relegated to a place among the curiosities of the organ-builders' art. It is with the desire and earnest endeavor to place in the hands of the student and organist such a work as will assist them to a knowledge of what is necessary and desirable that they should learn respecting all the stops or voices of the organ they will have to employ in artistic registrations for the compositions they will perform during their professional careers, that the author of the present work has taken up his pen, after a study of the subject during half a century. The work is in one volume, measuring nine by six inches, and comprising about 300 pages of text. It is illustrated with five plates containing eighteen drawings of complete organ-pipes, and with fifty-four separate drawings in the text. It is handsomely bound in cloth and titled in gold, $2.50 net.

"Choral Orchestration," by Cecil Forsyth. The number of anthems and other choral works written each year by English and American composers is enormous. Most of these are rarely performed with orchestral accompaniment. But the proportion is increasing. Organists constantly inquire for a short handy book which will give them a technical grounding in the scoring of their compositions. And it is for their use that this slim volume has been written. It makes no pretense of taking them into the high sun-smitten pastures of modern orchestration. But it does claim to lead them to the foothills thereunder, and to deal practically with the routine problems which face them on every page of their compositions.

General principles have by no means been avoided—indeed, they are the foundation of the book. But they are shown mainly in their application to every-day orchestral necessities. When once these applications have been grasped there is nothing to prevent their extension into the more elaborate fields of instrumentation, according to the musical ability of the individual composer. A foundation technique is the thing to aim at, a technique that gives one ease and certainty of orchestral method. The plan of the volume is new. It amounts to this: that the reader is presented with a complete composition, and is then taken through it bar by bar, almost as if in conversation with a friendly critic. First, the musical difficulties of the work are considered in large blocks, as it were; the orchestral possibilities of each passage are then balanced one against the other; then, when a decision has been made, the details of the orchestral execution are taken up and explained. In this way it is hoped that organist-composers may be encouraged to a better study of the subject of orchestration, not as a platonic textbook affair that is wholly outside their own sphere of action, but as a practical part of their profession. Octavo size. Cloth, $2 net.

DEAGAN TOWER CHIMES

The music of Deagan Tower Chimes reaches out to unseen thousands, bearing a sublime message of peace and good will.

Whether in the ritual of the service, or in playing the old time favorite hymns, the solemn, beautiful tones of Deagan Tower Chimes will serve the community for generations, acting as a benediction and blessing—a constant call to worship.

The Memorial Sublime

What more fitting memorial or greater philanthropy could be bestowed on any community than a set of Deagan Tower Chimes!

Played from Electric Keyboard by the organist. The only real improvement in Tower Chimes in centuries.

encouraging. Mrs. Young launched the plans for the women's part of the Continuation Campaign in a way that made them seem workable. Tuesday noon the women met for luncheon. Around the tables the annual business meeting was held, with the election of officers. Short addresses were given by Miss Lavinia Mead, of Japan and Mrs. Geo. W. Coleman of Boston. A brief account was given of the celebration in Miss Mead's honor on the completion of her thirty years' work in Japan, by former pupils, missionaries and government officials. A purse of $250 was presented, and a long testimonial from the government in appreciation of her services to the Japanese.

Rev. A. J. Hansen, state director of religious education and young people's work, gave the best report of this work ever given in our convention. He reported advance in attendance and baptisms in Sunday school, increase in Vacation Bible Schools, and in Teacher Training.

The young people, led by their state president, Mr. Richard Holland, held their business meeting and presented goals and programs. The B. Y. P. U. banquet had a capacity attendance.

Dr. J. A. Earl of St. Paul, said that THE BAPTIST was the most quoted by other papers of any religious paper, and that Missions was conceded to be the best missionary magazine. Aside from their value because they are both the property of the denomination, he urged their loyal support. The editor of the North Star, our state bulletin, conducted a lively discussion as to its value, what its contents should be, how we might contribute to it, and increase its subscriptions. It was voted unanimously to continue it and support it.

It is always an interesting session when new preachers, foreign-speaking preachers, and special workers are introduced. Four new preachers and two returned, spoke briefly and hopefully. Mr. Herban reported his Slovak church growing in members and said the power behind the throne in Czecho-Slovakia is a Baptist. The Bohemian church at New Prague reported eleven baptisms. It is growing into an English work. Others spoke for the Swedes, Norwegians, Danes, and Finns.

The church at Laporte, meaning "open door" is true to its name. It has held meetings in barns, and a potato warehouse. It has increased from forty-five to seventy-five members. A new church is needed, and with the best crop a failure, many have pledged two weeks of work and lumber for it. As the reduced budget for state missions, necessitates the reduction of working force, the work of the Rev. G. M. Caldwell, missionary pastor, is to be discontinued in Southern Minnesota. Rev. R. E. Cody, missionary for Northern Minnesota says it is a great open field for missionary work. Rev. W. G. Clark painted an impressive picture of his work in the hospitals of Rochester, Minn.

Rev. E. H. Rasmussen was elected secretary of the convention for one year in place of Dr. Pope. Mr. F. K. Pratt was elected president for the eleventh time.

The committee on resolutions recognized the courtesy of the Owatonna Press in their unusually full reports of the meetings. The committee of visitors to schools emphasized the spiritual atmosphere and work in Pillsbury Academy, Carleton College and Bethel Institute. Dr. Norman B. Henderson gave an interesting account of the work being done by University

Church for the students, future plans, and made a plea for further plans for financing the church.

The missionary cause was ably represented. Rev. S. E. Moon of Kempele, Congo, made an earnest plea that the missionary and his theology be judged by his efficiency and sacrifice. Miss Mead of Osaka, Japan, spoke of the Woman's Bible Training School of which she has so long been principal. Mrs. Geo. Coleman of Boston, president of the W. A. B. H. M. S. and representing the Foreign Society and the Board of Promotion gave a strong address on women and the denomination.

One of the mountain peaks of the convention was the clarion call of Dr. J. C. Robbins that America accept and live up to the world responsibility which has been thrust upon her by a series of historical events, beginning with the Spanish War. It is a challenge to our denomination to think in terms of the whole world, to have a new loyalty to the Christian Church and a new dedication to Christ.

Among the inspirational speakers were Prof. David Bryn-Jones of Carleton College and Rev. R. A. Jensen of Mankato who gave stirring messages. Rev. Mari Sanborn, of Minneapolis, president of the B. Y. P. U. of A., in the annual sermon, appealed to the ministers to make a vision of Christ their preeminent theme.

Dr. A. T. Fowler, of New York, for half hour each morning led in a devotional service, tender and uplifting.

Dr. C. A. Barbour of Rochester gave two great addresses. He spoke on the consequences of the Lordship of Christ in the function of the church. The supreme function of the church is "Ye shall be my witnesses."

On Wednesday evening the convention banquet was held in Jeffs dining-hall, of Pillsbury Academy. Two hundred and forty-two sat down to such a repast a Mrs. Price knows how to serve, and were waited upon by the ladies of the faculty.

"Rush a Ship to Russia"

Another "Ship of Fellowship" is scheduled to sail from New York for Europe, late in November. The following supplies are most urgently needed:

Suits and overcoats
Socks, sweaters, stockings
Blankets, shawls, mufflers
Skirts and warm dresses
Underwear of all sizes
Quantities of unbleached cotton cloth with needles, thread and buttons for making underwear in Russia.

The time is short and quick action is necessary. You who had a part in the "Ship of Fellowship" last year will be glad to respond again. You who had no part last year—do not neglect this second opportunity.

SHIPPING INSTRUCTIONS

File these for reference when your package is ready.

1. Address, American Baptist European Relief Warehouse, care of Abercrombie Corporation, 108 Dobbin Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
2. All articles must be clean, serviceable and in good condition. Anything in bad condition will be discarded. The high quality of goods sent last year occasioned favorable comment. A similar quality is desired this year.
3. Ship prepaid by parcel post or express. Owing to freight congestion on the railroads it is not advisable to ship by freight.
4. Pack garments in well secured burlap or cloth bags securely sewed. A heavy box or barrel adds considerably to the expense of postage or express.
5. All packages must be mailed or delivered to express company not later than November 10. Anything shipped after that date may reach the warehouse too late.
6. A shipping tag has been mailed to every pastor. Additional tags may be obtained from state convention offices.

Inasmuch as the autumn months are known as the Home Mission Period in our Sunday schools culminating with the Christmas offering it is earnestly desired that any response to this appeal on behalf of Russia, shall not occasion a diminution of interest in the work and support of either of the Home Mission Societies or in the regular activities of the White Cross Circles.

The Glory of The Trenches

WE were too proud to live for years
When our poor death could dry those tears

Of little children yet unborn
It scarcely mattered that at morn,
When manhood's hope was at its height,
We stopped a bullet in mid-flight.
It did not trouble us to lie
Forgotten 'neath the forgetting sky.
So long Sleep was our only cure
That when Death piped of rest made sure
We cast our fleshly crutches down,
Laughing like boys in Hamelin Town,
And this we did while loving life,
Yet loving more than home or wife
The kindness of a world set free
For countless children yet to be.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. W. D. Holt, passed the tenth anniversary of his ministry at the Emmanuel Church, Chicago, Oct. 1.

The "Baptist Record" of Iowa published a special Iowa Baptist Convention number fully illustrated and attractive in form and material. Prof. J. A. Lapham is giving the Baptists of Iowa a good state paper.

Exclusive of duplications, the total enrollment of the University of Chicago for the present term is 3372 men, 2960 women, a grand total of 6332, a gain of 346 over the corresponding date a year ago. Of the whole number enrolled 1594 are graduate students.

Dr. J. T. Henderson, Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Baptist Convention, states that there is an increasing number of business and professional men and farmers as well who are bequeathing at least a tenth of their estates to religious causes. We believe, although we have no facts in hand, that this practical recognition of stewardship is becoming general.

The American Labor Party which was formed at a convention held in New York City in midsummer, is being developed along the lines of the British labor party. In the November elections the new party will function only in New York state and city. In its present form the party brings about a fusion of a number of the labor groups in the state. It is the purpose to extend the party following the British tactics. It elected labor representatives to form a distinct labor group or bloc.

The Chicago Juvenile Court, the oldest and one of the largest courts of its kind in the United States has dealt with almost 80,000 boys and girls during the twenty-one years of its existence. These wards of the court have been dealt with not as criminals but as children in need of protection and care. Before the enactment of the Illinois Juvenile Court Law, children who had violated laws were dealt with exactly as adult persons charged with crime with respect to arrest, detention and trial. There are ninety members of the court's staff appointed by the judge on the basis of competitive examination. The children are given a rigid physical and, if necessary, psychological examination.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, acting in behalf of the thirty constituent bodies held a great mass meeting in New York Sunday afternoon, September 24. The speakers were Dr. Robert E. Speer, Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, and Rev. James L. Barton. Dr. Speer in announcing the purpose of the meeting said: "We are not here to feed the fires of hatred against the Turk, nor to propose war, nor to urge our government to take sides on disputed political issues. But we are here to declare our conviction that religious minorities are entitled to protection, to appeal to our nation to accept its inescapable duty in aiding and establishing a righteous peace in the Near East, and to insist that the Armenian people are entitled to some home of their own where they can be safe and able to take care of themselves." Strong resolutions were unanimously adopted and forwarded to the president, the secretary of state and the chairman of the foreign relations committee of the senate.

Dr. John Clifford observed his eighty-sixth birthday anniversary Oct. 16. The western group of churches of the London Baptist Association joined in a celebration of the event in a meeting in the church at Westbourne Park.

The Baptists of Germany have suffered a serious loss in the death of Rev. Gustav Gieselbach, principal of the Baptist College at Hamburg, at the age of fifty-one. He was one of the leaders of work of German Baptists. He became principal in 1914.

Pastor George C. Fetter of the First Church, Ottawa, Ill. is thoroughly convinced that the drama should be restored to the church where it originated. The church is presenting a series of religious pageants and dramas. In order to produce the best effect several hundreds of dollars have been spent in erecting a stage, installing special lighting and in the purchase of scenery and costumes and a beautiful velvet curtain. Last Christmas more than 100 persons took part in the pageant "Peace on Earth" written by the pastor. On Easter "The Resurrection" by Rosamond Kimball was given and at the rally day of the Sunday school they presented "The Rights of the Child" by H. A. Smith. Mr. Fetter feels that

Jesus' Idea of Success

A CHRISTIAN life must tell. By its very nature it must go beyond itself. It must have influence. It must testify and supplement the fact of its existence by making other existences something they could not be without it. The Christian gives more than he asks. Instead of being a mere consumer, he is a contributor. The standard of measurement is not wealth, but service. The fullest Christian experience is simply the fullest life and the brightest light in the world. It inheres in the very nature and genius of the Christian life to be a part of a great cosmic outlook, influence and sympathy. This is clearly set forth in the great typical life of Jesus. The world's idea of success is getting and the desire of the soul is forced from its true course. God is shut out from the soul's satisfaction. As a result there is often social unrest, sorrow, bitterness and disappointment. Jesus' idea of success was giving. "He that loveth his life shall lose it, but he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." When we live that way, we shall approach social equilibrium. This defines our relation to others. The world lives on the principle of exclusiveness, but class consciousness works havoc with the social fabric. Christ says: "Ye are the light of the world," for he created modern democracy. The Christian spirit in democracy is the spirit of obligation transcending the desire to claim our rights. This world is no longer an aggregation of nations. It is one living interrelated body. A Christian is a world citizen. The Christian is the most cosmopolitan being on this planet. Christ has the program for the new humanity in his hand. He seeks each one as his co-worker. He is calling us as a "light in the world."

ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

through these exercises religious truth can be taught and spiritual emotion awakened in a way often more effective than a sermon. The dramatic club also carries its work to the rural communities and towns within reach of Ottawa. More elaborate program has been prepared for the present season.

The gift of a set of chimes to be placed in the tower of Russell Sage Memorial Chapel at Northfield, Minn., is announced by President W. R. Moody. The donor wishes his name withheld. The bells will be set up this fall, it is expected, and will be the only chimes within a radius of thirty or forty miles of Northfield.

The church covenant arranged as a responsive reading is used as a part of the communion service in the First Church, Seattle. The weekly calendar carries a prayer meeting thermometer showing the attendance each week. Another feature is the carefully analyzed statement of the financial needs of the church together with its receipts. Every member of the church can know exactly what its financial obligations are.

When the Women's Foreign Mission Society celebrated the fiftieth anniversary, Miss Prescott prepared a stereopticon lecture to show the origin, growth and present work of the Women's Foreign Society. This lecture is now well adapted to the foreign part of the work (the continuation campaign). There is a charge for rental. Sixty-five colored slides. Order from your nearest depository.

The calendar of the First Church, Rangoon, Burma, carries this interesting note: "The pastor is glad that the Rangoon Turf Club respects our moral principles and devotion to the Gospel. Jesus Christ so much, that they have not even offered us a place! We do need money very badly but not their money! The money of gamblers is stolen from needy wives and suffering children, stolen from foolish husbands and supporters of race track gambling. One who gets something for nothing is a thief! The gambler produces nothing for society except poverty. Therefore, the gambler is a thief!"

The First Church, Nashua, N. H., has completed 100 years of service to its community. For the first eleven years after organization the church had no settled pastor. From 1833 to 1855 Rev. D. Pratt served the church. The pastorate of Rev. W. H. Eaton, which followed covered the period up to 1870. During 100 years the church has had but 16 pastors. Among the more recent have been Rev. J. A. Johnston, Rev. O. White, Rev. Charles L. White, Rev. Melard F. Johnston, Rev. J. B. Gilman and the present pastor, Rev. A. J. Archibald.

Reports of activities were considered and the program for the forthcoming year discussed at a three-day meeting of the committee on social and religious survey held at Lake Mohonk, Oct. 6-8. John Mock, chairman of the committee, presided. Other members of the committee all of whom were present, are Raymond B. Fosdick, treasurer; Ernest D. Burton, recording secretary; James L. Barton, secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions and W. H. P. Faunce, president of Brown University. A number of new publications have come from the press and others are in the process of preparation.

The public library in Seattle, through its librarian has expressed a desire to have THE BAPTIST on its rack another year. "It is widely read" by frequenters of the library we were told. We have no fund to provide public libraries with copies of the denominational weekly so we forwarded the appeal to Dr. A. M. Bailey, the pastor of the First Church. He did the rest—that is he did the next thing—he referred the matter to the young married men's class in the Bible school. They provided the public library with a subscription for one year.

Killam's Kollum

Saved From A Certain Woe

We have been receiving so many letters of praise and commendation that we began to fear the fate of the man of whom all men speak well. Even the Western Recorder and the Word and Way had for some time been unusually gentle in their treatment of us. One of them this week dispels all fear of the particular woe in question. We cover ourselves with dust, no it is smoke, I believe. At any rate we feel safer since we read that editorial.

Editorial Ghouls

Near our old home lived a woman who for long years suffered with an incurable malady. When she died her body was buried just outside the house where it might be protected from grave robbers. There seems however to be no haven for the godly men and women who have been pioneers in the fields of Christian social service. We boil over with indignation at the insidious attacks made upon the dead. We have more respect for ordinary ghouls, than for these editorial grave robbers.

A Perfectly Natural Mistake

"I wrote you that ——— of the ——— church never 'worried' and you changed it to 'married' and left out the state." Thus writes one of our good correspondents. What he says is true. In the first place "worried" and "married" as written by our correspondent looked like one and the same thing. In trying to decide which was the correct interpretation we argued with ourselves thus—If this man was married he would be worried. Since he was not worried he could not have been married. We did leave out the state, and this is our editorial alibi.

Now In Danger of Anti-drug Act

"I like Killam's Kollum. It acts as an opiate after the evening sermon on Sunday night. I go home restless and nervous from the evening services, have my family devotions, tie a string to the electric light in my bedroom, climb into bed, read the Kollum and presto! I have enough wakefulness left to pull the string and then I'm asleep."—Rev. J. T. Finnan, Mt. Sterling, Ill. In this world things so often go by opposites. For some of us the Sunday night sermon has the same effect as the after-sermon influence of the Kollum. The layman has this disadvantage. He cannot pull the string and sleep on. Going out into the fresh air tends thoroughly to awake him. Well, it is refreshing to know that both pastor and people get needed rest.

Baptist Progress in Esthonia

BY MARTIN SCHMIDT

DURING more than nine hundred years, Russians, Germans, Danes, Swedes, Poles, and Lithuanians, quarreling with one another, have been anxious to possess the beautiful Baltic countries: Finland, Esthonia, Livonia and Courland. These countries have recently been separated from Russia and are formed into three Republics: Finland, Esthonia and Latvia. Finns, Esthonians and Letts have inhabited the Baltic shores probably over two thousand years. Baptists began a wonderful mission work among these people sixty years ago. The membership of New Testament churches is now about 20,000.

Esthonia, situated between Finland and Latvia, with the prominent port of Reval, is known in the commercial world especially by the transit trade with Russia. Esthonian citizens enjoy full political and religious freedom. There is no privileged or state church. Persecutions by the Orthodox and sometimes by the Lutheran church have ceased. Our Baptist churches have now possibilities of preaching the story of Jesus Christ and of organizing New Testament churches over all the country.

During the last ten months the Lord has sent Esthonia a mighty revival. More than one thousand persons have been converted and baptized. Especially in the island of Dago, the Holy Spirit has caused a glorious work. Hundreds of village schoolboys and girls with their tutors, young men and women, old fishermen who in former times lived a terribly sinful life, have become humble and true followers of Jesus Christ. In villages, where in past days were drunkenness, immorality and other evils, the people are hearing with eagerness the message of everlasting life and singing the songs of their Redeemer and his love. In all churches is burning a new heavenly fire and enthusiasm.

After receiving national and political freedom the population of Esthonia is seeking now a free faith. The people tell at our meetings that the state religion did not satisfy the deepest desires of their souls, because the churches, being in close connection with the political and national ideas of their oppressors, have been largely political and ceremonial institutions. Now our pastors and evangelists offer to the Esthonians the non-political religion of Jesus Christ, the real religion of the kingdom of God. The hearers are exceedingly happy and thankful to get the pure New Testament faith.

Our churches have to overcome many difficulties. The newly converted and baptized members have to go through persecutions by their relatives and in society. Besides, there are very few church buildings and the existing buildings are too small and primitive. Because the majority of church members are poor they cannot pay their pastors and evangelists sufficient salary. Through Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke's indefatigable efforts as Baptist commissioner for Europe, the churches have received some means to raise the salary of the pastors. For this generous help Christ's churches in this country will forever thank their fellow-Christians in England, Canada and America.

Another requirement is a well-educated ministry. Through the newly opened theological seminary at Kegel near Reval, we hope to have in a few years a group of well-trained leaders and pastors. The opening of this institute is the most prominent fact in the whole history of New Testament churches in this country. God knows our ardent and hearty thanks for this turning-point in our mission history. Our churches will never forget to thank the Baptists, especially in the above-named nations, for the great and happy idea of supporting in Esthonia a seminary for Baptist pastors and evangelists. The seminary began its work on February 1, of this year with sixteen students.

Looking back on these blessed months our hearts are moved by deep thankfulness to God and to our noble brotherhood in England and America. On June 1, there were examinations and a closing festival accompanied by speeches, songs and music. During the vacations the students were spread over all the country doing the Lord's work in towns and villages. In August we came together again, to tell great things of God's blessing during the summer days, with strengthened health and new experiences.

As a second important means of extending Christ's kingdom, we hope to arrange a publication house for the printing of religious books, periodicals, tracts, and so on. This country, as all countries of the world, is overflowed by a corrupting literature. Sin is raising its head in more insolent forms than ever before. Therefore we are exceedingly anxious to send over the country a flood of religious literature hoping to check the degrading influences.

May God help us and our dear English, Canadian and American friends to achieve all these aims to the glory of his holy name!

Special Temporary Provision for Ministers Receiving Minimum Salaries

Several months ago a gift was made to The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board for the purpose of providing a reduction in the dues for the first year of membership in the Retiring Pension Fund of ministers whose salaries were $1,500 or less. The quick response soon exhausted this gift.

Now it is possible for the board to make another temporary offer. For the purpose of assisting ministers who are receiving less than $1,500 per year to pay their dues for the first year of membership (amounting to 6 per cent of the annual salary) a limited sum of money is available from which grants can be made for this purpose until Jan. 31, 1923, unless the amount available is exhausted prior to that date. The conditions of this grant are as follows:

Annual salary below $1050, the board will provide 65 per cent of the first year's dues; $1050 to $1100, 60 per cent; $1100 to $1150, 55 per cent; $1150 to $1200, 50 per cent; $1200 to $1250, 45 per cent; $1250 to $1500, 40 per cent.

For example: A minister whose salary is $1225 annually and who normally would have to pay for his first year's dues 6 per cent, namely $73.50, may, if he applies for a grant, receive a credit of 45 per cent of $73.50 or $33.07 toward his first year's dues, provided he remits the balance, viz. $40.43 with his application.

All applications for membership in the Retiring Pension Fund in order to receive the advantage of this offer must be received by the board prior to Jan. 31, 1923, and must in each case be accompanied by a remittance for the balance of the entire first year's dues, less the percentage indicated in the above table.

All applications will be considered in the order in which they are received.

The fund is limited. The offer closes on Jan. 31, 1923, in any event.

Your application should be filed at once. All applications should be forwarded to E. T. Tomlinson, executive secretary, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.

(Editor's Note—Here is an opportunity for the church to assume its pastor's share. Last year many churches paid their pastor's dues as a Christmas present.)

Mark Sanborn Called to First Church, Detroit

Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, pastor of the Judson Memorial Church of Minneapolis has accepted the call of the First Church, Detroit, and will begin his ministry in that city Nov. 12. During his six years in Minneapolis, 465 new members have been added to the church and a very strong and well organized Sunday school has been developed. The First Church in Detroit offers an unusual opportunity. There is a membership of nearly 1,500 and its present building is located in one of the most substantial sections of that rapidly growing city. Mr. and Mrs. Sanborn were Michigan born. Mr. Sanborn is a graduate of Kalamazoo College. At St. Paul he was elected president of the B. Y. P. U. of A.

Evangelist C. E. Hillis is holding series of evangelistic meetings with the church at Fairfield, Iowa. Rev. W. C. Monroe, pastor. His next campaign will be at First Church, Clinton, Ill.

Dr. H. O. Rowlands of Oak Park, Ill. has closed nearly a year's ministry with the First Church, Carbondale. The last week Evangelist McMinn assisted in revival meetings which were rich in results. Over sixty united with the church.

On Oct. 22 occurred the death of Dr. Lyman Abbott, editor-in-chief of Outlook, with which he had been associated nearly forty years, clergyman, lawyer, author and successor to Henry War Beecher as pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, from 1890 until 1899. Dr. Abbott would have been 87 years the coming December. Four sons and two daughters were with him when the end came. Memorial services were held October 31.

During the annual business sessions of the Will Carleton Memorial Association held on Saturday, Oct. 21, in Alpha Kappa Phi literary society hall, Hillsdale College fittingly observed the birthday of the well-known poet, who graduated from the college in 1869, by a special chapel service. Miss Enid Eichhorn, head of the department of speech arts, read "Over the Hill to the Poor House," and two of her dramatic art students dramatized the poem "Betsy and I Are Out."

America Will Not Forget

AMERICA has not forgotten. Four years ago the world was in a frenzy of rejoicing over the news of the signing of the Armistice. It has been a long and sorrowful four years for the world. A large portion of the earth has found it impossible to regain its balance so that it can walk alone. Millions have died of starvation and few scenes of the war period surpassed in suffering, brutality and horror those accompanying the sacking and burning of Smyrna. The world is still a war-cursed world; still other millions of innocent sufferers must die before help can come. America will not forget her present opportunity.

The purpose, however, in writing this page is to call attention to quite another matter. We find ourselves turning to the question of America's care for those of her soldier dead who fell in France. There has been frequent criticism of the government in the matter of the care of the American cemeteries in France. The fact that many thousands of dead have been returned to this country for burial and that other thousands still remain on foreign soil has led to a feeling of uncertainty about the whole situation.

In view of this unrest the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America sent a special commission to visit the burial places of American soldiers and their report has been received. The commission was made up of Chas. F. McFarland, general secretary of the council, Chas. E. Jefferson, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, and Chauncey W. Goodrich. These men visited the cemeteries at Belleau Wood, Fere-en-Tardenois, Suresnes, St. Mihiel and Bony and another representative of the council visited Romangne.

Their report is in striking contrast to the sporadic criticism which has caused concern to the friends of the dead. The commission desires to express the warmest commendation of the work of the American graves registration service in Paris and of Col. H. F. Ethers and his associates in charge of it. It is evident that the relatives and friends of our boys who fell in France are receiving courteous and painstaking attention and that they are provided with adequate facilities for visiting the graves of their loved ones. The cemeteries, it is reported, are all beautifully located and in most cases are situated on an eminence which makes them visible at a long distance. Extensive plans for the development and beautifying of the grounds are being carried out. Why not allow the bodies of these boys to lie together in the soil they died to save? Having fought together, why should they not be together in the chambers of death with the American flag upon a staff in the center of each cemetery flying over their graves? The commission heartily recommends that Americans be associated in the permanent care of the cemeteries as representing both the churches and the nation, and that the Federal Council arrange with its representatives in France to have Memorial Day services under the auspices of the council in behalf of the American churches and people held in all these cemeteries or as many as possible. It also proposes to arrange for the churches at home to join in this special remembrance on each Memorial Day.

America and the world will not forget what these boys, and millions like them, did for the world. It is most fitting that their resting places should receive every attention at the hands of the government, but our most telling expression of gratitude will be found in continued service and sacrifice in behalf of the living who still need our help.

Direct Drive Transmission

THERE is little new about machinery. We should be very careful how we boastfully speak about this marvelous age of mechanical devices. God has been using his machinery for thousands and thousands of years and it is so far superior to ours that we forget that it is built on the principles of stress and strain, velocity, balance, centrifugal force and the coefficient of expansion just like our clumsy devices. God's machinery is so perfect that it runs on noiselessly and with no fear of a breakdown. We have heard a great printing press at work—the rattle is terrific as it turns out the leaves of a book. How quiet the machinery of an oak tree is as it makes the leaves for the adornment of the forest. Let us not despise machinery then. God has always depended upon his great law of mechanics and dynamics, and hydraulics—some few of which we have discovered and are feebly utilizing to manifest his power and love. And he expects us to do the same in our churches. It is true that our machinery is as noisy with differing opinions and unmet obligations and neglected responsibilities as is the printing-press, but with all its rattle of humanity our machinery is necessary. In the careful organization of our churches we are following God's plan. Let us not despise machinery.

A woman, a layman, a young person and a pastor, these four, and no more, with a vision of the world's need and a respect for kingdom organization can make any church a telling force in the denominational program. We do not counsel autocracy for a moment, we are speaking simply of minimums. There are parts of every engine that are indispensable, the fly-wheel, the governor, the safety valve and the piston. No church organization will function rewardingly with the larger engineering of the Board of Promotion without these four essential units of consecrated humanity—a woman, a layman, a young person and a pastor.

And what have they to do? They have to see that the stewardship of their church is built upon a scriptural basis and that when money is spoken of in the pulpit it has the sordid ring of barter and trade removed from it. They have to see that an annual every-member canvass is made in their church in such a way that it is educative, inspiring and thorough-going. They have to help people strike a balance in their own mind as to the ratio of their gifts to the support of the local church and the advancement of the kingdom. They have to demonstrate the wisdom of the double treasurership and in all these processes build within the church a great engine of givers, treasurers, secretaries, and committees—functioning by campaigns, duplex envelopes, regular statements, treasurers' reports and unceasing prayer.

Such an engine does not run for its own sake. No engine ever does. It is belted on to a task. It is geared with a purpose. First of all, if the plans of the General Board of Promotion are to carry this year, each local church must be geared on to the promotion machinery of the association. There is no power resident in the association except what it gets from the local church. A strong church belted on to its association is a strong church most effectively helping its weak neighbors. In the missionary plans of every church there should be provision for strong representation in the local association. And in each association there should be chosen a woman, a layman, a young person and a pastor who should represent that association in the still larger interests of the kingdom.

For the drive of the local church should be strong enough to transmit power from the association to the state convention. There, too, the familiar machinery geared into the work of the women, the laymen, and the young people under trained pastoral leadership, should be in operation.

The state conventions are belted directly to our General Board of Promotion. The Administrative Committee of that board this year will appoint a committee of four—composed of a woman who shall be named by the Continuation Campaign Committee of the two women's boards, a representative of the general laymen's committee, a representative of the young people's organization and a pastor to be selected by the Administrative Committee itself. The work of this committee will be to correlate the plans and secure administrative action of the four groups in which the power resides in every church.

To reduce the friction to a minimum, to secure the added power of a direct drive, let every church, great and small, rich and poor, in the Northern Convention, then build its promotion machinery, the machinery that shall educate, inspire, organize and develop the stewardship of its people—let it build about a woman interested in the great Continuation Campaign, and about a man, vitally identified with the Laymen's Council, and about a young person, full of the undimmed vision and resistless enthusiasm of youth, and about its pastor, who like his Master is burdened with the needs of all the world. Call these four if you will the missionary committee of the church—or call them the stewardship group, or the promotion board. Let them study to build their church into a great missionary force. Let them probe deep. If they recommend changing the by-laws in order to reach their goals, give them heed. If they counsel the abandonment of traditions that seem sacred, do not brush them hastily aside. They are designing Machinery for God.

Boy Scouts and the Churches

OF all the recent movements in the interest of boys of the early teens the Boy Scout movement has been the most popular. The scout principles are worthy. The out-of-door activities have been one of its most helpful and attractive features. That our churches as well as other community institutions are interested is evidenced by the fact that for years at the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention the scouts leaders have been recognized on the program or in the conferences of our annual gathering.

There has, however, been some serious misgiving concerning certain tendencies in the movement. The week-end and Sunday hikes have seriously interfered with the church and Sunday-school attendance of many of the boys. Of course the length to which these diversions have been carried has depended very largely upon the type of leadership in charge in the local communities.

Pastors and church workers will be more than interested in the resolution which was adopted by the twelfth annual meeting of the national council of the Boy Scouts of America. "Be it resolved—That the National Council record its disapproval of programs for week-end hikes or camps which preclude the attendance of scouts from religious services, or which cause loss of credits for the individual or patrol or troop, if the scout elects to remain at home to attend church."

This action will go a long way toward disarming criticism in certain quarters and will make it possible for the churches to avail themselves of the genuine help which the movement can give.

Luke's Portrait of the Christ

OUR Sunday schools are studying a book today that Renan himself calls the most beautiful book ever written, and in some respects the most engaging. Luke gives us the full-face figure of Jesus, looking manward. It is a beautiful story and beautifully told; it should have effects in the lives of those to whom it is told.

It ought to be a good day for the poor and for the broken-hearted, and are they not in our midst? For the aspect of Jesus presented here is, as intimated in Luke 4:18, "He hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted."

It is this human and we may say humane side that appeals to us in the flesh. "I drew them," says Hosea "with the cords of a man." Hence those glimpses peculiar to Luke. The gentle, human lines thrown about the man fallen among thieves, the prodigal in the far country, the poor publican and the rich Zacchaeus, both humbly and savingly penitent—and the dying thief. Truly in these months of New Testament Bible study the loving, tender Son of man is walking in our way of earth, seeking "to save that which is lost." It ought to be a time effective everywhere in helping and in soul winning. May we not look for great evangelism and great gatherings into our churches? Dr. A. J. Gordon puts it well: "Jesus became the Son of man that we might become the sons of God."

Some Frank Words With Texas Baptists

DR. GEORGE W. TRUETT in the issue of the Baptist Standard for Oct. 19 writes at length on the problems and perplexities of Texas Baptists. The opening paragraph follows:

"Texas Baptists need to look frankly and earnestly at the situation now confronting them.

"What is that situation? The situation is that it is important beyond all words that their present campaign, called the 'Catch-Up Campaign,' shall be carried to a triumphant culmination. And the situation further is that, shocking as is the very thought, yet it must be apparent to every observant and well-informed Baptist in Texas that sinister and strenuous efforts are now being made to divert the attention of our Baptist people from the main things of the campaign, and, if possible, to obstruct and defeat the success of the campaign. The urgent and immeasurable importance of the campaign on the one hand and the palpable efforts that are being made to chill and cheapen and obstruct the campaign on the other hand are the two facts that stand out plainly in the situation now confronting Texas Baptists."

Why not delete the word Texas and let this great Baptist leader speak to all of us? One must do more than cross an imaginary line to change either the nature or problems of Baptists.

So Hungry They Can't Think Straight

THE people of Europe can't think straight. They are starving. That is what is wrong with the world. It is sheer hard-heartedness to criticize a starving man because he is not calmly rational.

"The problems of Europe are fundamentally economic. Before political, physical and even moral conditions can improve they must be solved. They can be worked out only with the help of America. While America remains undecided conditions are rapidly growing worse. Europe will crash unless America acts soon."

This statement was made by Dr. Charles S. MacFarland, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, upon returning from an extended tour of Europe, in answer to the questions: "How do the European peoples feel towards us?" and "What can America do?" Answering the second question first, he said:

"America should do one of two things:

"First, offer to sit down with the European nations and formulate a plan for economic reconstruction, or

"Second, make its own proposal.

"If the American people were informed by other than dischievous propaganda they would arise and direct our government to act with good will towards the nations overseas, and light would break on darkened Europe.

"How do the European peoples feel towards us?" is the question asked. Their feeling is one of mingled disappointment that has not reached disillusionment, and hope and faith that still persist.

"They feel that we have left the field of battle without stopping to bury the dead or to help repair the devastation made by our own artillery. Recognition for our private, philanthropic help is not overlooked and still gives impulses to prayers of gratitude. No rancor is manifested, just disappointment, sometimes, however, almost to despair.

"The peoples of Europe are doing the best they can, toiling to rebuild even when they have to seek the straw to make their bricks. One has only to visit Ypres, Dixmude, St. Quentin, Rheims and multitudes of other cities to bear witness to the marvelous recuperative power of our brethren in Europe. One has only to witness the efforts of our Austrian brothers, to have his heart stirred to the depths, or deal in German money to have his sympathies aroused for those men and women in the nation who are sincerely seeking to regain for that people a moral standing in the world.

"There are expressions of sectional and racial bitterness, there are violent discussions between representatives of governments, but these are not the fundamental difficulties. The problem is fundamentally economic."

Prohibition on the High Seas

IT is of unusual interest to study the reactions of our European friends to the recent ruling of the attorney general of the United States in the matter of prohibition in territorial waters. In the Baptist Times and Freeman of London for Oct. 13 we find the following editorial bearing upon the question:

"When Dr. Landrum came over to this country in July to attend the meeting of the executive committee of the Baptist World Alliance, he called public attention in the American Baptist press to the fact that prohibition ceased to be effective on American liners as soon as they crossed the three-mile limit. Directly they reached the open seas, he said, the bar was opened and continued open all the way across the Atlantic and until the vessels re-entered American territorial waters on their return. Urged by public opinion voiced by the dry members of the legislature, President Harding has taken swift and drastic action to put an end to this evasion of the law. He has instructed the secretary of the treasury that it is illegal for any vessels, whether American or foreign, not merely to sell, but even to possess liquor within American waters. This means that all ships on reaching the three-mile limit will be searched by American officials, and any liquor found on board will be confiscated and destroyed.

"This ruling creates an extraordinary situation. The 'right of search' is an old subject of contention between America and ourselves, and on one historic occasion led to war between us. It is not likely to lead to any such difficulties now, for it is clearly within the right of the American government to enforce obedience to its own laws in its own territories. It may, however, have a curious effect on the shipping trade by diverting the great trade route from New York to Canadian ports."

An Armistice Day Message

Thinking people expected a sad aftermath from the World War, but where is the prophet who ever dreamed of the tangled, tragic situation now confronting us?

By JAMES A. FRANCIS

WE have certainly come to a serious and awful hour in world history. Thinking people everywhere expected a sad aftermath from the World War, but where is the prophet who ever dreamed of the tangled, tragic situation now confronting us? The suffering in these years has exceeded in bitterness the suffering during the war period. Then, there was at least the sustaining power of a great heroism. Now, it is a slow crucifixion. Then, men stood up expecting a sudden blow. Now, it is like the long drawn agony of being impaled on a barbed wire fence.

I should like to take with you, my friends, one steady look at three things. First, the world situation. Second, our own great missionary enterprises. Third, our own life at the home base.

United Hates of Europe

The average American is serenely unconscious, or nearly so, of the fearful conditions obtaining across the sea. We came out of the war stronger than ever. Few of us ever went without a meal on its account. Whereas a recent American traveler, an able and faithful man, who crossed Europe from the west coast of Ireland to Russia, including a detour through Hungary, said he could only call it the "United hates of Europe." The same traveler was the first American, after the war, to cross Asia Minor from Mesopotamia to Constantinople. He said he travelled for weeks "through homeless misery and mental hate" where the subject peoples had but one gleam of hope and that, the mercy of the United States.

Russia, to the north, huge and chaotic, has replaced czarism with an impossible form of government forced on millions with fire and sword. Austria is reduced to straits of misery indescribable. Germany is avoiding the payment of reparations by purposely depreciating the value of her own mark. France is afraid to withdraw her armies from the Rhine. India is seething like a pot. In the midst of all this, we are treated to the spectacle of the Turk practically dictating terms to the late allies of Western Europe, and this because of their lack of union. Whole Christian populations have been mercilessly slaughtered, sometimes in most obscene fashion, with arms supplied to the Turk by France and Italy. The Near East part of the Treaty of Versailles has been battered to pieces. The Turk comes back into Europe and even the British Lion stands hesitant, lest trouble at the Dardanelles might echo among the seventy million Moslems of India. The wail of 1920 has turned in 1922 into a bitter curse, and with many peoples "Hope for a season bids the world farewell."

Ashes Do Not Burn

Indeed, about all that prevents Europe from bursting again into war is that ashes do not burn readily. Much as they hate each other, they are still more sick of war.

There is one big piece of international machinery in existence for the prevention of future wars and for the creation of a right understanding between nations, and this is the league of nations. Four-fifths of the human race have signed up in this great association. It is a going concern. It has to its credit in two years and a half the prevention of four possible and seemingly imminent wars. Its secretariat, composed of 300 experts, has gathered a body of information concerning nations and their relations, such as was never gotten together before, and all this is at the disposal of all the nations of the world, irrespective of whether they are in the league or not. In laying the foundations of understanding which leads to permanent peace, it has done more in thirty months than was done in a century before. The saddest reflection for us is that America is still outside, and that the average American imagines that the league is a negligible factor in world history.

We have as our company on the outside, in Asia, Afghanistan and Turkey; in Africa, Abyssinia; in Europe, Russia, Germany, Hungary and Iceland, and in the western world, Ecuador and Mexico. Do we really like our company? The burning question before America is not whether our former president should or should not have gone to Paris; not whether he was or was not a good picker of men; not whether the peace with Germany should or should not have been bound up with the covenant of the league. These things are history. The issue is a living, present one—Should America be in the league? The American people, properly informed, would answer unhesitatingly, "Yes, and God speed the day."

Our holding aloof has been, to a great degree, responsible for the tragedy of Armenia. Like the priest and Levite, we have "passed by on the other side" while the oldest Christian nation in the world has been slaughtered, with a fury that would surpass the ferocity of the dark ages.

The Sin of the Nation

It is true that by our doles we have kept alive many who would otherwise have perished. This was the action of the individual American, but the nation as a nation has been guilty of the ghastliest sin of omission of modern times. A strong stand on the part of the United States would probably, without the firing of a single shot, have saved between one and two million people in the Near East. Does God

The Poppies

By MARION MALETTE THORNTON

NEAR Flanders fields where poppies grew,

The brave young widows wear their rue;

With tragic eyes and patient smile
They fashion poppies all the while.

Ah, yes, they mean much over there,
The poppies that today we wear!
A world abloom with poppies red—
It means the children's daily bread.

The blood our boys in Flanders shed
Was free and bright and poppy red,
Like poppies red their courage gay;
They laughed—and gave their lives away.

And we today cannot forget
Those poppy fields with crosses set.
Forever on our hearts we wear
The sacred memories gathered there.

bring nations to his bar as well as individuals? If so, what will the long processes of history have to say of great, free, strong, rich America for all this? Is there no way yet of arousing the conscience of America so that enough pressure will be brought to bear upon Washington to secure action? If we allow the balance of the Armenian race to be wiped out, as seems inevitable at present, how can we even have the face to send missionaries to the heathen world?

*'Some great cause God's new Messiah
Brings to each the bloom or blight;
Parts the goats upon the left hand
And the sheep upon the right.
And the choice goes on forever,
Between that darkness and that light.'*

America's hour of opportunity is going, but it is not yet gone. There is still time, not to retrieve the past, but to save the present and the future. When we hesitated on the brink of duty concerning the war, our own Mr. Choate, almost with his last breath, cried, "America, wake up!" Today, a mightier voice is calling to the Christian chivalry of America on behalf of those who can not defend themselves.

The Reasons for Interference

The reasons for interference on behalf of Belgium the day we entered the war were not as strong as the reasons for interference now. We discovered then that in the tragedy of a world war, America could not be exempt. We are discovering now, that so slowly, that in the tragedy of a world collapse in peace, America can not be exempt. The lesson of the solidarity of the human race is being written into the consciousness of men as with letters of fire. Upon the upward pathway, no nation can leave its weaker fellow behind. Our race is one—one in origin; one in the redeeming purpose of Christ, one in development; one in destiny.

Europe owes us eleven billions of dollars. Shall we collect? There are two answers. The first is, the war was our war from the beginning though we were a long time mending it out. This money advanced to those who afterwards became our allies was largely our part in the war before we entered the war. It was money advanced while these nations fought our fight and waited for us to come in. . . . The second, the collection of this amount from some of these nations is an impossibility and great, rich America standing over her prostrate and well-nigh bankrupt allies and demanding her "pound of flesh" is a sight to edify the world. Why not take up the suggestion made by Doctor John H. Finley, that the debt be funded at a low rate of interest, say 5 per cent, that the interest be paid regularly and instead of being sent to America, be used for the education of the future citizens of those

The Silent March

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

*WHEN the march begins in the morning
And the heart and the foot are light,
When the flags are all a-flutter
And the world is gay and bright,*

*When the bugles lead the column
And the drums are proud in the van,
It's shoulder to shoulder, forward, march!
Ah! let him lag who can!*

*For it's easy to march to music
With your comrades all in line,
And you don't get tired, you feel inspired,
And life is a draught divine.*

*When the march drags on at evening,
And the color-bearer's gone,
When the merry strains are silent
That piped so brave in the dawn,*

*When you miss the dear old fellows
Who started out with you,
When it's stubborn and sturdy, forward, march!
Though the ragged lines are few;*

*Then it's hard to march in silence,
And the road has lonesome grown,
And life is a bitter cup to drink;
But the soldier must not moan.*

*And this is the task before us,
A task we may never shirk;
In the gay time and the sorrowful time
We must march and do our work.*

*We must march when the music cheers us,
March when the strains are dumb,
Plucky and valiant forward, march!
And smile, whatever may come.*

*For, whether life's hard or easy,
The strong man keeps the pace,
For the desolate march and the silent,
The strong soul finds the grace.*

lands, with the understanding that the principal sum will never be asked. This would be to repeat, on a world scale, the diplomacy we practiced with China after the Boxer uprising, which single piece of dealing did more to create good feeling around the Pacific than all the navies that ever floated on its bosom. Europe would not forget such a piece of dealing in a thousand years. It would set a new pace in the diplomacy of the western world. Shall we recognize the hour of our visitation?

The Story of the Year

A glance, now, at our own denominational missionary enterprises throughout the world. The last year has told a strange story. Our missionary treasuries, from certain well-known causes, have sagged very low, but during this same year in our spiritual work in all lands, God has "opened the windows of heaven" without waiting for us to "bring all the tithes into the storehouse." He has challenged us by his grace to meet him on the higher levels. With appropriations cut, with missionaries at home that can not be sent for lack of funds, with promised equipment delayed, we have welcomed this year 12,400 newly baptized converts. Where is the Baptist who can not interpret such a message from God himself?

We need in our work the three things for which the Master prayed on the last night of his life, and so far as I can see, these are our sole needs. First, unity; second, purity; third, consecration like that which he manifested when he came to be our Savior.

Turning for a moment from these issues which reach across the world to ourselves, we naturally ask, what kind of people ought we to be to fit our times? God has matched us with a tremendous hour, tremendous both in its difficulty and opportunity. "What manner of person ought we to be?" There is but one kind of man or woman (our denomination is just made up of individuals) who is fit to match such an hour and that is a 100 per cent Christian. The call of God through the history of our time is calm, silent, solemn, inexorable, inescapable, like God himself. We are confronted with the awful majesty of his grace. It calls for the deepest kind of self-sacrifice and the highest and most sustained effort to "Win for the Lamb that was slain the reward of his sufferings." Shall we disappoint God?

A Graduate in a Rural District

By W. J. HUNTER, JR., A Student in Benedict College

IN THE upper section of the state of South Carolina, in Darlington County, there is a little district known as Cherry Grove, which had a considerable amount of trouble both in getting money and a teacher for a school.

Wanted—A Teacher

Soon after the farmers had come to the full sense of their duty to their race and to their children in the matter of education, the first problem to come to their minds was, where could they find a teacher? Now that they had arranged for enough money to finance the school for two months only, they wondered who could teach during two months.

Their anxiety, however, was very early overcome by the application for the position by a former slave girl. She had been favored by her mistress who had given her lessons in reading and writing, and perhaps a little spelling and arithmetic. She was considered by her associates to be very highly educated.

The news of such an instructor spread like wildfire when the wind is raging. It was to the villagers and the children as a sip of cool spring water would be to a thirsty vaul on his weary journey across some vast, barren desert.

The next Monday morning was declared to be a holiday—a day to celebrate in honor of the one whom they were fortunate enough to secure as teacher, and also the future possibilities of their children, who had sprung from a race dwarfed mentally by slavery. It was a joyous day; and as the children skipped to and fro playing various games, happiness beamed from their radiant faces.

The Teacher "Taught Out"

The day, however, was soon gone, and the next day all the pupils returned to begin their new task of hard study. The school work apparently went on nicely. The pupils applied themselves diligently to their books, but at the end of the first month a great calamity befell the joyous community. The eager-minded boys and girls, and the trustee board were very seriously handicapped, for the teacher had reached her limit! She had exhausted her every bit of knowledge to teach the first month, and lo! she could teach no more. Therefore she very readily resigned.

Fortune, however, favored the district temporarily, and within a few days another teacher was secured. Then boys and girls formerly attentive now became ungovernable, inattentive, rough, rude, and thought that they knew it all. They nearly drove the teacher crazy trying to preserve order. The next day came and brought with it trouble lurking in every corner of the old schoolroom. As he had resolved the previous night, the teacher arose from his seat, and declared that the next one who meowed like a cat, or barked like a dog, or made any peculiar noise would receive a severe lashing. No sooner, however, had he made these declarations than the same noises began again. The teacher gritted his teeth and seized his whip. But—there was a problem before him. He was a small man, while each of his boys was over six feet tall. Each dared him to strike. He stared madly and soon his passion overcame him. Uttering a few profane words, he hurriedly left the school and the town without even notifying the trustees, and swore that he would never return.

Again Teacherless

Again the school was without an instructor and the board of trustees now faced a most serious crisis. The old building where they had been holding school was falling down, money was running low, in fact the whole affair seemed to be collapsing. The question now was, what were they to do? Was the school lost forever? If not, how was it to be restored, and put on a good running basis? The next year came; there was no school. Everything appeared misty and

The Way

By FREDERICK B. GREUL

BY A divine law, as certain as the day's return, Christianity embodies the elements of cause and effect. In this domain, probably as in no other, we can safely move up from the things seen to the things unseen, and be sure of our footing. It is coming to be believed that God moves in minds not associated with the church. Christ is carrying on his world conquest by using all the available forces in the social make-up of our world. In a sense the way of the righteous is about the only way there is. It is as scientific as it is religious. "All things are yours" hints a scope of universal dimension, thrilling in its promises. The way of the righteous cannot be limited to a description of a godly man's conduct. It is a way, great as the heart longings of the Christ. So far as conduct is concerned it is straight and narrow. So far as it is Christ himself who is the Way limitations are decidedly out of consideration. The time has at last come when Christianity is being considered as a power that is resident in man. What is Christianity but the Christ embodied in man? It cannot be called a creed. It is a power. It is "the way" of life. Is it not more than a corrective system? Does it not have and exhibit more than a collection of "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not"? Is it not an aggressive power—an appropriating power, an organizing power? This "way" means fruit that will not spoil, enjoyment that will not unhappily react, character that does not need continual repairing. It is the way.

The unbelieving cannot enjoy it. The ungodly cannot stand in it. The scornful do not feel at home in it. It is the way to impress a man that he is worth something, and for that reason God wants him, so he can with God "take a hand" in saving the world. There is supreme effect in bending over a man, pointing out to him as a lost sinner the way to be saved, telling him, "My friend, God wants to save your soul, and commission you as one of his helpers to fight hell and fill heaven."

Brookline, Mass.

gloomy. The fowls even seemed to have sad countenances, and all the animals seemed to share in the district's distress. But lo! in the town of Darlington there was the Romulus of that school in the person of the Rev. Mr. Howard. The summer following his graduation from Benedict, while conversing with a farmer from this district concerning his desired vocation in life, he learned of the dire distress and misfortune that an unkind fate had permitted to befall the underserving, broken-hearted people of this district.

The Vision

Immediately this young minister saw the great possibilities. He pictured to himself a grand school building, and a group of capable teachers administering knowledge to those who desired it. He knew that with the aid of God, a people so determined to be set free from the tyrant ignorance, would overcome. He had learned at his alma mater, Benedict College, that God helps those who ask, believe, and help themselves.

Thereupon he offered his services in an attempt to re-establish the school as well as to build a church. The following Sunday he held an open field meeting, and led twenty-five boys and girls to Christ. He instilled into all of his hearers the principles of Jesus, and taught them that nothing of value was gained easily. His sermon to their souls was like fuel to a dying fire—courage and hope revived. They decided to build a little log school house the next week. This they did.

Dreams Come True

School began the next fall, and their dear teacher commenced a genuine ministry. He won the admiration and love of all. His students obeyed. Their parents were ever eager to take his advice. Dame Fortune smiled. Crops were bountiful. The prices were good. Everything seemed to be in their favor. The first thing that they did was to build a church, and pay their faithful teacher what little they could. He was indeed satisfied, for his purpose was not to obtain money, but to do Christian service. Cheerfully he went back the next fall. He taught, and preached in the church. Year after year passed. Little by little they saved their money, until at last their dreams came true, and his vision became real. They constructed one of the finest rural school buildings in the state under the leadership of the Rev. Mr. Howard, with the aid of the Rosenwald fund.

Now he has several teachers as his assistants, and with a face beaming with inspiration, love, and intelligence, he leads them to the thanksgiving altars of Sunday, and during the week goes around reminding the people of their blessed Saviour, who keeps watch above his own.

A Hindu Editor Devoted to God and Humanity

By V. W. DYER, Pastor of Immanuel Baptist Church, Rangoon, Burma

YOU would be delighted to meet my friend who is nominally a Hindu but more Christian in his private life and public service than are the vast majority of church members. He says frankly: "I am not a Christian because I believe Jesus Christ is only a man although I am sure he is the best man that ever lived."

My friend is the able editor of the leading Indian daily newspaper of Rangoon and is, in fact, the only editor in the city who is willing to give fair play and space to all races, sects and religions. Of the two English dailies one is the biased mouthpiece of the government and the other is the exclusive organ of the most powerful, selfish, commercial interests. My friend was the only editor to champion the cause of a poor sweeper's little boy who was carelessly run over by a reckless driver of a rich man's car. Generous bribes closed the mouths of all the forces of justice, but not his. He was glad to fight the case with no reward save that of his own conscience. You would enjoy conversation with him because he is so well informed concerning the best of English and American literature. Although literature is his favorite field, he says truly that politics is his business. He is a great admirer of American political institutions especially our fundamental doctrine of complete religious liberty and entire separation of church and state. In this land of myriad sects and religions, some older than Christianity, he was quick to see the importance of this happy principle. His paper is dedicated to the cause of complete religious liberty for all and government favoritism for none. When the disestablishment of the church of England in India occurs, as it must very soon, he would not make another false church of Hinduism or Buddhism. He would have India profit from the mistakes of Europe and the lessons of history.

Knowing his opinions as an editor, I ventured to send him the address of Mr. Charles E. Hughes, American secretary of state, on religious liberty, delivered at the founding of the Baptist memorial to Roger Williams at Washington, D. C. He was so pleased with it and I so surprised, that our friendship was cemented at once. Soon after this when one of the English papers approved of my lecture, Milton's 'Lycidas' and 'What Are the Lungs For?' but refused to print it solely because the editor said his constituency, which was mostly Church of England, might not like it, I offered it to my Hindu friend who gladly accepted it. Since then he has published a dozen articles of mine on social, moral, and Christian topics. During the next two months he will publish six of my literary-religious lectures on the subject "Masterpieces of English Literature in the Light of the English Bible." All this means that he is getting free of charge what it costs the Christian missions of Japan a good sum of money to get before the non-Christian public. This paper has a circulation of over 1,000 among English-speaking Indians, Burmans, Karens, and Chinese.

I should like to suggest to Christians all parts of the world that there is a wonderful opportunity on every hand to help these non-Christian newspapers by your personal subscription, friendly advice, and contribution of articles on social or literary subjects treated in a Christian way. Of course, they should be well written and interesting, never narrow and sectarian. The entire non-Christian world is in a state of ferment and change. Their political and social problems are tremendous and they appreciate sympathetic, intelligent, Christian advice.

Only this last week my Hindu friend said to me: "Do you know that Christianity has ceased to make converts among the better classes of Indians because so many of the missions and missionaries have let down the high standards of Christ? They are foolish enough to think that they will make more converts if they compromise with the evils of heathenism. We do not respect a Christian who does not stand firmly for all of the high principles of the Christ they pretend to follow. Give our Indians the best you have and some time they are sure to accept the best." A few weeks ago the Diocesan Council of Rangoon reversed its policy in regard to gambling and with the sanction of the bishop they voted to accept money given for the work of the Church of England by the Rangoon Turf Club, money which is largely made from gambling on horse racing. All the newspapers contained controversy pro and con, but the Indian newspaper printed far more against gambling than both of the English newspapers and the only paper to print a leading editorial against gambling and the church using gamblers' money was the Indian paper which has my friend the Hindu as editor!

Whenever I think of my Hindu friend who, of course, does not believe in the superstition and immoral gods of popular Hinduism, I say with a prayer: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." When he thinks of the church I wonder if he says with King Agrippa of old: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

United States Hospital Number 66

By E. O. SELLERS

TO LOUISIANA belongs the distinction of being the only state to invite the federal government to establish a leper colony within its borders. The frantic protests of the other states against such a move were in line with the general ignorance of Americans regarding this ancient and notorious disease.

Leprosy has been found in twenty-five different states of the union with about 2,000 cases, there being, it is estimated, over 2,000,000 lepers in the entire world.

By segregation the disease can eventually be stamped out. Chaulmoogra oil treatment has long been known and used for leprosy, though the cure is said to be about as severe as the disease. Recent improvements in the use of this oil have worked wonderful results, though to say that it is a cure none dare assert; certainly it is not with advanced cases.

United States Public Health Hospital No. 66 is located at Carville, La., about twenty-eight miles below the city of Baton Rouge on the banks of the Mississippi river. Formerly known as the "Louisiana Home for Lepers," it housed about eighty patients. Now, under government management, it is caring for over 200 and three times that number are waiting till the congressional appropriation is made so that proper housing will permit them to enter.

There is no danger in making a visit to the hospital. Care must be taken as to contact, but the disease is not contagious. Repulsive it is of course but the Master has commanded us to minister to the lepers and a more cheerful or appreciative group I have never met.

On my first visit the chairman asked those gathered for service what hymn they wanted to sing and as with one voice they replied, "Count Your Many Blessings" with a second choice of, "Help Somebody Today." It is a privilege to attend the set services, but a greater one to visit the various wards, meet groups upon the verandas of the cottages or call upon those not able to leave their rooms.

Men and boys of ten and twelve; women from all walks of life; two sons of missionaries; one former secretary to a United States senator; white, black and Chinese, a former Canal Street clothier—all of these are shut off from the world for life, and but a very few will ever see kinsfolk or friends again.

A fine piece of religious work is being carried on by the Rev. Henry Cousins, formerly for eight years the pastor of the Anacostia Baptist Church of Washington, D. C., and whose salary is being paid by the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the M. E. Church. Dr. Cousins, Ph.D. was for years a missionary in South Africa and was appointed by Oom Paul Kruger as the resident chaplain to a leper colony. Now he and his consecrated wife, known as "mother," are devoting their full time to the work at Carville. This does not mean that they are exiled from the world for the workers come and go freely. Maj. Denny, the superintendent, now visiting Brazil, was for years in charge of a hospital of 2,000 patients in the Philippine Islands.

During the Louisiana administration the Sisters of Charity did all of the nursing and a resident Catholic priest secured sufficient funds to erect a fine chapel for those of that faith. Under the new management with patients from all over the country the Catholic population is no longer in the majority and the little Protestant church is far too small, thus making it appear as though the Protestants do not care as much for their exiles as do the Catholics for their adherents.

The American Mission to the Lepers, 150 Fifth Ave., New York, has decided to erect a suitable building at a cost of about $20,000 to serve as a church and community house, relying upon 4,000 American Protestants to contribute $5 each for the lepers within their gates—a worthy enterprise.

Denominational Progress and Stewardship

By FREDERICK L. ANDERSON

IT MUST be progress or retrogression. There is no such thing in life as standing still. The denomination must either advance or retreat. Which shall it be?

One of the next steps forward is stewardship, broadly conceived, enthusiastically made a guiding principle of life. The church is a spiritual body, not a mere human organization, a reform society, a social club or even a school. It is the creation of the Spirit of God, born from above, filled, nourished, guided, used by the Spirit. The only real progress it can ever make is spiritual progress, that is, progress toward realizing the divine ideal for it. All other seeming progress, progress in numbers, in wealth, in organization, in methods, in learning is illusory and bound to end in disaster, unless there is at the same time a growth in grace and in the experiential knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is fundamental, and it alone can vitalize and keep fresh and sound all other forms of apparent prosperity. The root of the church's life is the Spirit.

Stewardship is in line with the spiritual progress and the genius of our denomination. We have always stood for the spirituality of Christianity, for the immediate fellowship of the individual soul with God, and for an entire surrender of heart and life to Christ before baptism and church membership. We have always demanded a practical religion which includes all of life and which aims to bring the bottom of our performance up to the top of our profession. Stewardship is merely the application of the doctrine of the entire surrender to the whole of life, and that in a practical way new and living to multitudes in our churches. It is a broadening spiritual conception, capable of indefinite expansion in its relations to the life of the individual Christian and the church.

Two IF's must modify all that we have said. Stewardship can stimulate the progress of our denomination only if our people will understand it and if they will adopt it. I am quite sure that if we present stewardship in a narrow legalistic way, insisting on certain methods, however good, that the Baptists generally will not take it. We must make it plain that it is not legalistic but spiritual, not narrow but all-embracing and that large individual liberty is not only permitted but desirable in its application.

Stewardship is only the other side of Lordship. If God is my Lord, I am his servant, entrusted by him with certain things which I must distribute according to his will and in his interest. The great central point is that God owns me; he made me, possesses me, gives me every breath I draw, and has renewed and saved me through Jesus Christ. Since this is so, all I am and have and hope to be and have belongs to God. All my time, all my energy, all my talent, all my money, all my children, belong to him. They are not my own, but his, and he entrusts to me the use of them to his glory.

Of course, God has various uses to which he wants me to put my time and energy and money. He does not want me to give it all to the First Baptist Church and denominational enterprises. He wants me to use these things to feed, clothe, shelter and educate myself and my family. He wants most of us to use these things in business to feed, clothe, shelter and educate others of his children. The farmer, the carpenter, the manufacturer, the transporter, the distributor are all called of God and are engaged in God's business as much as the preacher and the missionary.

But the Christian in any calling has entirely surrendered himself to God, counts nothing his own, and feels a most sacred responsibility to use his time and talent and money in these various spheres of duty as in God's sight, according to God's will, and as one who shall give account to God. Such a Christian, filled with love to God will surely recognize that, while God is most truly served in the home, in the field, in the factory, in the store and in the schoolroom, still the great instrument for bringing in the kingdom of God is the Gospel, and that the church is the organization which Christ has founded for the spreading of the Gospel throughout the earth. What proportion of his time, energy and money will the Christian set aside for the Gospel and the church? We may well leave it to him, if he has thoroughly imbibed the idea that he and all he has belong to God and that he is God's steward.

But, if we go no farther, we leave all in the air and make no considerable advance.

Standards are useful and practically indispensable in this world, when we deal with weak human nature, which demands habit to steady conduct. We are to pray without ceasing, but it is well to have set times for our devotions, and without such set times the most of us would gradually cease to pray. So Christian stewardship proposes a proportion to be given for the Gospel and the church, a standard for the ordinary man, and it has seized upon the tenth, which is so often mentioned in Scripture. This is surely not too much for the man who has surrendered all to Christ and whose main business in the world is the setting up of God's kingdom. For very many it is by no means enough. Some should give a fifth, others a third or a half, and some perhaps, like the widow the Lord commended, all.

And when we commence to be specific it is well to begin with money. That makes it all concrete and practical. Money is the product of time and energy, and from one point of view time and energy make up life. So as coal is stored-up sunshine, money is stored-up life. We cannot devote our lives to Jesus, without devoting our money to him. In our money-loving age, this is the crucial test for most Christians. If they will give their money, they will give everything else too. Perhaps our Lord meant to hint that when he asked, "If you are unfaithful with money, who will entrust to you the true riches?" (Luke 16:11.)

Will the Baptists take this view of their responsibility to God? The progress of the denomination rests very largely on the answer. It is a great test for the individual Baptist, and he should remember that it is only by sacrifice, glad and willing sacrifice, and ever larger sacrifice that we grow in grace and joy and strength and love. To refuse the sacrifice, when we believe it to be God's will, is to draw a line between what we will surrender to God and what we will not yield to him. That is a very serious matter, especially when Jesus denies the name of follower to any one who will not surrender all to him.

The Tenth Handful of Rice

By E. ELIZABETH VICKLAND

EVERY tenth handful of rice is given to the Lord. Many Christian women of Assam set apart one handful of rice in every ten when the portion for the meal is being measured out. This rice is placed in an earthen jar on the shelf above the fireplace, where the household gods used to stand. On Sunday the bags of rice are taken to church and collected as a part of the offering. It is then sold in the bazaar, and the money turned over to the woman's treasurer in each church.

Six or eight girls have been sent to the Gauhati Girls' School by one association and part of their expenses paid by this rice money. The men always bring up the question, "Why don't you help us support the masters in the village schools?" To which the women reply, "We know your schoolmasters. They teach the boys, but pay no attention to the girls. So we will send our girls to the mission schools where they will learn something and can come back and teach us, so we will not always be a lot of ignoramuses."

The All-Assam Baptist Convention receives a part of the money from the tithe of rice, and some of it has gone to the support of two missionaries sent by this convention to the Abor Miri country. The government of India will not allow white people to go into this Abor Miri land, because the people there are headhunting savages, whose social standing depends on the number of skulls on the shelf above the door. The Abor Miri country is wedged in between Burma and China, on the extreme northeast of Assam. When these savage folk have been won for Christ, the Assamese women will be ready to help with their handfuls of rice, to send missionaries marching into western China to help with the problems there.

Annual Gatherings of State Bodies

Conventions rank high in spiritual tone, general interest and hopeful outlook.

The Wisconsin Convention

By ROBERT W. SHAW

THE seventy-eighth convention of Wisconsin Baptists met this year with the Baptist Church at Oshkosh. The convention city is one of our most thriving and enterprising cities. It has the largest sash, door and blind factory in the world, the second largest match factory, is noted the world over for its overalls, and has one of our best normal schools. Our Baptist Church here is progressive and up-to-date. Rev. E. G. Mintz is the enterprising pastor, and stands high, both in the estimation of the church, and the city as a whole.

The convention this year ranks with one of the best in recent years. The attendance was large, nearly 350 delegates and visitors being registered; the addresses were of a high order; the actions of the convention had the forward look; and the fields of the world at home and abroad were adequately presented.

There was a meeting of the board of managers Monday afternoon to consider the program of the Board of Promotion. Dr. W. H. Bowler was there to set it up, and it was enthusiastically adopted, and plans were inaugurated to realize many of the goals in the local churches throughout the state.

The Outside Speakers

We had as our guests this year Dr. Clarence A. Barbour, Dr. H. F. Stilwell, Mrs. C. D. Eulette, Dr. W. E. Chalmers and Dr. J. C. Robbins. Dr. Stilwell thrilled the ministers in their meeting on the matter of evangelism, so much so that a number of men, who had only hoped that there might be an evangelistic meeting in their churches this year, went home with the determination that such a meeting would be held. Dr. Barbour in his unique, scholarly and reverent way, lifted the convention in three great addresses, all of which were enthusiastically received. The convention was glad that Dr. Barbour could set the pace for the rest of the program. Of course Dr. Chalmers and Mrs. Eulette made good, and Dr. Robbins thrilled us with the reports of the great onward march of the kingdom of God in the Eastern lands.

The Program

The program was so built that a minimum of time was required for business. Careful consideration was given to the home and foreign fields. Rev. Robert W. Shaw, of Milwaukee, gave the annual sermon to the convention, and Dr. J. S. Wallace, of Madison preached for the Ministerial Union. Both sermons were of a high order, and helped to set the spirit of the convention.

The fields of Wisconsin and those abroad were presented in a splendid fashion by speakers and pageants. Other things considered were: Religious education, the promotional program, and the report of the board of managers. Each of these was backed up by splendid addresses. The feature of the program came Wednesday afternoon and night when the whole field of Wisconsin Baptists was set before the convention.

The Feature of the convention was in the presentation of the work among the Poles, Norwegians, Danes, Swedes, Italians, Germans, and Negroes. Each of these fields was presented by those who were doing the work and it was both profitable and illuminating to have the picture of the great work of Wisconsin Baptists. Then the work of the country and city was presented by the field workers.

All of this occupied an entire afternoon. In the evening a pageant entitled, "Visions of Victory," written for the occasion by Rev. C. A. Boyd, our religious education director, was presented. This had three episodes. The first was that early history showing the organization of the first Baptist Church in the Wisconsin Territory, at Delavan in 1841, and the erection of the first meeting house. This was followed by a presentation of the organization of the "Wisconsin Baptist General Association" at East Troy in 1846. The presentation of the first was by the members of the church at Delavan, and second by the church at Neenah. The second episode showed the various fields of work in Wisconsin at the present time. The third episode ended in a climax of more than 100 children marching to the platform, with lighted candles singing "The Light Of The World Is Jesus."

Home and Foreign Missions

Twice during the program it was concretely shown that home and foreign missions react upon each other. One incident was given by Rev. A. Soltys, in charge of the Polish work in Milwaukee. When his work was attacked by the Catholic priest, in a daily paper who urged the people to put down the Baptist heretics, many signed communications came to the paper protesting against the proposition of the priest, saying, that certainly those who had fed the hungry, and provided clothing for the destitute relatives in Poland, were not bad people, but were worthy of a cordial support in their work. Foreign missions in Poland helps Baptist home mission work in America. His church is receiving many families as the result of this attack. The other was from the lips of Dr. J. C. Robbins, who read a letter from a small church of less than 100 members in India, saying it had heard of the burden of debt which rested upon our great brotherhood, and wished to contribute the sum of about $48 toward the reduction of it. Not the secretary's or the board's debts, but the debt of the brotherhood. That was the most refreshing word we have heard for many a day. Missions in India help Missions in America.

The Outlook

Wisconsin Baptists go forward optimistically. The work is difficult, our numbers are small, but our task is large and our faith is great. The "Uplifted Christ" is leading on to victory.

The 1923 convention will be held at LaCrosse.

The Pennsylvania Convention

THE fifteenth anniversary of the Pennsylvania General Convention was held Oct. 16-19 in the Second Baptist Church of Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, and of which the Rev. Charles Hastings Dodd is pastor. The sessions were marked by perfect weather, the largest enrolment and attendance in years, usually crowding the spacious auditorium which seats 800 persons; inspiring addresses, with every speaker on the program present; fine music by the local church choirs, Bucknell University students and the Baptist Institute students, under direction of Professor Tourison; perfect arrangements for the housing, meals and other comfort of the delegates by an efficient committee of members from the five Germantown churches participating in the convention arrangements, and of which Rev. B. L. Newkirk, pastor of Wayne Avenue Church was chairman.

The opening session of Monday evening was given over to the Fifty-sixth Anniversary of the Ministers' Union. Pres. John A. Hainer, of Philadelphia, presided, gave the opening address and introduced the new ministers who had come into the state during the past year. Rev. John Ballentine, of Clarion read the obituary report, noting the death of some of the most esteemed and outstanding ministers and laymen of Pennsylvania, notably Hon. Ernest L. Tustin, a former president of the Northern Baptist Convention. Rev. George Boddie, delivered a masterly oration. His theme was "The Preaching for the Times." The following officers were elected: Pres., J. A. Maxwell, of Chester; 1st vice-pres., Rev. C. M. Angle, of Scranton; 2nd vice-president, Rev. P. H. Lynch, of New Castle; secy-treas., Rev. H. W. Stringer, of Philadelphia, succeeding Rev. C. A. Walker, retiring after eight years of service because of removal to another state. Resolutions complimentary to Dr. Walker were passed.

Tuesday

The sessions of the general convention began Tuesday morning, Pres. Ray L. Hudson of Philadelphia, in the chair. Rev. B. L. Newkirk, of Germantown, gave an address of welcome; the president made a response of appreciation and defined the objectives of Pennsylvania Baptists as an affiliated body of the Northern Baptist Convention. After the report of the committee on program had been presented by Dr. C. H. Dodd and convention business disposed of, the morning session closed with the convention sermon, preached by Rev. Harold S. Stewart, of Philadelphia, whose theme was "The Program of Programs" and who pled for the exaltation of Christ and his spirit as the cure for all world problems of today. The afternoon session was given over to the discussion of the annual report of the state mission society, which was presented by Rev. C. A. Soars, executive secretary, and who also presented some twenty missionary pastors, evangelists and workers who gave brief reports from the field. They were followed by a demonstration of city mission work, conducted by Rev. O. T. Steward, executive secretary of the Baptist Union of Philadelphia, who also presented pastors and missionaries engaged in work among the foreign-speaking peoples of Philadelphia. The session closed with a devotional period, conducted by Rev. H. J. Whalen, D.D., of Greensburg.

W. H. Dennis, of Bradford, first vice-president, conducted the evening session. Clarence A. Adams D.D. presented the report of the special committee on Baptist conditions at state college, stating that the Baptist denomination is bleeding to death at state college for lack of a Baptist Church there. Mrs. Charles A. Brooks, of the Woman's Home Mission Board, made an address largely given over to a presentation of the "color-line" problem and the progress of the colored race. The closing address was given by Dr. Carl W. Petty, pastor of First Church, Pittsburgh.

Wednesday Sessions

Wednesday, Oct. 19, was given over to the consideration of Baptist education in Pennsylvania and convention business. The eighty-third annual report of the education board was presented by Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser, the executive secretary and a telegram of good wishes was ordered sent to Dr. Leroy Stephens, his predecessor in office. Rev. J. R. Wood, of Lewisburg, assistant to Pres. Emory W. Hunt, gave an address on "Our State Problem in General Education" and presented the claims of Bucknell University, Crozer Theological Seminary and Factoryville Academy. Rev. F. B. Igler, of Philadelphia, Baptist student pastor at the University of Pennsylvania spoke on "Baptist Student Work." Rev. Otto F. Laegler, Newark, N. J. gave an address on "Religious Education in the Local Church." Rev. W. C. Chappell, of Pittsburgh, chairman of committee on study and inquiry relating to associational councils and standards of ordination, made a report which embodied drastic recommendations and changes from past procedure but which was adopted without dissent. The session closed with a blackboard "Demonstration of Religious Education in the Local Church" presented by Mrs. Elizabeth M. Finn, Philadelphia.

The afternoon session in the auditorium was given over to the annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society presided over by Mrs. W. E. Chalmers of Philadelphia, state president. Addresses were delivered by Miss Kaminsky, Christian Americanization secretary and Miss Tencate, missionary, on her work in India. Two-minute reports were given from the platform by state associational secretaries and a number of church leaders told about "What We Did and How." Election of state officers: President, Mrs. W. E. Chalmers, of Lansdowne; Exec. Vice-Pres., Mrs. Percy Wilmot; Rec. Sec., Mrs. O. C. Brown, Lansdowne; Cor. Sec., Mrs. C. C. Earle; Treas., Mrs. J. P. Thompson, Philadelphia; foreign mission Vice-Pres., Mrs. Thomas Sames, Norristown; home Vice-Pres., Mrs. I. C. Scatergood, Harrisburg. The session closed with a "Conference on Religious Education," conducted by Mrs. Grace Nell Farmer, New Jersey.

While the annual meeting of the Women's Society was taking place, several important conferences for the male delegates were taking place in the chapel. Rev. J. A. Maxwell of Chester led a spirited conference on pastoral problems; Rev. A. B. Strickland, state evangelist, on evangelism; Rev. J. W. Elliot of Wayne, on associational program and polity; Rev. D. E. Lewis, of Sharon, on stewardship. Rev. Robert M. Green of Franklin, second vice president presided at the evening session. Professor Edward B. Pollard, of Crozer, held the attention of a great audience that filled the church with an inspiring address on "Religious Education," and Rev. John A. Davis, the government prohibition director for Pennsylvania gave a vivid account of the difficulties encountered in enforcing the eighteenth amendment. Rev. Peter C. Wright spoke in the interests of the ministers and missionaries board.

The Last Day

The morning of the last day was partly given over to convention business, reports, and election of officers, which resulted as follows: Pres., Ray L. Hudson, Philadelphia; 1st Vice-Pres., Rev. C. S. Joshua, Union City; 2nd Vice-Pres., E. S. Williams, Scranton; 3rd Vice-Pres., Mrs. Floyd W. Carr, Wilkinsburg, Rec. Sec., Rev. H. W. Stringer, Germantown. Rev. C. A. Soars, was reelected executive secretary of the state mission board; Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser, secretary of the education board; Rev. W. G. Russell, director of the state board of promotion.

A resolution, commendatory of the services of Rev. Charles A. Walker, the retiring secretary of the convention was presented by Rev. Howard Wayne Smith of Philadelphia and the convention sang "Blest Be the Tie that Binds" in his honor. Other resolutions adopted were: Thanking the entertaining and cooperating churches and choirs; commending the missionary educational program and stewardship; appealing to the president to use the influence of the United States to abate the Armenian atrocities; approving an annual day of Thanksgiving for the whole world; endorsing the proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations; endorsing the work of and urging support for the Anti-Saloon League; endorsing the election of such candidates only who are committed to the enforcement of law; approving the appointment of a convention committee to cooperate with other agencies to provide for week-day religious education of children.

The morning session closed with two inspiring addresses: One by Mrs. Howard Wayne Smith, Ardmore, on "A Program for the Whole Task." The other by Rev. C. A. Decker, Pittsburgh, on "How Stewardship Works."

Part of the afternoon was given over to a sight-seeing trip by auto for the visiting delegates ending at 5 o'clock at the Baptist Institute where the delegates were the guests of President Wilbur and the student body for a delightful supper, for which a resolution of appreciation was adopted at the evening session when the institute students sang "Not I but Christ!" Before departing on the trip the convention listened to addresses by Rev. Charles L. White of New York, Executive Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society and Rev. Joseph Taylor of West China.

The closing evening session was presided over by Mrs. Joseph S. Wilds of Philadelphia, third vice-president of the convention. Rev. H. W. Stringer, of Germantown, the newly elected secretary, was presented to the convention and Dr. C. A. Soars, secretary of the state mission board, made a plea for the "Rush a Ship to Russia" plan.

Mrs. J. M. Baker of Ongole, India, where he has been stationed for twenty-seven years, gave an informing address on Baptist Mission work in India and Rev. J. C. Robbins of New York, foreign secretary of the A. B. F. M. S., made the closing address of the convention taking as his appropriate theme, "Baptists on the March."

After the closing prayer and benediction by Rev. W. M. Walker, pastor of the Third Church, Germantown, the Convention adjourned to meet next year with the Immanuel Church, Scranton.

Illinois Baptists at Centralia

By D. O. HOPKINS

SINCE the year 1907 the writer has attended each annual gathering of the Illinois State Convention. From the viewpoint of Christian spirit and spiritual atmosphere the one at Centralia excelled them all. There were a number of factors contributing to this heavenly uplift, chief among which were the prayers of our churches preceding the convention and the prayer-controlled life of the delegates during the sessions.

The program was of the highest order. Each speaker presented his subject from a prepared heart. Dr. Lerrigo told a marvelous story of spiritual awakenings in Europe, Asia, Africa. He himself had witnessed the baptism of 380 converts on the Congo in one day. Fresh items from these awakenings were presented from Russia, Czecho-Slovakia, China, Philippine Islands. The story sounded like the Pentecostal gatherings of ancient times.

Doctors Hoyt and Marsh each preached a simple, earnest, spiritual sermon. Dr. Hoyt dealt with the words "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength," and Dr. Marsh interpreted the cheering words of Jesus, "Let not your heart be troubled."

Dr. A. E. Peterson was elected by the board as the general superintendent of the convention for the next three years. As he becomes more familiarly known he becomes more intensely loved. Dr. Peterson reported a year of great growth and activity. One of the sessions was devoted wholly to state convention matters. Dr. Brand, curator of the property, showed that the permanent funds had exceeded during the year the sum of the $100,000 mark. The four district superintendents: Hopkins, Merrill, Hilton and Gilmore, and also Missionary McMinn, told of their problems, perils, and prospects.

The high tide of Christian fellowship was reached when the report of our schools was given. All of our denominational schools in the state were highly commended. There were, however, some reservations about the Divinity School. There was a unanimous adoption of the report. The convention started a slogan "Baptist schools for Baptist people." At the close of this report Dr. Boynton offered the following resolution:

"I move that a committee of five be appointed by the president of this convention to confer with the Baptist Theological Union of Chicago and its trustees with a view to a closer fellowship between the Divinity School of the University of Chicago and the Baptist churches of Illi-is and that this committee report the results of this conference to this convention at its session of 1923."

This was seconded by Dr. Gilkey. He called attention to the phrase "closer fellowship" and also to the motto on the organ, "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." We overheard one delegate saying at this juncture, "Did you ever see such an answer to prayer?"

The women of the convention had two separate meetings on Monday night and Tuesday morning. This special service on Monday night made it possible for the men and women to be together at the initial service of the convention proper, and a more perfect democracy was realized.

Dr. Samuel Zane Batten was gratefully heard upon two occasions. His address upon "The Reign of Lawlessness" left a profound impression. "What Must the Church Do To Be Saved?" gave Dr. Thomas S. Young an opportunity to suggest several vital things in his address. Mrs. George W. Coleman, of the General Board of Promotion, presented the denominational situation.

Another high moment in the convention occurred when Dr. Boynton told, in such a beautiful spirit, that the pastors and churches of the Illinois Baptist Convention are true and loyal to our time honored beliefs, as Baptists, and as followers of Christ, and as adherents of the New Testament.

Dr. Bruce Kinney, the sky pilot of the Baptists, took us on a trip to Alaska. His address was accompanied with fine stereopticon slides. He paid a very fine tribute to our orphanage there.

Foreign Work

India was presented in many ways. A new addition to our convention was a study of the books of the year. One less studied India. Then we had the address of Dr. Baker of Ongole. Perhaps the most wonderful story ever told at a state convention was told by Dr. Frederick E. Taylor. It is always a good thing to have the president of the northern Baptist Convention present with one word. We have been fortunate the last two years in this. The story of Dr. Taylor reminded one of the missionary journeys of Paul. President Potter at the close of the address declared he was going home to read those journeys again. Dr. Taylor's trip to Europe was made in company with Dr. Carter Helm Jones and Dr. Abernethy under the direction of our Foreign Mission Society. This message was a romance of a high order. He said that the Baptists of France are riddled by strife and vain glory and warned his hearers to be one in the spirit. Never shall we forget Czecho-Slovakia after this. Its struggle for democracy and its response to Taylor's and Jones' messages were modern day miracles. The Jewish interpreter had a share in preaching the gospel. The decisions even after the message had gone through two interpretations showed how the human heart is one underneath the surface. Who could not believe in missions after this?

Dr. Potter has presided over this convention for the last three years. Illinois Baptists have taken great strides during these years. His mantle has now fallen upon Dr. M. W. Twining of Alton. Dr. Twining has been a pastor of one church or twenty-seven years. He has accepted his honor with gratitude.

The weather was ideal. Centralia proved to be a great host. Pastor Murch was publicly thanked by the local papers for bringing such worthy talents to the city. Mr. Dunk made the singing an inspiration. The seventy-eighth session of the Illinois Baptist Convention passed into history. We look forward to the year's work and to the next meeting to be held in Chicago.

Meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society

Over 250 women of Illinois met in the twenty-first annual session at Centralia, Oct. 16-17, in connection with the state convention. Mrs. W. P. Topping presided. "Personal Responsibility" was the keynote of the meeting. Mrs. George Coleman, president of the National Woman's Home Mission Society, was a special guest and spoke before the convention; also Miss Alma Noble, national W. W. G. president; Miss Alice Brimson, National Christian Americanization Secretary; Miss Luella Adams, mission worker at Rankin, Pa.; Mrs. Clara Pinkham, president of the training school; Mr. Wallace St. John, Burma.

The meeting opened with an "Acquaintance hour" at 5:30 p. m. Monday, at which time Dr. A. E. Peterson, state promotion board director, Mr. G. M. Potter, president of the state convention, state officers, and others were introduced. A prayer and praise service was followed by the fellowship supper—the board members being guests of the Centralia Baptist ladies. Mrs. Walter Lemon, in behalf of Centralia Baptists, heartily welcomed the guests, and Mrs. Martha V. Higman, who twenty years ago in Centralia was instrumental in forming this state organization, responded. She said: "Twenty years ago two women—she and Mrs. M. W. Twining—left Centralia with papers in their grips, and with fifteen or sixteen women, formed the first foreign mission society of Illinois." Miss Carrie Perrine, still a beloved resident of Centralia, was the first secretary. Many at the time felt that the child was born prematurely. It was very feeble at the first, but is now healthy and strong and 20 years old! It has been mothered carefully the past twelve years by the present president, and today there is no state in the N. B. C. which is carrying on the work in such an efficient way.

The pagant, "Wait a Minute," directed by Mrs. Ralph D. Webb, Centralia, left a deep impression.

Mrs. Sylvester Schiele, new state secretary-director, presented the state continuation campaign plans and leaflets for 1922-23.

State chairmen gave inspiring reports of work accomplished, and stated the goals for the coming year. Many associations gained Class A in the standard of excellence.

The loving cup, a trophy in the state reading contest, was awarded to Rock Island Association, which has had the honor of earning it four out of the six years. The First Church of Freeport was awarded the banner. The reading contest in Illinois is a great missionary stimulus.

The $100,000,000 campaign for the Union Colleges of the Orient was presented by Mrs. Dr. E. R. Hilton.

The silver baby's cup—the gift to Central District by a mother, whose baby boy, grown to manhood, made the "supreme sacrifice,"—was passed for an offering, and $35 was given, a gift for the continuation campaign.

Conferences were held by the state committee chairmen; the adult and junior study books were taught each day.

The Woman's and W. W. G. Banquet on Tuesday evening was a delightful affair; between two and three hundred enjoyed the Toast Program. The key thought "Lighted to Lighten" was carried out by the toasts. The state song for the year, "The Light of the World is Jesus," was sung.

Illinois women are aware that the Continuation Campaign has not stopped, but is going on, and are planning to help it on to victory.

Connecticut Baptist Convention

By Rev. H. B. SLOAT

CONNECTICUT is unique in the variety of its scenery and the versatility of its people. It is said that the spokes for nearly all the automobiles in the country are made in this state. All kinds of hardware are made hereabouts, in fact, Connecticut makes nearly everything "except the wooden nutmegs for which the state is famous."

The Baptist anniversaries were held in the finely appointed and commodious First Church of New Britain, known in the world of industry as the "hardware city." The pastor, Rev. Wm. Ross, and his people were royal entertainers.

The forty-first Annual Conference of Baptist Ministers was held on Monday, Oct. 16 at 2 p. m., Rev. Donald B. MacQueen presiding. The essays constitute the interesting feature of this conference. Rev. Manfred W. Schuh, Hartford, presented the first essay on "The Prophetic Office of the Ministry." The second essay came from the pen of Rev. F. B. Haggard, also of Hartford, his subject being "Evangelism, Old and New." The paper raised the question as to the kind of evangelism needed to reach and win men today. An animated discussion followed.

Our oldest state organization is the Baptist Education Society. Its one hundred and third annual meeting was held the Monday evening preceding the main convention, Rev. Herbert Judson White presiding. Rev. Frank L. Anderson, Orange, N. J., delivered an address on "Christian Education for the Twentieth Century." The society aided seventeen students during the past year.

On Tuesday morning, Oct. 17, at 10 a. m. the Connecticut Convention met in its ninety-ninth annual session. The devotional services for the entire convention were conducted by Rev. David A. Pitt, Norwich. The following topics were developed by Dr. Pitt: "The Task and Resources of the Early Church," "The Old Gospel and the New Day," "The Baptist Share of the World Task," "Christians On Christ's Terms," "Creed, Covenant, Baptism," "Sharing Our Best With the World." These devotional periods were deeply impressive giving a high spiritual tone to all the sessions of the convention.

The address of welcome by Dr. Ross was historic, hearty and helpful. After his response, the president, Dr. J. N. Lackey, brought to the convention his fifth annual message. He emphasized the necessity of the churches completing the New World Movement program; strengthening the work of the Connecticut Education Society; putting of more money into the work of rural churches; engendering among our people a spirit of law observance, especially as regards the Volstead Act. Next year being the centennial anniversaries of the convention, the president called upon one and all to forget

A FEW WORDS TO DR. CONANT

Having read your recent articles in the Western Recorder and THE BAPTIST, I beg the privilege of a brief reply to one of the questions which you put to the editor of THE BAPTIST. "Doesn't the man who takes the New Testament as the inerrant word of God get one kind of doctrine and practice out of it, and doesn't the one who regards it as the fallible history of the religious evolution of the race get the very opposite kind of doctrine and practice out of it?" My answer to this question is an emphatic negative. I know many people of both classes, and I do not find them "exactly opposite" either in belief or character, but quite alike in character and much alike in beliefs.

My father was in the Baptist ministry for over half a century, and, during most of that time at least, held the theory of inerrancy much as you state it. What is to me the compelling force of evidence has driven me to take a different view of this matter and coincidentally rather than consequently to modify my opinions on some other matters. But my religion is, in what seems to me at least, its essential points, the same as my father's and as my own of former days.

I do not wish to understate the difference which it makes to me that I have come to think of the medium through which my religion has come to me less in terms of dogma and command and more in those of life. For, indeed, as a result of that change my religion is to me a more vital reality, a more precious possession, on which I have a stronger hold and in which I have greater joy. Moreover, observation convinces me not only that the change removes some of the difficulties in the way of the acceptance of the religion of the New Testament, but in many cases at least makes it more effective when accepted. But neither do I like to have others overstate the difference. For I verily believe and gladly recognize that the essential elements of our religion stand out so clearly in the New Testament that if we come to the book with teachable spirits and open minds, that which we get is not radically affected by our theories of inspiration or inerrancy, not nearly so much as by other considerations of quite a different character.

I covet fellowship with my brethren who still hold the views of my father and of my youth, and the great obstacle that I find in the way of such fellowship is not a difference in the religion which we get from our Bibles, but in the theory that we hold about the medium through which it comes to us, and in particular not because these brethren do not hold my view, but because they find it difficult to tolerate my holding it.

No, I do not think that we really have different New Testaments, even in the sense in which you used the phrase. Our theories about the Book are not altogether the same, our interpretation of it is probably not altogether the same. But I verily believe that we—not you and I only, but the groups that we represent—are disciples of the same Master at whose feet we both learned to sit through the same New Testament. I only wish, and greatly wish, that, in the noble words of my friend and our fellow Christian, Timothy Tinfang Lew, we might "agree to differ, but resolve to love."

"STEWARDSHIP COMPARISONS"

An article with the heading "Stewardship Comparisons" emanating from the stewardship department of the New York State Board of Promotion, has recently been published in some of our denominational papers. It gives figures from fifteen New York churches, showing the annual per capita contributions of tithers and non-tithers; the summary showing that 916 tithers gave an average of $59.48 per capita, per year; while 2,963 other contributors gave an average of $18.91 per capita per year.

I was much interested in figuring out the average per capita giving of the contributors in each church, including both tithers and non-tithers. The lowest average for any church is $29.60; the highest, $58.43; the average for the fifteen churches $39.20.

The Teacher's Creed

I BELIEVE in God in whom all truth subsists and in Jesus Christ as the Way, the Truth and the Life:

I believe in the competency of the soul to know the truth and to come into vital fellowship with reality:

I believe in the universality of the grace of God and the consequent universality of the right of every man to an education:

I believe in the regeneration of the soul as the condition of the highest appreciation of truth, and in the religious fundamental of all true knowledge:

I believe in the development of character through knowledge that translates creed into conduct:

I believe in the aristocracy of culture that eventuates in the democracy of service:

I believe in the sacrifice of material gain that student life may receive a culture of mind, heart and body:

I believe in the life everlasting and the rewards of the students in the school of Christ.

For comparison with the above I would like to cite some figures from the Underwood Memorial Baptist Church of Wauwatosa, Wis. Tithing has never been urged in this church, we have no tithers' league (miscalled "Baptist League of Christian Stewards"). There are, probably, a few tithers in our membership, there are some who give more than a tithe. Stewardship (not tithing) has been regularly presented from the pulpit; the every-member canvass is the tried and tested method of finance; the church has increased its benevolences about 500 per cent in the last five years.

The average per contributor in this church last year, for both current expenses and benevolences was $56.02. This is $16.82 more than the average for the fifteen New York churches. There is but one church out of the fifteen (Oneonta, First) that surpasses this record, its average being $58.43. The next highest is $50.37 (Syracuse, Tabernacle).

We are not boasting. There are other churches in Wisconsin that excel our record. But, inasmuch as these other figures have been spread abroad; inasmuch as there are many Baptists who seem to believe that Christian stewardship and tithing are identical, or, at least, that Christian stewardship cannot be effectively promoted apart from tithing; in fairness to those who believe and practice otherwise, these figures ought to be as widely circulated as those from tithing churches.

And, further, I am wondering what kind of incomes those New York tithers have. The average tithe is $59.48. Can people live in New York on an average income of $59.48? This is certainly below what we have been told is the average Baptist income.

MADISON, WISCONSIN, OF COURSE

How rich in suggestion and stimulating narrative and program your October 14 issue! Intensive effort surely will come of it in many quarters.

The writer would like to get some more specific information as to the "time budget" of which Mr. Otis speaks in his "If I were a Pastor," page 1146. If it were clear which "Madison" is meant an attempt would be made to go direct for desired information.

Is it asking too much to appeal to you to forward this inquiry to "Madison"? If not to it, then to Mr. Otis?

The writer has a conviction that the sort of "evangelism" that is as greatly needed as any is one which will get the brethren already in church folds warmed up and busy.

How to Secure a Class Spirit

In order to secure a class spirit, the class which desires it must be made worthwhile. It is useless to invite worthwhile men to a class in a Sunday school unless they are to find there a worth-while program of activity. Such men are engaged with the serious tasks of life. If it can be shown them that the Sunday school can help them in their every-day life so as to be of practical value to them, the average man will appreciate it and show his appreciation by regular attendance. It may not be that he will apply himself in a careful preparation of the lesson to be considered, but he will come if he can be made to feel that he is to be repaid or coming. The average man wants to know what the Bible has to say about the problems with which he is concerned; therefore, if the Bible is taught so as to be interpreted in terms of every-day life, men will show their appreciation by continued and sustained interest. This does not imply necessarily a remarkably high grade of teaching. If a good program of the lesson is secured, a practical and level-headed leader can usually direct the discussion so that the interest will not wane nor drift into unprofitable argument. There is a greater demand for sensible leadership than for teaching ability.

"Our Class"

Moreover, the average man is altruistic in his emotions. He has learned that it pays to be neighborly in relation to his fellows. Any scheme that is set on foot to help any one in need or to uplift the community will usually receive hearty endorsement from a class of men. A class which is doing things helpful in a community will attract red-blooded men who are making things go. The Bible message could be so presented as to give those receiving it a mission of helpfulness to others. An organized class fails of its mission unless there is some common objective which will call for concerted action. It is not advisable to organize a class that is to have no objective beyond the teaching of the lesson at the Sunday session of the school. A class that has only this activity is in no sense an organized class. It is the teacher's class. When the members of a class begin to do things beyond the teaching of the lesson they begin to speak of the class as "our class."

The Test

The test of a really organized class is in the energy of the class in being utilized along the lines of Christian service. Other worth-while service. Many classes have failed signally at this point, and the organization has been considered a useless fad. Organization for its own sake, with no objective beyond itself, will be considered but child's play and will surely lead to disintegration.

I once knew a class which organized in a village with a good prospect for growth and usefulness. Committees were chosen with definite tasks to perform. The membership got busy, with the result that the membership was increased from twenty-five to seventy-five. Then there came a slump in committee work. Nothing more was done. The result was that in three months the membership was down again to twenty-five, and they were the original twenty-five who came without anything other than the lesson to attract them. The class spirit died when the class stopped working for others. This is the great menace to the growth of the organized class. The demand is for a leader that will keep the class up to normal activity.

Plan of Organization

A good plan of organization is to have a number of class officers at the head of different departments. Let the first vice-president have charge of membership, leaving him free to boost the class, devise and carry out plans to get new members, using the other members of the class to help him in the work. The second vice-president may have charge of the devotional work, arranging places for the holding of cottage prayer-meetings and using different members as leaders, etc. Other forms of work will be suggested by the needs of the community. The third vice-president may have charge of the social functions of the class, while the fourth vice-president may have charge of ways and means, to carry out any great project which the class may undertake. Besides these, there will be the regular secretary and treasurer, with specific duties assigned. For the past year I have been working this plan and the class has accomplished marvelous things.—J. W. BROWN in Men's Class.

She Loved Much

*SHE sat and wept beside his feet. The weight
Of sin oppressed her heart; for all the blame
And the poor malice of the worldly shame
To her were past, extinct and out of date;
Only the sin remained—the leprous state.
She could be melted by the heat of love,
By fires far fiercer than are blown to prove
And purge the silver ore adulterate.
She wept, and with untressed hair
Still wiped the feet she was so blest to touch;
And he wiped off the soiling of despair
From her sweet soul because she loved so much.*

International Sunday School Lesson for November 19

JESUS THE FRIEND OF SINNERS

Lesson: Luke 7. Golden Text: I Tim. 1:15.

Introductory

Following the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus healed the centurion's servant, restored to life the son of the widow of Nain, cured many of diseases and plagues and evil spirits, and justified the work and prophecies of John the Baptist. In the two previous lessons we considered him as Physician and Teacher. In today's lesson we study him as a Friend.

Lesson

Jesus had been invited to dine with Simon, a Pharisee. When a sinning woman of the city knew that he was in the house of Simon she came with an alabaster cruse of ointment, and, standing behind him as, in the oriental custom, he reclined on a couch at the feast, his head toward the table, his feet stretched out behind, anointed his feet and wiped them with the hair of her head. There is special significance given this act because it was considered one of the greatest humiliations for a woman to appear in public with her hair in disorder. The fact that Jesus accepted this woman's service created a doubt in the heart of Simon. He thought: "If this man were a prophet he would have perceived who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him, that she is a sinner." Then Jesus spoke, as though Simon had uttered his thought aloud: "Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee." There followed the parable of the two debtors, the one forgiven much, the other a small amount. "Which of them therefore will love him most?" questioned Jesus at the conclusion. Simon stated the one to whom most has been forgiven. "Thou hast rightly judged," said Jesus. "Simon, seest thou this woman?" And then he explained the act of the woman to the Pharisee—her many sins, her great love, and concluded with his words to the woman, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." The lesson is an illustration of Jesus as a Friend, but also he is still the Teacher as he turns to Simon, and the Physician as he turns to the woman.

Leading Thoughts

1. The courtesy of Jesus is a lovely thing to look upon. 2. The breadth and the height and the depth of Jesus are never better illustrated than in this lesson. 3. Seeing into the hearts of men is the gift that comes from close companionship with the Master.

Who can measure his compassion?

It is like yon blue above,

Bending o'er us, sinful, sinning,

It's unpillared arch of love.

THE HAND OF GOD IN MODERN CHINA

Rev. 21:4, 5; Luke 14:17
(CONQUEST MEETING)

Collateral Reading

Purchase for your library and circulate for general reading one of the recent books on China, "The Bells of the Blue Pagoda," by Jean Carter Cochran. Price $1.75.

I. What Is China?

One-fourth of the human race lives in China. It is a vast land filled with isolated cities and villages. Except for about a thousand miles of good roads, communication is by means of narrow rough roads or pathways winding between the fields. Many roads which have been used for centuries are worn so deep that travelers are quite lost to view. Until a few years ago there were no railways, no telegraph or postal system. Inhabitants of one province neither knew nor cared what happened in the adjoining province. Each village lived its own life in practical seclusion. Residents of different localities find each others' speech mutually unintelligible. In such circumstances national consciousness and spirit cannot live.

II. The Christian Preacher In China

1. For more than two millenniums the high teachings of Confucius have been unquestioningly accepted in China, yet the masses still live in the lowest depths of spiritism. Fear governs all the social and industrial affairs of life. Lucky days must be chosen for weddings, for funerals, for business undertakings. When the first railroad was built by foreign capitalists, the government purchased it outright and destroyed it because the noise of passing trains disturbed the spirits!

Buddhism and Taoism, the other two prevailing religions of China, are equally encrusted with superstition.

2. The frightful experiences in the Boxer uprising in 1900 proved the reality of the faith of Chinese converts. Of the thousands who were given choice of renunciation or death, almost all chose the latter. Consequently, instead of stamping out Christianity the persecutions actually fanned the flame; China became more than ever receptive to the gospel. Missionaries constantly report calls for the opening of new work that they are unable to answer.

III. The Christian Teacher In China

In no country in the world is learning more highly honored than in China. The scholar for millenniums has stood at the peak of social distinction; yet the number of illiterates staggers the imagination. Only the wealthy few have leisure to learn, for the struggle for existence on the part of most of the Chinese requires long hours of ceaseless toil.

Perhaps the most remarkable event in the educational history of the world took place in China in 1905, when an imperial edict completely abolished the old system of education that had been in existence for 1200 years, and substituted modern educational methods. Contact with the western world and the mission schools brought about this far-reaching change in China.

It is estimated that only one man in ten can read, and only one woman in 1000. Many Chinese pastors are still illiterate.

IV. The Christian Physician In China

1. The death rate in China is said to be higher than in any other part of the world. The infant mortality exceeds 50 per cent. It is estimated that 75 per cent of the deaths are preventable.

Missionary doctors are treating approximately 3,000,000 patients a year, but what are these among a population of 400,000,000?

Scarcely a city or town in China boasts a sewer system. Sanitation is unknown. Houses are often dark, damp and unventilated, especially at night. Those suffering from contagious diseases mingle freely with the rest of the family. The universal custom of drinking boiled tea is the salvation of the country, for many wells, canals and other sources of water supply are contaminated. Nevertheless, epidemics of cholera, dysentery and typhoid are frequent. Tuberculosis claims from three to four million persons each year.

The earlier medical missionaries were necessarily limited to the alleviation and cure of disease. Gradually medical schools were established, where native doctors and nurses were trained. Medical schools were also established by the government, but all these were merely a pittance of the tremendous need.

2. For the past decade the Rockefeller Foundation has been operating in China in an effort to promote modern medicine, both in prevention and cure of diseases. Through the China Medical Board the Pekin Union Medical College has already been reorganized and provided with a new plant of the most modern and up-to-date type, including a hospital of 225 beds.—Adapted from Service.

The Ohio Baptist Young People's Union

By EUGENE EXMAN, President

The work of the Ohio B. Y. P. U. through the year has been encouraging in every particular. New unions have been organized, old ones have been strengthened and our young folks have participated heartily in all forward movements. With thanksgiving to God for his guidance and help, the following report is submitted as a brief summary of the work since we last met in annual session:

New World Movement

Plans for starting a Baptist children's home or other beneficent project by our state organization have been held in abeyance and all efforts centered on cooperation in the New World Movement.

Letters were sent out by the president and state director, early in the spring urging that all members of unions pay up pledges to date and, if possible, give a thank offering of $1 in addition, and that every union have as a part of its program the cooperation of each member in the New World Movement.

Nearly $325 came in offerings from unions, and of course many added their offerings to that of their churches; for that reason we are not able to give credit or amounts given. Special attention should be called to the gift of $100 by the Painesville Union for Zo D. Browne's school in Bengal-Orissa.

Tithers' League

At the Ohio B. Y. P. U. convention last year, the executive committee presented twenty goals for the ensuing year. One of these was 1500 tithers. This goal has been surpassed by nearly 100, our membership now being 1526.

One of the lessons that the New World Movement has taught us, is the necessity for definite, consecrated giving, and it is a privilege to be associated with the 275,000 Baptist tithers in the United States and Canada.

Life Service League

Under the able supervision of President H. K. Masteller and Secretary-treasurer, Miss Helen Wickes, the work of the Life Service League has been put on a more thoroughly organized basis and a more definite program has been arranged.

Three hundred and sixty-two members now constitute the Life Service League in Ohio. Two young men and three young women of our Ohio group at St. Paul, made decision for Christian work at the great consecration service on the final day of the convention.

Daily Devotions League

It was the belief of the executive committee that the pledge of the Quiet-Half-

Hour League kept some young people from uniting in a fellowship with thousands of others for daily reading and prayer.

Accordingly the Ohio Daily Devotion League was instituted to take over the work of the Quiet-Half-Hour League with the following pledge: "God helping me, I will observe a daily devotional period of Bible study and prayer."

The Ohio plan was adopted by the B. Y. P. U. of A. in the convention at St. Paul. It is interesting to note that this is the second child of the Ohio B. Y. P. U. to be adopted by the national organization, the Life Service League having been born at our convention in Granville, three years ago.

Study Courses

The Christian Culture Course is an extension of the Baptist Trained Leader's Course to a three-year course. The studies comprise a very helpful course in training for B. Y. P. U. and other church work.

Individuals may take the work by registering with General Secretary White of Chicago. A diploma is granted upon the satisfactory completion of the work.

The study of missions is one of the most important elements in Christian training. Mission study classes and reading circles should be organized and carried forward by every union.

A six-weeks' foreign-mission study class, with "Lighted to Lighten" as a text and at another period a six-weeks' home-mission study class, using the book "In the Vanguard of a Race" as a text, would be a worthy ideal for every union.

Leaflets outlining these courses and giving suggestions and plans for conducting classes may be secured from our state headquarters.

The Young People's Reading Course is designed to interest members of local unions in the reading of inspirational and religious educational literature. In no way does this conflict with the Christian Culture Course or the mission study courses.

Gospel Teams

This year the state simultaneous evangelistic campaign, and other matters interfered with the work of the gospel teams, so that less was accomplished than the previous year.

Next year the gospel team work will have a greater impulse under the leadership of Mr. Kenneth Masteller, who heads that work of the Denison College Y. M. C. A.

"The Baptist"

Readers of THE BAPTIST have noted that an additional page has been given to the young people, since January 1, 1922. The annual cost of this page is about $2000, year, and the B. Y. P. U. of A. is cooperating in a campaign for new subscriptions to meet this extra expenditure. The young people of each state have been asked to operate and Ohio's quota is 253 new subscribers.

We recommend that a drive be made in every union for subscriptions at the special rate of $2, which has been granted for the months of July and August. Every one who reads THE BAPTIST appreciates its worth for young people.

The Ohio Baptist Convention

Young people's evening was one of the outstanding features of the Ohio Baptist Convention at the Fidelity Church in Cleveland.

A successful banquet with "peppy" speeches, and a playlet by some of the Cleveland young people was followed by an address by Dr. A. W. Beaven, of Rochester, on "Following the Flag."

St. Paul Convention

Ohio Baptist young people were represented at the St. Paul B. Y. P. U. of A. convention by thirty-two delegates.

Of course our own Rev. Carleton Atwater, of Cincinnati, was among the number and presided at all meetings in an efficient and admirable manner. Next year the convention goes to Boston. Let us begin plans at once to have Ohio well represented. Mr. Atwater is now Ohio's member of the Board of Managers of the B. Y. P. U. of A.

First Church, Los Angeles

My dear Brother White:

I thought you might be interested in knowing something of our summer activities here in young people's work. We find during the summer months, with the beaches on one side and the mountains on the other, that we have to be up and doing in order that our young people's meetings may not experience a slump. We have had an exceptionally good summer in all three of our societies and I am writing you of our work in B. Y. P. U. No. 1.

Toward the end of June, at a watermelon social, we decided on a summer contest. Two captains were appointed and all who were present chosen on one of two sides. Next came the matter of getting names, color, and so on. After some thought we chose the names "Summer Song Birds" and "Summer Breezes." An attractive poster, featuring on one side young people being blown by the wind, and on the other, birds singing in a tree, started the ball rolling. During the contest, in order to keep up interest, one evening the "Song Birds" had a singing canary in the vestibule and the "Breezes" an electric fan. Then one side would give a song book to every one who attended on their side, while the other offered fans. We put on special speakers each Sunday evening and the attendance ran almost to 100 on one or two nights. We had a royal good time of it and are now planning a young people's complimentary dinner.

We are suffering somewhat from lack of equipment or we would have three or four other societies started. I am planning to get a fourth one under way soon.

OLIVER U. CHAPMAN

P. S. Our third society was organized some months ago and goes under the name Radio (broadcasting for Christ). This society is flourishing under the leadership of Mr. Frank Cheeseman and is living up to its name.

Do You Know?

The Boston clearing house ranks second only to New York in the number of checks cleared.

The thirty-second anniversary convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America will be held in Boston, July 4-8, 1923. Already hundreds are planning to attend. Local societies should begin planning now to send delegates. For information about entertainment, etc. write to Rev. F. F. Peterson, Ford Bldg., Boston, Mass.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE JUNIORS

The new interest on the part of the young people in church affairs manifest everywhere should be of serious concern to all junior workers, for the juniors of today are the seniors of tomorrow. They must be won to Christ and trained in his graces, if they are to be the well-rounded Christian characters on whom the church of the future must depend, and from whom we must expect the leadership that will move the world toward God. Practical plans and programs are presented in "The Junior Society in Action" published by The Christian Culture Press, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, price 75 cents.

The Chimney Corner

With the Eyes of a Child

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

MY grandmother's library—a great, sun-splashed room lined with row upon row of books—is a place that will always live in my memory. I can close my eyes today and see again the dull heavy rugs and the broad fireplace and the faded, comfortable furniture. And I can see myself, a small girl with tight little pigtails and scratched knees, snuggled down into a great armchair with a book in my two chubby hands.

I will never forget the joy that reading brought to me. I felt, when words first began to take on definite meanings, that I had made a new and wonderful discovery. I felt that a world of precious facts, that a veritable treasure store, lay before me. And grandmother's library was the personification of the treasury; was the garden in which the precious facts grew.

A great many books, had grandmother. It seemed that she had every conceivable sort of a volume upon some shelf—as if no subject had been neglected. There were wide leather books, and narrow cloth-bound books, and rare old books, and brand new books. There were books of sermons and books of biography and history books and novels. And I dipped into each one of them—each one of them that I could reach, for some of the shelves were very high!—as an eager little bee dips into one flower after another.

I realize now that I read many books that were far—indefinitely far—beyond my young comprehension. I realize now that many of the stories that I read were scarcely juvenile. I realize it now but then I did not realize anything. I just read on and on—passing lightly over those things that I did not understand.

Certain days in that sun-splashed library stand out in high relief against the blurred background of the past. There were certain moments when I leaned against grandmother's satin-clad shoulder; other times when we stared together into the fire and watched the leaping flames build pictures. And there was one time in particular when I crept in to borrow a book and found that grandmother was serving tea to three white-haired ladies of quite evident importance.

They were kind to me, the ladies, with the unveiled condescension that some grown-ups always display toward children. They patted my head and told me that I was growing very fast and that they hoped I would always be a good girl. Yes, they were very kind until grandmother—who was never in the least condescending to children—asked me what I wanted.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

"I came up to—to borrow a book," I faltered, "may I take one home with me?" Grandmother was busy with her tea-cups but she laughed as she answered.

"What a little bookworm it is!" she said softly. And then—"But of course you may take anything you want."

It was then that the kindness of the three ladies was dissolved, as a rainbow dissolves into the darkness.

"Certainly," inquired one of them, with lifted brows, "certainly you do not permit that child to read anything she wants to read?"

"There are books here," another one of the ladies added, "that it is not right for a child to read!" And—

"I would not let the little girl have very many books," the third said sternly, "she will be getting precocious ideas into that small head of hers. I should give her only a few books to read—carefully selected ones!"

I waited, standing first on one foot and then on the other, for grandmother to speak. And, as I waited, I saw my treasure store being shut away from me—saw my garden of precious facts with a high, blank unclimbable wall all about it.

I waited, and then grandmother spoke. And when she spoke, the weight of apprehension rolled swiftly from my mind.

"I'm afraid," said my grandmother, and though her voice was exceedingly pleasant, the tone of it was firm and decided. "I'm afraid that I can't agree with you. My granddaughter is too young to be hurt by anything that she may stumble upon in a book. The good that she gets from her reading will be far greater than any possible harm! I am sure that she will pass very lightly over any of the things that she does not understand!" And then grandmother said something, very softly, about the mind of a child.

Children's Book Week Coming

The accompanying article is interesting in connection with Children's Book Week, Nov. 12-20. In the next issue of The Chimney Corner there will be special articles "Friends on the Shelf" and a fairy story for the Young Reserves called "Three Pages in the Palace of the King," in which mothers will recognize the moral behind The Flimsy Page, The Excitable Page and The Gleaming Page.

As I look back over the books that I read when I was a very small girl, I am sometimes astounded at the number that I managed to skim through—at the sophisticated titles and subjects that I dipped into. Some of the books I met, years later, in school—some of them I have found in church libraries and old book-shops. Some of them I have read again recently and I have found many new things in that second reading. And some of them I have understood in a very different way.

I doubt if any of the books in my grandmother's library were children's books. But they formed the basis of many joyous days, of many bright hours. They, some of them, mentioned subjects that children are unfamiliar with; but none of them had to do with matters that a grown-up would in any way disapprove. And that is why my grandmother's decision was such a wise one.

If grandmother, following the advice of her friends, had forbidden me to read any of her books, I might have felt that all books were wrong! I might have thought that there was something bad about the books—I might have thought that my grandmother read books that weren't proper. There were perhaps things in nearly every volume that might have troubled me—had I noticed them. But I didn't. For the child mind does pass very lightly over places that might be questioned. The child mind takes in only the best.

Sometimes I find myself wishing that the people of this world had the ability to see only the good of things, as children do. Sometimes I think that, if they had, the earth would be a very different place. When I read criticisms of things that were never intended to be unpleasant—when I see folk looking for objectionable places in beautiful works of art and literature—I sigh in longing for the child heart that accepts the earth as a wonderful place, and the people of earth as worth while!

It is easy to find unpleasantness in nearly everything—if you are looking for unpleasantness! There's hardly a rose that's perfect, if you pick apart the petals in search of flaws; even the blue sky gets its color from the dust that is in the air. The best people in the world have little habits that are irritating to other folks; the best books in the world might be misunderstood if you insist upon giving certain words and phrases a wrong construction.

Try to look at life and the things of life with the eyes of a child, friends of mine! Try to pass over the bits that might be misunderstood, with a clear mind. Where there is evil—well, that is different! When wrong exists you should try to help exterminate it. But when you have to look for unpleasantness—when you think that you may possibly have misunderstood—be charitable with the clean-hearted charity of a child! For, in looking for faults and unpleasantness, you may miss many of the most beautiful things. In looking for faults and unpleasantness you may come, in time, to the point where you can see only ugliness.

Child eyes are tolerant. And they are kind—kinder than the eyes of grown-ups, often. And they are a living illustration of the old proverb—"Unto the pure all things are pure." —Christian Herald.

How Cinderella Lost Her Cinder

CINDERELLA poked the cinders—oh, thank goodness, there was still one tiny little ember burning yet. She put small wads of paper on that bit of fire and blew it frantically into a little blaze; then ran outdoors to gather coal and sticks from the railroad tracks. Hurrying back she fed her feeble flickering blaze, she fanned it gingerly until small orange tongues of flame licked up the wood and broke into a cheerful fire, snapping and crackling. Then she sat back on her heels to watch it, but curiously enough she never guessed she was a fairy-story sort of Cinderella as she gazed into her hearth and dreamed in homesick fashion of the good old days gone by when she lived way down South in Dixie, where the sky was always sunny and the air was always warm and the neighbor-folks were friendly, and where—if you were hungry—there were always sweet potatoes roasting on the hearth and peanuts on the vine outside the door. Ah me! It was not so at present. Everything was different now. She shivered at the chill October weather, leaning nearer to her feebly crackling fire. Poor little Ella in the cinders—whatever does she dream about so sadly?

Oh, she is dreaming of a time down South in Dixie when everybody envied Ella and Bella and Della; she remembers now the three of them went strutting proudly past the less important Negro children who were not going North to live 'forever-and-a-day; she remembers all the ovel yarns they spun about the wonders that awaited them up North. "Oh, yes indeedy," Ella would be saying a dozen times a day, "I reckon that up North we-all will sure wear shoes, why ven no-count darkies wears shoes up North; 'deed they does!" And she would roll her great black eyes around excitedly and wriggle her ten bare toes in anticipation of the day when they would be encased in leather for the very first time in their lives!

As for Bella, who was two years older, her boastings were of hats; almost any time of day or night you could hear her off husky voice drawling in a new bored fashion: "Pears lak I jess can't stand to see another darky wearin' a bandanna anky knotted round her head,—up North reckon de fust thing we-all will do is buy us hats. Yes'm, with red and purple bows. Um, 'm 'm!"

And "Um 'm 'm!" her envious audience would hum in echo; wishing they too were going North where Ella would be wearing shoes and Bella wearing hats and Della carrying school-books. (For Della was the only one that aimed to "get an education!") It would be fun to tell you of the long goodbyes they said in that sleepy old plantation village, or how they nearly died of fright and pride and joy when they stepped into the railroad train after a long drive by wagon to the nearest town. They had not dreamed that trains would snort so terrifically up in front, or lurch and rattle so furiously in the middle as they rushed you through green fields up North to all the wonder places of the world.

To Ella and Bella and Della, that trip was one long magic fairy story coming true; but at their journey's end I hate to tell what rude awakenings they had. For everything went wrong. The weather was so icy cold, and the first snow of the season sifted idly down from heaven and froze their poor black noses and nipped their poor black toes. Ella's dearest wish came true and she wore shoes, but alas, the leather pinched unmercifully and she hobbled in real pain with no one to admire their shiny newness: since all the world up North wears shoes as a matter of course! If the weather was gloomy and chilly you can imagine how anxiously they looked through the streets of that town for a house. But it was a queer unpleasant thing to find day after day that no one wished to rent a house to homeless black families. And the rents were mountain high! Poor Mammy Chloe wagged her sad black head from side to side forlornly: "Pears lak we done should haf stayed down Souf in Dixie," where-upon Ella and Bella and Della groaned in misery. As for their father and their brothers, they, too, were wretched in this town where homes and work and friendliness were scarce indeed. Nobody seemed to care. Nobody! The whole town rushed by in autos or in streetcars, or rushed by on foot; but what was one new Negro family more or less, their careless glances seemed to say. One poor sad Negro family who were hungry and homeless with no place to lay their heads until the day when they found an empty shack down by the railroad track—just a ramshackle shanty of a place, but in they moved and called it "home."

Bella and Della found work in a laundry, the boys worked for a coal company, Mrs. Tully did cleaning by the day—in fact only little Ella was ever left behind among the cinders to keep house and cook and dream forlornly of the sunny care-free days down South in Dixie. She never dreamed she was a Cinderella sort of a person, with a fairy tale in store! She only knew how cold she was, and when the trains roared by along the railroad track she always shivered miserably and thought they sounded like inhuman monsters,—until the day when she discovered that if you searched long enough beside the tracks you could fill a basket with the bits of coal dropped from the snorting engines. This was the first free friendly thing she met with in all our wintry north!

But one never-to-be-forgotten day, Bella and Della came home from their laundry in evident excitement.

"I reckon it'll be a right smart party," drawled Della, "but I declare to goodness, Bella, whatever am we gwine to wear?"

Bella shook her head forlornly: "Dunno! I 'spect Mammy Chloe won't leave us spend a penny—"

"'Deed I won't," said Mammy Chloe, "ain't we got seben hungry stomachs to be filled three times a day? What for you aimin' to spend money for, you no-count gals?"

"Oh Mammy Chloe," begged Bella anxiously, "don't you go squashin' me and Della, for I reckon the norf ain't gwine to be so powerful col' as we-all been thinkin'—for today don't a fine white lady sweep into the laundry and gib us a right warm welcome to a party in the house next door the laundry. Yes ma'am, and that lady am a Baptist lady, and that house am a Baptist house specially for gals like me and Della. So up we speaks and says how we-all am Baptists, too; and she am more friendlier than ebber."

Mammy Chloe chuckled and beamed! "Do tell! O praise the Lord, he sure am good to my Bella and Della; and, honey chile, you and Della gwine to have some pennies for fine clothes. You jess wait and see!"

And meanwhile, who do you suppose was cooking supper, kneeling in the cinders and hearing all this talk while her heart was as heavy as lead? Who but our own small Cinderella?

"Ain't I invited, too?" she asked timidly.

"O laws!" laughed Della.

"Shucks, Ella," said Bella, "you ain't noffin but a little no-count darky; I reckon the mostest party you'll ebber get am gwine to be seein' me and Della all rigged up."

Ella split two hot salt tears into the kettle and prayed long and hard that night: "Oh Lord, ain't you-all ebber gwine to let me be noticed like Bella and Della? Oh Lord, I'se a drefful little no-count darky, but can't you-all git me to that party somehow or other? Amen."

And she fully thought God paid no least attention to her prayer; for the great eventful evening came. Bella and Della were gorgeous in bright new waists and doused with the most fragrant cologne you ever smelled. Poor Ella sniffed the fragrance forlornly long after they had

Our Own Folks

St. Louis

By W. E. DARROW

A great week for the Baptists of St. Louis is being planned under the direction of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of St. Louis. Dr. F. A. Agar, of the department of efficiency, Northern Baptist Convention, will be the special advisor. It will be the week of Nov. 19-24. During this week a number of lordship conferences will be held for the purpose of emphasizing solidarity, vision and efficiency. The week will be full of conferences with various leaders and workers in all our churches. There will also be combined gatherings of all our people. At its meeting, the first Monday in October, the Ministers' Conference elected Rev. Albert Linder, Ebenezer Church, president; Rev. E. L. Pinkerton, Immanuel Church, vice-president; Rev. H. A. Meyer, St. Louis Park Church, secretary-treasurer. A conference under the direction of the General Board of Promotion, Northern Baptist Convention, was held in Second Church, Dr. W. C. Bitting pastor, Oct. 30-31. The speakers were Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Washington, D. C.; Mr. W. H. Bowelf, New York; Dr. M. D. Eubank, Kansas City; Dr. Chas. A. Brooks, New York, and Mrs. Goodman of Chicago. Dr. W. C. Bitting was chairman of the committee on arrangements for this conference.

St. Louis Association Meets

The St. Louis Baptist Association held its one hundred and fifth annual session Oct. 12-13 in Immanuel Church. It was called to order by the moderator, Dr. W. G. Tytzer, who conducted the opening devotional exercises. Following the devotional exercises, words of appreciation were spoken and prayer offered in recognition of his recovery to health, and ability to be with us for this opening session of the association. He has been moderator of the association since 1907, and is a brother beloved among us. Dr. S. E. Ewing became clerk of the association the same year.

The letters from the churches were then read by Brother L. B. Arvin and the writer. There are thirty-seven churches in the association. According to reports presented, the present membership of the association is 11,248, a gain of 337 over the membership a year ago. Total Sunday-school enrolment 10,999, a gain of 488. There have been 930 baptisms the past year, a gain of sixty-five over record of 1921. The officers of last year were unanimously reelected. The writer was again selected as assistant-clerk. No requests for membership in the association. The Festus Church requested withdrawal to its own county association and the request was granted. Rev. H. C. Combs preached the annual sermon on "Adversaries and Open Doors."

Rev. A. J. Johnson of Festus conducted the Thursday afternoon devotional service. New pastors, missionaries and fraternal messengers were welcomed by the moderator. There were reports and addresses on the work of Baptist philanthropies, stewardship, religious publications and Christian education. At the evening session, the report of the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board was read by its secretary, Dr. S. E. Ewing. He then delivered an address on "Forgetting the Things That Are Behind and Stretching Forward," in which he compared the situation in 1919, when he became secretary, with the present time, showing the growth of the work during the past thirteen years. Rev. L. M. Hale delivered an address, in which he emphasized the need of concentration, cooperation and intensification.

An Amendment

The Friday morning session of the association was given to consideration of reports on missions. Dr. R. B. Whiteside of the Euclid Church preached the missionary sermon on "The Mission of Baptist People Worldwide." After a devotional service conducted by Rev. L. B. Arvin of the Water Tower Church, Mrs. J. G. Reynolds delivered an address on Baptist missionary work by and for women. An amendment to the constitution of the association was then adopted. It provided for a better coordination of the standing committees appointed by the moderator from year to year and enabling them to function during the year instead of being so largely a medium for reports at the annual meeting. There will be six standing committees: general missions, religious education, philanthropy, publications, stewardship and life service, statistics and survey. Other committees will be: Obituaries, nominations, program and enrolment, consisting of three members each. Rev. E. L. Pinkerton of the entertaining church presented the report on temperance. A resolution favoring the scratching of the names of candidates inimical to the eighteenth amendment and its proper enforcement was unanimously approved. The writer presented the report on Sunday schools and teacher training, recounting the work done by the committee during the past year and presenting a program for the training school to be held next January, including an apportionment to the churches for its expense. Dr. W. H. Geistweit presented the report on evangelism and personal service. Miss Opal Crane, of West Park Church, read the report of the St. Louis B. Y. P. U. There were addresses by Rev. R. K. Kelly of Lafayette Park Church; Dr. W. C. Bitting of Second Church; Rev. Oliver Shank of Fourth Church and Rev. H. L. Reader of Webster Groves Church. Water Tower Church was decided on as the place for the next annual meeting. Rev. Oliver Shank was selected as preacher of the annual sermon, with Rev. H. A. Meyer, of St. Louis Park Church, as alternate and Rev. Albert Linder, of Ebenezer Church, as preacher of the missionary sermon, with Rev. J. F. Plainfield, of the Italian Center, as alternate.

The Friday evening session, which closed the associational meeting, was devoted to the re-enforcement campaign.

There were addresses by Rev. W. D. Powell, of Louisville, Ky., and Dr. O. E. Bryan of Atlanta, Ga., Chairmen of the various committees were announced as follows:—Rev. L. M. Hale, general missions; Dr. W. E. Darrow, religious education; Rev. R. K. Kelly, philanthropy; Dr. R. B. Whiteside, publications; Rev. P. G. Van Zandt, stewardship and life service; Dr. S. E. Ewing, statistics and survey; Rev. H. A. Meyer, obituaries; Rev. J. W. McAtee, nominations; the executive committee of the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board, program; Rev. E. A. Partney, enrolment.

In 1910, when Dr. S. E. Ewing became secretary for the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board, the value of church property in the association was $883,200; today it is $1,464,800. During the past twelve years, there have been 7,212 added to the churches by baptism and 8,896 by letter, a total increase of 16,108. Decrease by death 889 and by letter 12,007, a total decrease of 12,896. Net gain 3,212. Membership in 1910, 8,036. Present membership, 11,248. Total disbursements by the St. Louis Mission Board since 1910, $279,299.79, an average of $21,484.59. During this time the mission board helped in the erection of the following church buildings: Calvary, $6,000; Ebenezer, $6,000; First Italian, $15,000; Fourth, $5,000; King's Highway, $30,000; Tabernacle, $12,000; St. Charles, $15,000. Total, $89,000. Independent church building effort: Delmar, $125,000; Compton Heights, $10,000; Euclid, $125,000; Immanuel, $10,000; Jewel, $2,500; Lafayette Park, $12,000; Southwest, $2,000; Third, $50,000; Antioch, $5,000; Brush Creek, $6,000; Overland, $5,000; Salem, $3,000; Villa Ridge, $4,000; Webster Grove, $12,000. A total of $371,500. Total from all sources $460,500.

Our Schools

Rochester Theological Seminary

The trustees of the Rochester Theological Seminary announce that the name of the chair heretofore designated as "The Pratt Professorship of Elocution and Sacred Oratory" is changed to "The Pratt Professorship of Practical Theology and Public Speaking," and that, in view of the retirement of Prof. John P. Silver nail from the faculty of the seminary under the provisions of its rule for retirement, Rev. John F. Vichert, M.A., D.D., has been elected as Pratt professor of practical theology and public speaking. Dr. Vichert has accepted his election to this professorship and will enter upon his duties at Rochester with the beginning of the fall term in September, 1923.

Dr. Vichert is forty-eight years of age, a graduate of McMaster University, '98, holding the degrees of M.A. and B.E. from that institution. He held a fellowship in church history in the University of Chicago in 1904-05. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Franklin College in 1912 and by McMaster University in 1919. He was pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church, Victoria, B. C., from 1899 to 1904, of First Baptist Church of Fort Wayne, Ind., 1906-12, of First Baptist Church of Providence, R. I., 1912-15. Since 1915 he has been dean of the Theological School of Colgate University and professor of pastoral and systematic theology. He is also executive secretary of the Baptist Education Society of New York state, and is president of the State Baptist Missionary Convention.

Professor Silvernail has been a member of the faculty of the Rochester Theological Seminary since 1891. He is a graduate of Hamilton College, '74, was professor of elocution in the Polytechnic Institute, Brooklyn, 1874-1884, and professor of elocution and sacred oratory in the Drew Theological Seminary, 1884-1891. He has therefore been a professor in the department of public speaking for a period of forty-eight years. His service in Rochester and elsewhere has been marked with devotion and effectiveness. The alumni of the seminary during the past more than thirty years bear testimony to the value of his work, and he is held by trustees, faculty, alumni and the student body, in high and warranted regard.

The coming of Dean Vichert will be a real source of strength to the teaching force of the seminary. Dr. Vichert is one of the best known and most highly esteemed administrators and teachers in the educational institutions of the country. It is understood that his coming to Rochester is influenced largely by his desire to give himself wholly to the work of teaching rather than longer to divide his work between teaching and administration.

Oakland City College

Dr. Allyn K. Foster writes: "I have just spent three significant days in a college which I think Baptists ought to know better. It is the Oakland City College located at Oakland City, Ind., and Dr. W. P. Dearing is the president. The college belongs to the General Baptist body and ministers almost exclusively to the rural population in southern Indiana and adjacent states. It is the only college in fourteen counties stretching across the southern section of Indiana. The campus was formerly the hog-yard of one of Dr. Dearing's relatives. It takes a good deal of Christian vision to transform a hog-yard into a great educational institution and Dr. Dearing and his associates within the past thirty years have brought this dream true. Rarely have I faced such serious-minded teachers and students. This college furnishes a large proportion of the teachers of all Indiana and it ought to have the moral and financial support of all Christian people. Just now the college needs books, any sort of bound substantial books. In order to reach a required standard in the state they must have 2,000 additional volumes. I am wondering if in many private libraries there may not be a number of useful books which could earn a fine dividend by being sent to Oakland City College. One book or a collection of books would be most welcome to this really important institution. I hope this little note of mine may result in many people culling from their libraries books for the use of these earnest students. Address Dr. W. P. Dearing, Oakland City, Ind."

Sioux Falls College

Two generous gifts within the past month have stirred the enthusiasm and hopefulness of the friends of the college. Mr. W. W. Palmer of Valley Springs, S. D., has given a farm of 160 acres on the annuity plan. This is a most remarkable piece of stewardship on the part of a Christian brother in modest financial circumstances and furnishes a challenge to the rest of our friends who believe in Christian education.

The other gift is a promise of $10,000 forthcoming before the end of the year along with the name of the unknown donor. This arrives at a most opportune moment, for it makes possible what otherwise could not have been carried out, a plan for the erection of the central heating plant, together with the large new gymnasium, both of stone construction.

The enrolment in college classes has broken all previous records and has already reached a total nearly twice as large as educational experts predicted a few years ago would ever be secured in Sioux Falls. The spirit of the student body and faculty is enthusiastic and wholesome.

Kalamazoo College

Special exercises were held at the opening of college for the installation of the new president, Dr. Allan Hoben, A.B. University of New Brunswick, 1895; Ph.D. University of Chicago, '01. Graduate Newton Theological Seminary, 1908; Pastor First Church, Detroit; associate professor of practical theology at University of Chicago, professor of sociology, Carleton College, Northfield, Minn.

On this occasion there were addresses by Mr. F. M. Hodge who spoke for the board of trustees, Hon. Grant M. Hudson, of Lansing, representing the state convention, and Mr. George H. Martin, president of the alumni association. Doctor H. L. Stetson then delivered his farewell address as president of Kalamazoo College and gave his charge to Doctor Hoben. President Hoben fittingly responded expressing his hope for the bigger and better Kalamazoo College.

The fall work in Kalamazoo College has been well launched with the largest attendance in the history of the institution. The new president, Doctor Allan Hoben has taken hold of his task with energy and enthusiasm. The college attendance has had a marked increase each year for the past several years. Statistics show 167 new students this year and eight former students, making a total of 175 students who were not members of last year's student body. The school was in a very crowded condition last year and the very marked increase this year created an almost impossible situation so far as ability to care for the student body was concerned. Dr. Hoben took the matter up with the trustees at once and at his request they authorized the construction of a temporary building which is now well along and will be ready for occupancy Nov. 1. The new building is a frame structure, one story high, and will provide three class rooms and two offices. The construction of this temporary building is indicative of the importance of the expansion program in which Kalamazoo College is now engaged.

Emphasis is still being given to the women's dormitory fund in connection with the development program. Sixty thousand dollars has been pledged of which $30,000 has been paid. At a recent meeting of the state board of promotion approval was given to the women's organization of the state to make a new allotment to the women's societies. It is expected that through this new procedure sufficient will be pledged during the winter to warrant the construction of the building.

Grand Island

Prof. A. J. Bissinger, department of education of Grand Island College, Neb., has been applying to the men running for political offices the mental test idea. The experience with such tests in schools and in the army suggested to him the possibility of extending the plan to political affairs. Through the questionnaire which he sent out to the candidates he sought information regarding personal qualifications for the positions sought. The work done in this field by Professor Bissinger has attracted the attention of some of the eastern publishers and they have asked him to submit a manuscript on the subject. He is now planning the publication of a book under the title of "Self Revealing Tests for Political Candidates."

Questions were sent out to forty state candidates this year, and responses were received from twenty-five. The value of the answers varies with the individuals. Some of the questions sent are as follows:

1. Indicate your motives or reasons for wanting the office you seek.
2. State briefly the plans, policies or projects you expect to undertake for the welfare of the public, if elected.
3. Use specific terms in describing what you are now doing to advance school, church or welfare enterprises.
4. Write here any ideals for social progress and for public welfare, and state the standards of efficiency which you are going to try to live up to, if elected.

This is the beginning of a very important application of psychology. It is our duty to know something of the candidates who are seeking offices in the state or nation.

The enrolment at The Grand Island College is 26 more than the enrolment last year at this time. The selection of subjects by students this year is rather interesting. The departments of Education and English have the largest number of students. The next department in numbers enrolled is Biblical Literature. History is fourth. Modern Language fifth. Biology sixth.

DOCTOR ALLAN HOBEN

International Baptist Seminary

Ardor has marked the beginning of the winter session. More students are enrolled and more classes are being conducted this year than previously. About sixty students are here now and the number is augmented from time to time.

The first anniversary of the birth of the seminary was celebrated on Columbus Day by a formal reopening. The chairman of the committee which had the afternoon in charge, was Mrs. Edgar O. Silver, who is also chairman of the Women's Auxiliary of the seminary. For a time the guests enjoyed the privileges of "open house" and of meeting the students, and then all assembled for a short program.

Mr. Mornay Williams, of New York, offered prayer, and Rev. Ray Hunt, secretary of the Ministerial Conference of the Oranges, extended to the school felicitations from that body. Songs by the whole student body, by the Russian department, and by a double quartette of Russians as well as violin selections by Victor Czabodi, of the Hungarian department, contributed to the entertainment. At the close of the program Mrs. Silver invited all to partake of "pleasant bread" in the dining room. Here she presided graciously and was assisted by Mrs. Mangano of East Orange and Mrs. Swanson of Montclair, who poured.

Bethel Institute

Work at Bethel Institute opened up encouragingly with 202 students, of which thirty-eight are preparing to enter the seminary as ministerial students and a large number preparing for other forms of missionary work in the academy and twenty-nine in the Seminary. There is an increasing number in the Christian Workers' Training School of which no definite number can be given as yet.

Among those participating in the training school are Mrs. J. J. Runyan, Rev. E. A. Valiant, Dr. George Earl, of the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association, Rev. John A. Swanson, St. Paul, Rev. Ragnar A. Arlander, Minneapolis, together with the faculty of the academy and the Bethel Theological Seminary.

The outlook has never been brighter or more encouraging than at the present time. The campus has been put in order for football, a double tennis-court has been prepared, and a full radio outfit, a gift of last year's senior class to the school, is in complete working order. A home economics department to be taught by Mrs. Edna Peterson-Kent has been begun.

Hillsdale, Michigan

One hundred thirty cities, twelve states, and five foreign countries are represented in Hillsdale's student body this year. There are students registered from Peking and Shai, China; Nevrocap, Bulgaria; Paie Malu, Hawaii; Maji, Japan. The freshmen number over 185 of whom 105 are men and eighty are women. There are several in the classes who have passed their thirtieth birthdays, and one senior who will graduate before he is twenty years old.

The pennant which annually is awarded to that high school, other than Hillsdale, which sends the largest delegation will this year go to Jackson.

Another generous addition to the "Great War Collection" of volumes has just been reported by Miss Hazel M. French, librarian. The books to the number of 120 are the gift of Judge W. E. Ambler of Cleveland, president of the board of trustees of Hillsdale College and benefactor of the college in various ways and on many occasions.

These volumes now on the way to Hillsdale College will be placed in the Ambler Alcove reserved for Great War Literature and will face the Hill collection of rare Civil War volumes. Mr. Ambler is also the donor of a large library of fiction which occupies one whole section of shelves in the library stackroom and is known as the Ambler Alcove of Fiction. Besides his benefactions to the college library the Ambler Home Economics Practice House stands as a monument of his loyalty to his alma mater. The library has now a unique and unusually complete collection of World War literature serviceable to advanced students in the department of history over which Professor D. M. Fisk has supervision.

Redlands

University of Redlands began the work of its fourteenth academic year Wednesday, Sept. 20. The enrolment at the present time is considerably larger than the enrolment at the corresponding time in any previous year. The dormitories are filled to capacity. A few women and many men have been forced to find accommodations in homes in the city. The house which was built as a home for the president of the university is being used as a dormitory for women. Increased attendance will necessitate additional room for lectures and recitations and additional teachers, as it is the policy of the administration to have reasonably small classes, which is one of the decided advantages in the small college. The faculty for the year has been increased by the addition of four members: Seldon W. Cummings, A. B., LL. B., D. D., has been appointed to the Crawford Chair of biblical, missionary and ethical instruction. Mrs. Allen C. Keith has been appointed dean of women, and assistant professor of mathematics. Mrs. Keith is a graduate of Wellesley College, where she majored in mathematics. William T. Darby, A. B. and A. M. from Yale University, has been added to the teaching force in the department of English. Miss Eleanor Sykes has been appointed assistant professor of romance languages. She is a graduate of Syracuse University and has spent the last three years teaching and studying in Spain, and traveling throughout Europe. Charles H. Abbott, who has both his baccalaureate and doctorate from Brown University, has been appointed to the chair of zoology, which was made vacant last year by the death of George Robertson.

Dr. James Whitcomb Brouger addressed the students and faculty at assembly Wednesday, Oct. 11. He spoke from the passage, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Miss Amy Lee Stockton is to be at the University Oct. 17-27 under the auspices of the Young Women's and the Young Men's Christian Associations. She will speak each morning at the chapel hour, and each evening immediately after the dinner hour in assembly hall. Miss Stockton was in Redlands last spring, where she was engaged in a series of evangelistic services at First Church.

Bacone College

Mrs. Susanna Butler, a Creek Indian of Oklahoma, has just given the American Baptist Home Mission Society $50,000 for the endowment of Bacone College, Bacone, Okla. Mrs. Butler being a restricted Indian, it was necessary to secure the approval of the commissioner of Indian affairs before she could make this donation. This approval was secured Sept. 22, and the society has the money. The commissioner also on the same date, approved a gift of $10,000 from Mrs. Selma Starr, another Creek Indian, to the Home Mission Society, for the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home, also located at Bacone. Some of the Indians are giving good returns on the money invested in Home Missions. But many of the Indians, the majority of them, are desperately poor. Let me give you a specific case.

A Cherokee Indian boy 18 years of age, an orphan, who has been mistreated and kicked about by every one, who has no land, no money, and no friends, appealed to me in the summer to enter Bacone College. I could not receive him because he had no funds, and I had accepted all such students that it was possible for me to take. He was forced by the officials to enter a government school. He remained in the government school two weeks and then ran away, walking over 200 miles to get to Bacone. He reached here in the night, hunted me up, and in tears plead with me to keep him. I did so, though I do not know how I can clothe him. This gives you some idea as to the standing of Bacone among the Indian people.—B. D. WEEKS, President.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

CONNECTICUT

THE FIRST CHURCH, NEW BRITAIN, has exemplified the New Testament admonition concerning hospitality, in an unusual and gracious way. The state convention was to meet with this church Oct. 16-18, and the church felt that its facilities for such a meeting were entirely inadequate. Under the beautiful audience room of the church building was an unimproved and darksome region extending the full length of the building. Last May the task of transforming this dismal hole began, and two days before the convention was to meet, the painters laid down their brushes with the work completed. Five thousand dollars had been expended in excavating and finishing a spacious and attractive room capable of seating at table nearly 500 people, with a fully-equipped kitchen, and with cloak rooms and other conveniences for the entertainment of a large crowd. The church has secured for its future work a valuable addition to its plant; but the work was done primarily for the sake of the convention.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REV. BENJ. R. HARRIS, for a number of years pastor of Paige Street Church, Lowell, and for several years pastor of Merrimack Street Church, Manchester, N. H., has resigned from the pastorate of the latter church, effective Nov. 1, 1922. Brother Harris will move to his home in Bradford, N. H. and take a year's rest from active pastoral work. Alfred W. Burnham has been elected chairman, and Geo. C. Carter clerk of the ministerial committee, to secure a new pastor for the Merrimack Street Church at Manchester.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE CHURCH AT RANDOLPH, under the pastorate of Rev. E. S. Philbrook has had frequent additions to its membership. The ordinance of baptism was administered at a service July 23 and again Oct. 15. During the summer extensive repairs have been made upon the church property and the outlook for the winter's work is most encouraging.

REV. ERNEST L. LOOMIS, SEVEN YEARS pastor at Milford, has received a call to the South Baptist Church, Boston. He has wrought a good work at Milford, and is strong there, but is expected to yield to the attraction of the hard field in Boston. The church has purchased a parsonage for him.

THE BOSTON MINISTERS AT THEIR meeting Oct. 15 had a practical and frank discussion of the mid-week prayer meeting. Nothing new was developed, but most of the modern difficulties of that service were described, and many suggested ways of meeting them were impressively put forth.

MASSACHUSETTS BAPTISTS ARE RICH in women pastors. Not yet in quantity, but certainly in quality. We have four of them: Mrs. C. E. Tedford at Pocasset, Miss Elizabeth Campbell at Bolton, Mrs. Laura E. Hartley at Marshfield, and Mrs. Emma J. Parkes at Bellingham. The last two are widows of Baptist ministers. All four of them are doing remarkably well and find favor with the people and keep their confidence. They preach well, and in many little matters that will escape a man, they show a fruitful efficiency. The children especially hear them gladly.

VERMONT

THE MONTELEIR CHURCH has sustained a loss through the death of Mrs. George Goodwin, wife of Deacon George Goodwin. Since 1880 she had been a staunch, faithful member, and her beautiful character has borne a testimony of lasting value to the church and community.

Woodstock Association

The one hundred and thirty-ninth annual meeting of the Woodstock Association met with the First Church of Saxton's River, Oct. 11. The devotional services of the day were conducted by Rev. I. M. Maxwell, Rev. W. E. Lombard, and Rev. E. E. Eno. The sermon was preached by Rev. W. B. Chase, of Ludlow. Miss Margaret Suman, of the Philippines, spoke on the work of the Foreign Mission Society in the islands, and the necessity for a greater work there. Rev. Selden Roberts, of the Publication Society, gave an address on Bible school work, not especially on getting and training leaders for the work. Rev. Joseph Taylor, of China, was the speaker of the evening. He begged for advance, rather than retreat, and warned us not to get into China's rut, of being satisfied with most. President Wallace W. Nichols, of the state convention, spoke on the needs of the state, and Dr. Davison, state secretary, gave facts and figures regarding the unchurched in the state which startled even the most conservative. Rev. J. M. Maxwell, of Bellows Falls, presented the plans of the Ministers' Conference for the next year, and they were endorsed and adopted by the delegates. Miss Adelle Orton, secretary of literature for the convention, presented the missionary literature for the year, and also the missionary and educational contest which is now going on among the Baptist churches of the state. The women's session was presided over by Miss Ada A. Brigham of Bennington, and she with Mrs. John Greenwood of Chester, led a discussion of the women's plans for the associational year and the work of the continuation campaign. Resolutions were adopted, looking forward to an advance along all lines of work, but especially in soul-winning, Bible school work, missionary endeavor, and church repairs. The moderator elected for the year, is Rev. John M. Maxwell, of Bellows Falls; the clerk of last year, Rev. E. W. Johnson, East Wallingford, was reelected.

NEW YORK

SEPT. 24, LAKE AVENUE CHURCH, Rochester, held a farewell service for Rev. and Mrs. S. D. Bawden. Mr. Bawden is missionary pastor of the church in Kavali, India, being one of the six missionary pastors of the church. He has charge of the work among the criminal tribes. Mr. and Mrs. Bawden and their two children, Herbert and Dorothea, who are in Denison University, came on to be with members of the church for three days before the parents sailed. The annual fall reception of the church was turned into a farewell for Mr. and Mrs. Bawden, and they were presented with a check for $1100 to secure an automobile and other equipment to make their work more comfortable in India. The pastor, Dr. A. W. Beaven, is preaching his annual series of fireside sermons dealing with religion in the home. For ten years Dr. Beaven has given each fall a series of sermons of this kind in the belief that the application of religion to the love life and the home life forms one of the most universal problems. The attendance at this series has been large. A fellowship hour around the fireplace in the social hall of the church is one of the features of the evening. The church is inaugurating the fall term of its mid-week Wednesday night club work. This has been carried on for nine years, Lake Avenue being a pioneer along the church night line. A supper and social hour is followed by prayer meeting and that, in turn, by classes. One class is taught by Prof. Moehlmann of the Rochester Theological Seminary on "The Religion of Israel" and is part of the three-year course in the School of Religion carried on by the church for its teachers in its religious educational work and for other members of the church who desire to attend. At the same hour the School of Missions is carried on with a course of lectures on different phases of work in the mission field. Among the speakers will be Prof. Benninghoff of Waseda University, Japan; Rev. Clarence E. Cheney of Maubin, Burma; Mrs. E. L. Humphreys of San Salvador.

DELAWARE

MR. THOMAS MACDONALD WAS ORDAINED by the North Church, Wilmington, Oct. 13. The moderator of the meeting was Rev. E. E. Washburn and the clerk Rev. Ralph H. Stoll. Mr. MacDonald is associate director of the Russian Bible Society, New York.

MICHIGAN

THE CHURCH AT GREENVILLE had no parsonage when they called to the pastorate Rev. J. H. Perry a little less than one year ago. The church owned an adjoining lot and a building committee was appointed with S. T. Metzger as chairman. October 1 the pastor and family moved into a comfortable up-to-date parsonage with all bills paid except about $700. Every department of the work is in good condition.

REV. W. C. ROOF WHOSE RESIGNATION at Fowlerville was announced in a recent issue has accepted the call to Corunna instead of Vernon. Rev. H. C. Huey has accepted the call to Vernon.

THE BETHEL CHURCH OF KALAMAZOO, Rev. H. S. Bullock, pastor, burned its mortgage at a recent meeting. Mr. Bullock has served for four years, during which time extensive improvements have been made upon the church property and 111 new members have united with the church, 64 of these by baptism.

THE CHURCH AT GOODSELLS HAS received, as a result of special meetings held by Evangelist Littrell, eleven new members. The pastor, Rev. Asa Hoskins, serves the churches at Richmond, Columbus and Goodells.

MISS ELSIE ROWE of Camden led the Hillsdale College Y. W. C. A. in the impressive annual "Recognition Service," when nearly 100 college women signed Y. W. C. A. pledge cards.

OHIO

REV. H. B. MELLINGER HAS RESIGNED as pastor of the church at West Jefferson and will close his work Dec. 31. His plans for the future are not determined. He may be addressed at West Jefferson.

AT GRANVILLE RECENTLY more than 250 members of the congregation joined an agreement to read the scripture and pray each day. They used the following decision: "Because the Bible is God's word of power in the lives of men and will work if given a chance, I agree, along with others, to take time each day to read a portion of scripture, meditate on it and pray. I will do this for six months from this date. If for unavoidable reasons I miss a day, I'll take the next and go right on." Most of these will use the "Daily Bible Readings" prepared by Mrs. Montgomery and others, published for distribution by the General Board of Promotion.

CAN THE GREATEST BAPTIST SUNDAY school in the world be built up in the down town district of Cleveland? This is the question which has been asked by many since the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, under the leadership of its pastor, Dr. W. W. Bustard and Dr. Lewis Entzigmier of New Orleans, declares it can. A school organization of about 200 teachers and officers has been set up in order to meet the demand of the thousands of pupils who will be drawn to the Sunday school as a result of the recent census which has been taken of the district contiguous to the church and the follow-up methods that are now being adopted. Mr. Entzigmier claims that the increase in attendance of the Sunday school of the First Baptist Church of Ft. Worth, Texas—from 250 to a regular attendance of 4,000—is the result of the method now being put into operation in Euclid Avenue. This undertaking is being carried out with a view that when the new $1,000,000 church planned by this congregation and to be erected in the near future is completed, there will be in operation a Sunday school correspondingly large. Many churches of all denominations in Cleveland are watching with interest the result of this effort and will rejoice in its success.

Cincinnati

THE MIAMI ASSOCIATION was held with the Norwood Baptist church. The marked advance this year in baptisms was very gratifying. The New World Movement pledges have been kept up well and the missionary spirit is fine.

On Oct. 8 occurred the corner-stone laying of the Oakley Church. This church is under the leadership of Rev. A. W. Denlinger and is making a place for itself in the Oakley community. The Cincinnati Baptist Union is assisting it.

The Westwood Church, which celebrated its one hundredth anniversary last year has recently called to its pastorate Dr. W. M. Smith, of Covington, Ky. This historic field is reorganizing for real work.

The Lincoln Park Church, whose pastor is Carl W. Atwater, has a great program outlined for the year. Rally Day was the beginning of its new program. The Sunday school gave a pageant and the attendance exceeded 1,000. This church has organized an Old People's B. Y. P. U. as one of the new features of their program.

Rev. J. H. Spindler of the King's Mills Church in the Miami Association has plans made for a $9,000 addition to the church for the housing of the Sunday school.

Dr. P. F. CAUDILL of the First Church, Hamilton, recently resigned and will return to a former pastorate in Virginia. Dr. Caudill did a splendid work there. He received over 100 into the membership of that church last year.

ILLINOIS

THE CHURCH at TOULON EXTENDED a unanimous call to Rev. Ray Starr of Paw Paw, Ill. He has accepted and will begin his new work at an early date.

IOWA

WHEN PASTOR G. W. FOGG went to Corydon, Iowa, as pastor, he made the remark that he would like to see the auditorium filled at a regular preaching service. The desire was granted on the evening of Oct. 15, when he preached on "Pentecostalism and Its Errors," following a series of tent meetings on the part of Pentecostals in the town. The entire seating capacity of the church was utilized. The service was more than two hours long and not a person left before the close. Pastor and Mrs. Fogg are well into the second year of the work at Corydon and in many ways the work looks very auspicious.

WISCONSIN

ALBERT ALF, of the SECOND CHURCH of Pound, was ordained Sept. 27. Mr. Alf comes from a preaching family, his father being one of the first Polish Baptist preachers in Russia. His brother, formerly with the Second Church, is now doing relief and missionary work in Russia. There were five churches represented in the council. Dr. A. LeGrand presided and preached the sermon.

REV. H. G. GRANDHOLM, of CADILLAC, Mich., has accepted the call to the Honey Creek Church to succeed Ralph Barry who will become one of the field workers of the convention on Nov. 1. Mr. Grandholm has had considerable experience in rural work and comes to one of the greatest rural fields in the whole land.

Mrs. FRANK LONG, FOR SEVERAL YEARS in charge of the women's work in Wisconsin, was recently bereaved in the death of her husband. Mr. Long was reared in the Baptist church, of Webster City, Iowa, and was a rising young layman of Milwaukee. He was a commercial artist by profession. The death of Mr. Long came at the beginning of the sessions of the state convention in Wisconsin. Tokens of love and sympathy were sent to the family by the convention and the women's organization. Mrs. Long is the daughter of Dr. W. T. Dorward, for many years the pastor of the Tabernacle Church of Milwaukee.

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Tabernacle Church, of Milwaukee, appropriate resolutions were unanimously passed recognizing the work of Dr. W. T. Dorward who retired from the pastorate of the church Sept. 1, after nearly twelve years of service. Dr. Dorward has not yet settled with a church, being unsettled by reason of the long illness of his son-in-law, Frank Long. However, he is preaching nearly every Sunday, and lecturing as opportunity offers. The church has not yet chosen a successor to Dr. Dorward.

REV. B. P. RICHARDSON OF HASTINGS, Neb., has been called to the pastorate of the White Temple Church, Walla Walla, Wash.

A SERIES OF ASSOCIATIONAL conferences conducted by Supt. A. H. Bailey and Rev. J. R. George, field missionary, setting forth the Northern Baptist Convention program was held during September and October. A very large per cent of the churches are following the program.

REV. E. C. SCOTT OF HARRINGTON, Wash., has accepted the pastorate of the First Church of Clarkston, Wash.

A SHORT TIME AGO THE GREAT SAW-MILL and factory belonging to A. C. White at Laclede, Idaho, was burned. Almost the entire community of Laclede is of Baptist sentiment. A new site for the mill and factory has been chosen near Sandpoint, Idaho, twelve miles up the Pond Orielle River. The entire town is being moved on barges to the new location. The Baptist church of Laclede united with the Sandpoint Church. Rev. A. F. White of Caldwell, Idaho, has been called to the pastorate of the united church and is already on the field.

THE SAMARITAN HOME OF SPOKANE, an institution which provides a comfortable home for old people, requested the East Washington and North Idaho Baptist Convention to take over the supervision of their work and elect their trustees in the future. The convention has accepted this responsibility and the home is now under Baptist supervision.

MONTANA
REV. EDWIN S. STUCKER, EVANGELIST, of Ottawa, Kansas, will be with Pastor W. D. Whan at the First Church, Billings, Montana, Oct. 18 to Nov. 5 inclusive. The music will be in charge of a local leader. The Billings church is one of the strong churches of the great Northwest. In bringing Dr. Stucker to this state at this time it was the hope of the Billings pastor and church that others in this section might also secure his services while near. The evangelist has left his fall dates open until now and pastors or committees may write to Rev. W. D. Whan, Billings, if they desire his services after Nov. 5.

REV. GEORGE MACDOUGALL closed his work recently at Dillon and Oct. 22 took up the duties of stated supply pastor with the First Church of Lewistown.

REV. D. L. MCGRIFF closed a three years' pastorate with Emmanuel Church of Great Falls Oct. 8, and began work immediately with the Ebenezer Church of Helena.

REV. C. A. IRVIN was compelled by serious illness to resign recently as pastor at Hardin. His work was of a high order.

DISTRICT MISSIONARY ERNEST CLUTTERBUCK of Darby suffered an acute attack of appendicitis on Oct. 20. He was operated on at the Hamilton hospital the same day and his condition is reported as favorable.

THE CHURCH AT LAUREL is erecting a parsonage. With two or three minor bills all the labor and part of the material were donated so that the completed building of four rooms and bath with basement will cost only about $1,200.

doctrinal differences, to get behind the denominational program and really do something worthy to commemorate such an occasion.

After certain matters of routine, Rev. E.
Scott Farley, Suffield, preached the annual sermon, Romans 1:14, on "Discharging Our Social Debt." Rev. D. B. Mac-Queen followed with an address on the "Sinews of War." Mr. MacQueen took for his theme "Pentecost and Property," showing the relation of the two and how a Christian should use his property.
This was a practical presentation of Christian stewardship and if believed and practised by all Northern Baptists, we would have $100,000,000 by April 30, 1924.

After luncheon the business of the convention was resumed. An interesting feature of this session was the presentation, by Rev. R. Maplesden, secretary of Suffield School, of several of the boys from the school, who told why they were at Suffield. This was followed by the women's program, which is now a part of the main convention program. Miss Mary
L. Howard introduced Mrs. J. B. Kent,
Mrs. W. T. Thayer, Mrs. G. C. Laudens-lager, Mrs. F. W. Payne, state officials;
Miss Marion Lathrop and Miss Marion
Haskell, New England secretaries, Mrs.
J. D. Rough, continuation campaign director last year—all of whom carried the crowd with them as they told of their plans for the present year. Miss Blanche Parks delivered the address of the occasional on "Work Among the Foreigners."

Separate suppers were served to men and women. 175 men, 60 per cent of whom were laymen, and 300 women gave a good account of themselves at this time. Dr.
Joseph Taylor, of China, spoke to both groups. Mr. Albert L. Scott, of Boston, chairman of the General Board of Promotion, also spoke to the men. Mr. Scott discussed the denominational situation and program from a business man's point of view.

The speakers at the evening session were Mrs. George Caleb Moor, New York, and again Dr. Taylor of China. "The Contagion of the Cross" and "China in Transition" were the subjects of these addresses.

Wednesday opened clear and somewhat colder, nevertheless there was a good attendance. An extra session had been added in order to coordinate the "setting-up conference program" with the program of the convention. Dr. W. A. Hill, New York,
Mrs. H. E. Goodman, Chicago, and Dr. P.
H. J. Lerrigo made notable addresses.
Dr. Hill and Mrs. Goodman spoke respectively on "Missionary Education,"
"Woman's Organization and Woman's Responsibility" in the cooperative program. Mrs. Goodman appeared twice on the program.

How Cinderella Lost Her Cinder

left the shack for the party, and she sat down among the cinders on the hearth and wept, exactly as a Cinderella should, little knowing that a pumpkin and a fairy godmother were even then upon their way to rescue her.

Rat-a-tat-tat on the door!

"Goody gracious!" started Mammy Chloe, and went over to open it.

"Does Bella Tully's sister Ella live here?" asked a voice, and a lady came inside. O, a regular fairy godmother of a person she was, it was plain to be seen.

Ella nodded her head, too tongue-tied to speak.

"Then, my dear, we've come to take you to our Hallowe'en party at the Center. Bella and Della arrived rather early and I was asking them about where they lived and who was in the family when I learned about you. And my dear, we just can't have a party without you, so do come along with me now, won't you? This little girl with the pumpkin is Sally Snyder."

"Sakes alive!" sighed Ella, wondering if this were just a dream rising out of the cinders. But the Jack o'lantern seemed to wink a saucy eye at her, and she knew she was awake. Too much awake, alas, for she groaned: "I'd admire to go, but Bella and Della they doused ebbery drop of that there pairfume on their own selves, and I ain't got no party clothes, either. I see too drefful sooty and shabby—"

"Nonsense," smiled the lady, "let me tell you something, Ella,—the minute I get better acquainted with Bella and Della I shall tell them that such gay clothes and such cheap cologne are in very poor taste. Also Sally and I knew you wouldn't be ready to come to a party, so we want you to be a ghost. See, we brought a sheet to drape you in—like this, with a white mask over your face. And you must say 'Ough—ough!' in a deep groaning way to scare everybody. I think it will be great fun, don't you?"

Ella rolled her big black eyes excitedly, and went skipping down the street hand-in-hand with Sally Snyder. Beside the shanty poor Mammy Chloe said to the lady from the Center: "I'se powerful 'bliged to you for all your goodness to my chilluns. I reckon the Lord's gwine to make the Norf a fine place for the Tullies to live in, lady."

"I reckon he is," said the missionary, "and I'm sure of this, Mrs. Tully, that the Baptists are going to help, too."

"Praise the Lord!" sighed Mammy Chloe, happily.

"It Is to Laugh"

"Are you on a diet?" asked one traveling man of another, who was eating nothing but crackers and milk. "No, on commission," was the reply.

Breathless Passenger: "I say, porter, can I catch the four-forty to Puddlecombe?"

Porter: "Oh, ay, very likely; it's only got five minutes' start of yer!"—London Opinion.

Minister on the way to preach at morning service meets one of his parishioners going in opposite direction.

Minister: "Where are you going, Babbitt?"

Babbitt: "To church in yonder parish."

Minister: "That displeases me. How would you like it if your sheep strayed to other fields than your own?"

Babbitt: "Well, so far as that's concerned I'd say 'Good for 'em if the pasture's any better!'" denomination

Occasionally we hear of some well meaning individual who objects to having stereopticon or moving pictures in his church.

If you know of such a person it might prove enlightening to give him some facts. Over 10,000 churches in America, including every denomination, report excellent results from the use of the moving picture outfit that they use. Suitable films and slides are readily available for Sunday school and young peoples work. Also for mission and bible study classes. And for clean wholesome entertainment. It doesn't require an expert to run a modern moving picture machine of good make. And the cost of securing and using an outfit need not prohibit even a very small church or church school from having one.

May we tell you about the many advantages and uses of the improved Acme S. V. E.—the only practical combined moving picture and stereopticon machine on the market? And about our special easy payment plan? The coupon below is for your convenience.

Our Book Shelf

Sidelights on American Literature, by Fred Lewis Pattee. New York: The Century Co. $2.

Not ordinary side-lights—rather, flash-lights, searchlights these are, revealing wholly new aspects and considerations, unbiased judgments of a group of figures in American literature—O. Henry, H. L. Mencken, Jack London, Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, Longfellow, Philip Freneau, Bryant and Poe. Whether or not the reader agrees with Mr. Pattee, he will find himself surprised and stimulated, perhaps sometimes slightly shocked at views so different from the stereotyped acceptance of these writers. It is a book worth reading and worth owning.

The Return of Christ: The Bible Basis of the Doctrine. By F. L. Piper D.D. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co.

Our premillennial friends are generous even to profusion of books, sermons and pamphlets contending for the second advent faith once given unto the saints. This volume traces prophecies of it and allusions to it throughout the two Testaments. It is a thoroughly biblical discussion and very instructive as a scriptural hand book on the subject. Possibly thinkers of an opposite school would charge to the author strained interpretations of text and dislocated prophetic allusions which they would disallow; others will hold it as a classic on the subject.

This book is the distillation resulting from a process of testing and readjustment precipitated by the war at its sequence, "the strange thing we call a Peace." The author, who belongs to a group engaged in writing for the Christian Revolution Series, set himself to discover, "what was essential and distinctive in the ethical teaching of Jesus." A survey of various definitions of justice ends with the conclusion that "the essential element in justice is the valuation of personality." This emphasis upon personality dominates the discussion throughout. The idea of retributive justice, the author contends, must give way to the divine principle which has its human expression in the family life, namely, the recovering of the offender and making him just and good. "All our thinking about justice must be in terms of the family, not of the court of law."

Church Finance and Social Ethics, by Bishop Francis J. McConnell. New York: Macmillan. $1.50.

In these 130 pages Bishop McConnell has packed a great deal of information and much of helpful suggestion concerning the church as owner, solicitor, philanthropist, investor, employer, and also Christian expenditure, missionary effort and financial policy and the relation of all this to the Body of Christ. Church organizations have never handled such large sums as at present and these sums are to grow larger rather than smaller. Money has power in church and state and although modern Christians oppose the union of church and state, this nation will be practically complete if the money power rules both. "Economics have more to do with the life of man than any other interest." The church therefore is in danger of being tied to the present social and industrial order and remaining static. Such great sums of money may lead the church to conform to secular standards.

The church cannot be separated from money but it must remain Christian. Its example is worth more to the world than its principles about how to use money. Bishop McConnell shows that the church may show the way as the Christian owner, solicitor and philanthropist. The methods of handling funds in institutions need to give a correct interpretation of Christ. Investments of institutions and individual Christians should be in a "white list," which includes industries living up to the best social light we have. All of those working for the church should be treated on a Christian basis. There can be no true building of the Body of Christ without a Christian practice of the money issue.

"Stories and Poems for Public Addresses" by Rev. A. Bernard Weber. New York: Doran Co. $1.50.

This book contains a multiplicity of subjects illustrated by anecdotes, poems and testimonies which immediately attract the reader as to its usefulness. These illustrations, whether by poem or story are fresh, new and to the point, and will be found of great help to the preacher or public speaker. The religious side, that is the illustrations adaptable to sermonic work, are especially to be commended. The humorous stories are pithy and very appropriate for this purpose.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

APPRECIATION AND SUGGESTION

"Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue."

With this apt quotation from Corinthians, came a pungent letter from a man in whose judgment and knowledge I have high confidence. But because he, with his usual modesty, marked the letter "personal," I shall reprint the letter, omitting his name. The points he makes are too valuable and too much to the point to be slighted. The personal references are encouraging—may his feeling towards this music page spread and deepen! Now for the letter:

"Let me have a chance to say a word in appreciation of the good work you are doing in your 'Music Corner' of THE BAPTIST. I don't know anything technically about this great subject; and I would not know how to criticize (professionally) what singers or organists do; but I know what seems to me to be fitting and helpful. So you will let me thank you for your efforts to improve our church music.

"May I say that I heartily wish those who minister to us in song would all set themselves (as your wife has done) to 'sing the English language as a thing of beauty and distinctness.' And especially when the singing is done in a service of devotion. To my mind indistinctness is unpardonable in a service devoted to worship. It is bad enough in a musical entertainment, where listeners go for the sake of the music only; the "concord of sweet sound" is the main thing there. But there are services where song makes its fine contribution when the words are clear, but the performance is a farce when they are not. Recently I was in a most delightful prayer service, where the atmosphere of devotion was unusually fine. Two singers had been invited by the leader to sing, at a fitting time in the program. Their voices were fine, harmonizing beautifully, but not a word of what they sang could be understood. I presume they sang in English, but it might as well have been Chinese for all the good it did the worshippers.

"Now that I have let this out of my system I feel better; but I hope you will make a strong drive for singing 'with understanding' by the hearers when in a religious service."

STUDYING THE TEXT OF A SONG

It is so trite a statement that one hesitates to say that many singers fail completely in the important matter of clear enunciation of the text of a song. The present writer is impressed with this point nearly every time he hears a soloist in a church service. It is worse, of course, in regard to the work of the average choir. The singers, as an ensemble, simply cannot make the words of an anthem plain to the listener. Were it not that the texts are from the scriptures and hymnal, very few persons in the congregation would know what the singers are saying. But a soloist has no real alibi in this case. If one may use the expression is equivalent to an excuse. For the purposes of singing they are in an English-speaking country, and supposed to be singing in the vernacular. For all practical purposes they are elsewhere, in "another" place.

If some one asks for a remedy it is not difficult to offer a simple, practical, and effective one. It all depends upon the singer's willingness to do the right thing, namely, make the words clear, and practice to do so. The following by an English critic bears upon this subject:

"The words of a song are as much worthy of the singer's study as the music, that is, if the song is worth singing at all. I do not mean to say that in themselves they must necessarily be of equal merit, but that they require as much attention on the part of the singer to bring out their meaning.

"Study the text, therefore, apart from the music. Read the words aloud deliberately; master the sentiment of them, and note the prominent words and phrases, so as to be able to give them their due value when you have to combine them with the music. Avoid giving prominence to such words as of, for, the, and, in, but yet let each be distinctly pronounced and not slurred over in an indistinct murmur.

"Learn the words of a song by memorizing. Master the text, and consider the whole from an elocutionist's point of view before you attack the musical side."

Another writer advises singers to practice reading aloud for not less than a quarter of an hour at a time—at least once a day.—The Musician.

CHIMES MAKE A NEW RECORD

A set of tower chimes installed by J. C. Deagan, Inc., of Chicago, in the Lake Avenue Baptist Church of Rochester, N. Y., is making a new world record for bells. These chimes not only are heard in all parts of Rochester, but are delighting people in towns fifty miles and even farther from Rochester. The installation of a wireless outfit in the church transmits the music of the chimes and of three organs. It is seldom that the possibilities of tower chimes are realized as well as they are in Rochester. George W. Fisher, organist and director of music of the church, is enthusiastic over the addition to his equipment there. He writes:

"We were able to get the chimes in place for Christmas Eve. The church is on a large, spacious triangle. We had a mammoth Christmas tree in front of the church, with many electric lights, and every night during the holiday week I played carols and hymns suitable to the season. The bells have really created a sensation.

"You will be interested to know that we have installed a really fine wireless set, not only in the church and the various organs (we have three in different parts of the auditorium), but also in the tower, and as there are over 800 wireless phones in and around Rochester, the bells carry their message to many of the towns fifty and more miles away as well as in Rochester. We hear fine reports from many towns, as bells carry better over the wireless than any other tone."—The Diapason.

An Estey organ is to be installed in Rose Hill Baptist Church, Columbus, Ga.

Rev. Donald D. MacLaurin who, since his resignation at Madison, Wis., has been living on the Coast, has been secured as the stated supply of the Temple Church, Minneapolis. Dr. MacLaurin was at one time pastor in that city.

Rev. A. D. McGlashan of First Church, Elgin, Ill., almost dumbfounded his congregation by announcing his resignation at the morning service, Oct. 22. His pastorate began in February, 1921 and his work has been unusually successful. He announced no plans for the future.

Eighty-three churches were touched by the ministry of Camp Oswegatchie, under the auspices of the Home Mission Society, when 150 boys last summer enjoyed its training. Rev. J. Foster Wilcox, director of Camp Oswegatchie, will be glad to assist any interested pastor in establishing a work like that carried on in the Adirondacks.

In view of the heavy pressure of duties involved in his acceptance of the office of home secretary of the Foreign Mission Society, some measure of relief for Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo in handling the voluminous correspondence with prospective candidates for missionary appointment, had to be provided. Missionary R. B. Longwell, from Assam, for sixteen years in the service of the society, who is at present home on furlough, was requested to assume temporary responsibility for this work.

In a memorial souvenir of the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, we find the names of the teachers and officers of the Bible school to the number of 174. In the word of greeting we are told that the church "is looking forward to erecting one of the greatest buildings and developing one of the largest Sunday schools in the world." "The Euclid Avenue Baptist Church is more than a building; it is more than a body of baptized believers; it is an organism, throbbing with life."

Rev. H. A. Waite of First Church, Owosso, Mich., has entered upon his eighth year of service. More than 500 members have been added to the church. The enrollment of the Sunday school has more than doubled. Eight years ago the church paid for beneficence the sum of $150 and during the last year more than $3,500. For the first time in years all indebtedness has been cared for and the building is in first-class repair. On Oct. 1 the members greeted the pastor with a basket of roses coupled with the wish for a life settlement.

Probably the most elaborate celebration of a Baptist anniversary that was ever undertaken by a single state in the South is that planned by the Baptists of Mississippi at Jackson, October 16-21, state fair week. Exhibits of every phase of Baptist work in Mississippi, missionary, educational and benevolent were on display at the fair throughout the week, while on Friday, Oct. 20, officially designated as "Baptist Day" at the fair, there was held a mammoth parade through the city and an elaborate pageant at the fair grounds, setting forth in a graphic manner a century of Baptist achievement in that state. Baptists from every section of the state and many neighboring states were in attendance on this unusual celebration. Several hundred persons participated in the pageant.

EVANGELISM ALL THE YEAR ROUND

Since 1920 our churches have reported conversions and baptisms exceeding all records within recent years.

Forty conferences in fourteen different states were held during the convention year 1921-1922 with pastors in order to study a state-wide cooperative plan to reach every church with some form of evangelistic effort. Twelve states attempted such organization and reported gratifying results.

The Department of Evangelism of the Home Mission Society stimulates the churches to constructive and continuous evangelism and the attainment of higher levels of spiritual life with the consequent ingathering of souls.

22 FIELD EVANGELISTS SERVING THE YEAR AROUND SPECIAL EVANGELISTS ENGAGED FOR EMERGENCIES

In this intensive work of evangelism the Home Mission Society cooperates with state conventions and foreign speaking conferences.

Some may express in terms of dollars their willingness to meet the needs of this Department; others may help to realize its goal by the consecration of their time and talents in definite Christian service. All may remember the work of this Department in prayer.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. J. W. Weddell, of Morgan Park, is lecturing at the fall institute at the Northern Baptist Seminary and acting as pastor of the Irving Park Church of Chicago.

Rev. John M. Dean, pastor of the First Church, Pasadena, Cal., supplied the Temple Church, Los Angeles, Nov. 5 during the absence of Pastor J. W. Brouner. Dr. Brouner is a member of the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention which held its mid-year meeting in Chicago, Nov. 2.

A Meeting in the interest of the Woman's Union Christian Colleges in the Orient will be held at three o'clock Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19 at Grace Methodist Church, La Salle and Locust Streets. The speakers will be Dr. Ira Studder, medical missionary of Vellore, India, and President Poundleton of Wellesley College. Mrs. Andrew MacLeish is chairman of the committee for Illinois.

Rev. Clarence W. Kemper, pastor of the First Church, Lansing, Mich., tendered his resignation Oct. 29. He has accepted the call to become pastor of the Baptist Temple of Charleston, W. Va. Charleston has large plans for the immediate future, including modern church equipment. It is the church of which Rev. E. L. Dakin was pastor before accepting the call to the Brooklyn Church. Mr. Kemper in accepting the new position goes back to his home state and to one of its most important churches.

The Foreign Mission Society has had to have an extra edition of shipping tags printed, owing to demands that have come in recent days. This indicates an encouraging response on the part of Baptist churches to the appeal to send another Ship of Fellowship to Europe. It should be understood, however, that these shipping tags are not absolutely essential, for if packages carry the proper address, plainly written, American Baptist European Relief Warehouse, care of Abercrombie Corporation, 108 Dobbin Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., the package will arrive at its destination.

A letter from Miyazaki, Japan, under date of Oct. 8, from Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, secretary of the federal council's commission on international justice and goodwill, records his warm reception on arriving in his old home. In company with Mr. Frederick Moore, foreign counselor to the Japanese ministry of affairs, he has had conferences with many of the most prominent figures in Japan, including Prince Tokugawa, the premier, Viscount Shibusawa, the minister of foreign affairs, and Dr. Soyeda, discussing with them present tendencies in Japanese life and in American-Japanese relations. Dr. Gulick has also had many conferences with the leading Japanese Christians.

Rev. J. J. Muir, for years pastor of Temple Church, Washington, D. C., and now also chaplain of the United States senate, has suffered the loss of his wife who passed to her reward, Sunday, Oct. 22. They had lived together in a singularly happy companionship for fifty-four years. Mrs. Muir was a woman of tender spirit, strong in her convictions, loyal in her devotion, and stable as a rock. She has left a glorious heritage of character and influence. Rev. H. W. Millington officiated at the funeral, which was held at the church, Wednesday, Oct. 25.

Twenty-eight young men who were baptized at the Chinese Baptist mission in San Francisco last year are proving to be real Christians. In reply to a question about persecution, one said that he was thoroughly convinced that the religion of Jesus Christ was the only true one and that he was not afraid of anything that might follow its acceptance.

The Graduates' Association of the girls' school at Sendai, Japan, has pledged itself to raise 10,000 yen by November, the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the school. This money will be used to build a wall around the lot for the new dormitory which is soon to be started through the generosity of Mrs. E. M. White of Framingham, Mass.

Rev. John Snape, pastor of First Church, Oakland, Cal., has found a large field for service. In the church calendar of a recent week we find his engagements scheduled. On Thursday noon he spoke before the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco. The same night before a men's gathering in Watsonville. On Friday he was in Stockton and the next week in Fresno in the interests of the denominational program.

The Pennsylvania Baptist Convention and the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Philadelphia passed highly commendatory resolutions in recognition of the long service as secretary of Rev. Chas. A. Walker. The covering letter containing the resolutions says "He is in a class by himself as a clerk for efficiency and accuracy. He was beloved from one end of the state to the other." It will be recalled that Mr. Walker has become pastor of the First Church, Dover, Del.

The high school of Babylon, N. Y., graduated twenty-six young men and women last June and every one of these has gone on to a higher education this fall. Five of them are members of the First Church. Dr. William A. Spinney, pastor of the church, arranged a unique service for these young people Sunday afternoon before they left for college, and had each one of the young people speak on some phase of college life—educational, social and religious. This service has had considerable to do with turning the thought of the community toward higher education.

Rev. A. V. Marsh of the Congo Mission has had a novel experience. After the usual semi-annual gathering of the teachers and evangelists, and the baptism of forty-two inquirers, Mr. Marsh, experienced a surprise when about to give the teachers and preachers their supplies and advance wages for the coming quarter, before returning to their work. We have known of "strikes" and "strikers" at home, but to our knowledge the United States has not been able to keep up with Ntondo in the way of a "preachers' strike." A real strike of sixty preachers and teachers for higher wages. Mr. Marsh told the preachers and teachers that he could not give them money that he did not have. Their wages were not decreased but we could not see the way clear to increase them. In the villages the Christians are urged to do their utmost toward self-support, but have not given sufficiently to raise the wages. After consideration, most of them came saying they would go back to their places on the same salaries. A visit over the field by Mr. Marsh since then has found them at their duties.

An Expressive Commendation

Rev. G. A. Clark of Edmonton, Alberta, writes, "I like to read THE BAPTIST. You're developing a splendid paper; stay with it. I was at a gathering of our Baptist people of the province a little while ago and after reading a certain fine article handed the paper to a friend, a layman. After reading it he said, 'By golly, I'd like to have that paper. I think I'll subscribe. That's good reading.' When he gets back to town you'll have another copy of the paper coming to this faraway town of Alberta." We are sometimes criticized for allowing slang in this Kollum but where in the dictionary could you find an expression that would register more nearly the feeling of that layman.

Killam's Kollum

Is This Your Song?

"Got any rivers they say are uncrossable?
Got any mountains you can't tunnel through?
We specialize on the wholly impossible
Doing the thing that no man can do."

This is a part of the Panama Canal diggers' song. We have known church folks when it was proposed that a copy of THE BAPTIST and Missions should be placed in every family who have responded, "It can't be done!" Of course it can't if you take that position. Set the canal diggers' song to some catchy tune until it works itself into your system.

Andy's Epitaph

On the tomb of Andrew Carnegie is the epitaph he wrote: "Here lies a man who knew how to enlist in his service better men than himself." The possession of this faculty made possible a fortune of almost $400,000,000, $350,000,000 of which he had the pleasure of distributing before his death. Pastor, do you have Andy's faculty? You want to see the circulation of THE BAPTIST and Missions greatly increased in your church. Your purpose is right. Can't you enlist the folks to canvass the membership who can do the job even better than you could do it yourself?

Don't Talk Too Much

A young bond salesman telephoned to the editor the other day. We suppose the call was due to reports upon the financial situation of THE BAPTIST. It is of interest to a large circle that the paper has lived within its normal income without subsidy for the first six months of the present fiscal year. We are not sure that this record is to our credit. If there is any place where the denomination is justified in spending good money it is in an effort to get the facts to the folks. But as we were saying, the young bond salesman got our ear. He talked on and on. Finally we managed to check the steady flow of financial eloquence long enough to inform the gentleman that with his line of talk he could not sell us a lead pencil even though he lost a leg. Even pity would not avail. Kind reader, as a Baptist you are interested in selling THE BAPTIST to every Baptist family. Study and practice good salesmanship.

How Long Can We Keep It Up With Safety?

"We are enjoying THE BAPTIST more and more every week. Think it improving all the time. Best wishes for the continued success of THE BAPTIST." —Mrs. Corwin S. Shank, Seattle, Wash. How long can we keep it up? We have recollections of a story told us in our boyhood days about a little boy who kept growing better and better until he became an angel. That story had no terror for us as a boy, and now as an editor we will put off worry for yet a while.

Interview with Dr. Rushbrook

Europe is more accessible to our message than ever before. In one Russian city there were baptized on one day more persons than on the day of Pentecost

FOLLOWING his addresses in Chicago on Oct. 30, a representative of THE BAPTIST propounded the following questions to Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, who for two years has been serving so successfully as Baptist Commissioner for Europe. Dr. Rushbrooke was elected commissioner at the Baptist Conference held in London in July, 1920, where the principal Baptist bodies of the world were represented.

"Dr. Rushbrooke, we welcome you again to America. Our people recall with pleasure your visit of 1921. May we ask if your present visit has any special purpose beyond that of informing American Baptists of what is happening in the work in Europe?"

"My chief object was to inform the foreign mission boards of the present conditions, especially in Russia after this year's harvest. The boards are shaping their budgets and preparing appeals to the churches, and it was put to me that the needs of Europe could be better explained in conference than through correspondence. I had other reasons; special questions have come up on which I needed the authority of the boards before acting, and it was necessary to discuss some of them. I was also eager to meet the Canadian Baptists who are cooperating in the 'Old Continent.'"

"What is the outlook for Baptist work in Europe?"

Europe More Accessible

"Europe is more accessible to our message than ever before. There is progress everywhere. Even in southern Roman Catholic countries, such as Spain and Italy, this is so, and elsewhere the signs of encouragement are still more abundant. Throughout the whole of Central and Northern Europe the advance during the last few years is striking. This growth of the European Baptists sets us our definite tasks. A trained leadership, a ministry competent to hold the proportions of truth, literature to confirm and edify the large bodies of converts—these are the primary needs. We should set up and maintain seminaries and assist the output of literature."

"Our people are especially interested in the remarkable growth of Baptists in Russia. What can you tell us as a result of your recent visit to that country?"

Expansion Astounding

"There has been a wonderful advance. Both the Unions of churches holding our faith and order—the Evangelical Christian and the Baptist—have vastly increased their membership. In quite a small district of southern Ukraina where we have carried on relief, sixty churches of baptized believers are found. In one Russian city there were baptized on one day more persons than on the day of Pentecost. It is almost certainly an understatement if the total number of Russian Baptists is put at 1,000,000; it may be nearly or quite 2,000,000. A statement put forth lately in a responsible quarter that if progress continues at its present rate there will be 25,000,000 Russian Baptists within ten years. The prophecy may be falsified; but the fact that it has been seriously made indicates how astondingly rapid our expansion has been and is."

"Please tell us something of the attitude of the Soviet government regarding religion."

"In principle the Russian government stands for the separation of church and state. The members of the government, I believe, are as a rule personally hostile to organized religion; religion is the opiate of the people expresses a characteristic attitude. But there is no policy of persecution on definitely religious grounds: the prosecution of ecclesiastics—whatever opinion may be held as to the rights and wrongs of the proceedings—has been based on political grounds."

"How are Baptists affected by the attitude of the Soviet government?"

"On the whole not adversely. In some cases they have been interfered with by local officials, but an appeal to Moscow has usually secured redress. Just now the government is requiring the registration of all organized bodies in the land, and our Unions are therefore seeking registration and submitting their 'statutes.' I was informed, however, that the government makes no claim to interfere in the internal affairs of the Baptist community, and the 'statutes' are a mere statement of how and for what objects the Union has been formed. To such registration there can be no objection in principle: it should indeed safeguard the freedom of societies pursuing legitimate and non-political objects."

"Is there order in Russia?"

"I was impressed with the good order in Moscow and with the efficiency of the police force. Indeed, there was between my two visits this year—one in April and the other in September—an evident improvement all around. The railways are less unreliable; the journey each way between Riga and Moscow took a day less. Good through trains now run across the country between Baku and Petrograd. New wagons and locomotives have been obtained. Yes, things are decidedly mending."

"What of education in Russia?"

"The Russian government has made an effort to secure universal popular education, but the resources of the treasury have proved inadequate. It will be years before the effects of past neglect and of present economic stringency can be overcome. I am not in a position to say how far the education given is colored by communistic ideas; but it is only fair to recognize an honest effort to educate the people. On one point I can speak strongly: the university students are miserably poor. The effort of the World Students' Christian Federation to feed them deserves unstinted support."

"Are contributions of money and clothing from America urgently required?"

Must Be Fed

"Yes. The people have still to be fed in some districts where the harvest has totally failed. No one seriously believes that this year's crop which is really no bigger than last year's, is sufficient for the twelve months. There will be many a death from starvation in Russia this winter. Further, the killing off of horses and cattle during the famine, and the wearing out of machinery has left farmers so 'decapitalized' that they must be helped to start afresh. Money is need in plenty."

"As to clothing, it would be impossible to exaggerate the need. Every relief worker from any part of the famine area agrees about this. One of the most experienced and capable put the case very vividly when he said to me, 'You could not send into Russia one per cent or even one-half of one per cent of the clothing that is wanted.'"

"Is it necessary to send another 'Ship of Fellowship'?"

"Decidedly; that is implied by what I said just now. Make it as big a ship as you can; fill it as full as you can; send it as soon as you can; follow it by another if you can."

"Do you care to say anything regarding the probable future of the Soviet government?"

Leaders Are Learning

"I have not as a rule discussed Russian political issues. My concern has been with my own proper work. But certain points appear to me quite clear. The first is that the present Russian government is decidedly stronger than it was even six months ago. The second is that it is proving itself efficient in not a few directions. It has organized a good police force and a strong army and is securing order and I don't know that the Czarist government ever did more. If it is said that its basis is not democratic—well, Russia has never had a democratic government. I doubt if she is by any means ready for one. The Russian government has changed its methods of collecting taxes, thereby proving that it is capable of learning from experience. I found it generally acknowledged that the Soviet government has scrupulously observed the international obligations which it has accepted. There appears to be no organized force in Russia that could overthrow the present rulers; nor are they, so far as I could observe, pursuing a policy likely to provoke the resentment of the masses. There will be no bloody counter-revolution; the present leaders of Russia are rapidly learning and applying the lessons of experience, and opening the way for the re-entering of their country into the fellowship of nations."

The Baptist

What Have We a Right to Expect from a National Baptist Paper?

OUR existing Baptist journals, like our missionary and educational societies, had their origin in the private and personal initiative of men and women in advance of their time and of their churches.

Back of the papers now published lies the history of local and sectional enterprises launched in faith and maintained by heroic sacrifice for the promotion of the denomination and for the proclamation of its message.

These earlier journals, ministering to a limited constituency and dependent upon a circumscribed field for support, reflected and advocated not only the common Baptist faith and polity, but also the distinctive and peculiar tenets current among the churches among which it circulated.

The personal views and speculations, and even vagaries, of the editor or of the dominating preacher of the region, sometimes became the prime issue for which the paper contended. It might be the invalidity of "alien immersion," or the restriction of the Lord's Supper to the local church membership, or the formal ordination of deacons for life tenure of office, or the rejection of all connection with mission boards and the direct independent support of the foreign missionaries by the local church; but in any case the Baptist journal was the spokesman and criterion of the opinions and practices of the local group of churches. The message of the paper was the common Baptist faith plus the peculiar local or temporal accretion.

The missionary societies are no longer conceived of as pocket borough constituencies, managed and financed by a few zealous women and pious old men against the indifference and hostility of the denomination at large. These societies are the denomination at large functioning in the sphere of the Great Commission; and the constituency of the societies is coincident with the membership of the churches of the denomination. Movements which were begun as personal, private, and local enterprises have become corporate, national, and inclusive.

The same process of enlargement and inclusiveness has taken place in denominational journalism. Inevitably more or less sectional and exclusive in their earlier character by reason of their limitations, Baptist papers have—for the most part—become more concerned with the common faith of Baptists and less obsessed with personal and local crochets, as their field of influence and sphere of service has been extended. It is obvious that a Baptist paper advocating as essential Baptist doctrine the ingenious and iridescent speculations of a clever religious debater, cannot adequately serve an intelligent and devout constituency of nation-wide extent. It is to be a national Baptist paper it must include within its fellowship and recognition the various types of Baptist thought and experience which are not only conceivable within the limits of the New Testament teaching, but which are actually evident in the New Testament record of Christian experience.

What have we a right to expect from a national Baptist paper? Certainly that it shall not flaunt itself as the militant organ of a sectional or transitory or partisan group enamored of a particular set of dogmas which go beyond the common faith of Baptists as clearly set forth in the New Testament. Certainly that it shall not prescribe and excommunicate noble and spiritual men and women who are owned and honored in their own churches and local communities as exemplary Christians and loyal Baptists. Certainly that it shall not foment the spirit of schism and Pharisaic superciliousness in the churches whose tutelage it arrogates to itself. Certainly that it shall consistently and patiently seek for grounds of spiritual fellowship and mutual confidence beneath the natural and inescapable differences in point of view and formulation of creed which are a corollary of the freedom which is ours in Christ. Certainly that it shall cherish in its editorial councils and hold ever before the churches the hope and vision of a united people, a growing fellowship in Christ, an increasing confidence in the leadership of the risen Lord who has promised to guide his church into all truth.

Partisanship, sectionalism, schism, censoriousness, straining out of gnats and swallowing of camels, precipitate judgment of Christian brethren who differ with the editor: these qualities do not make for the perfecting of a national Baptist paper. We honestly desire and humbly pray that whatever primitive survivals of these imperfections remain in THE BAPTIST may be purged out, and that inasmuch as the denomination has solemnly and repeatedly commissioned this journal to serve as a national Baptist paper, we may acquire the qualifications necessary for so splendid and exalted a mission in Christ's service.

Whose Money Is It?

THE members of a certain Baptist church in the state of—were canvassed for the New World Movement in the spring of 1920. The pledges were larger than ever before in the history of the church. Payments during the first year were splendid. The pledges, as all Baptists know, were made for a distinct purpose outside of that local church, and the payments were made by the members in good faith for that purpose, with the understanding, publicly stated, that such payments would be sent monthly to the state office.

The treasurer of that church, with the full knowledge of the trustees, has taken the sums paid on these pledges and used them for local church expenses. This has been done without the consent of the state office, the national societies and other organizations for which these payments were made, and also without the consent of the persons who made the pledges and in some instances over their protests.

Whose money is it? Given in payment of a definite pledge for a specific purpose, it is willfully appropriated to a different purpose. The trustees say they borrowed it. They commenced borrowing it two years ago and have returned none of it. In the meantime mission workers are kept at home because the money is not sent, and the societies or boards who were to administer the fund are paying interest which makes it necessary to discontinue other missionary work.

The Real Victors

THOUSANDS of boys are taking more hard bumps than they ever experienced in any other like period in their lives. It is football time. The players seem possessed with a passion to win. It is the spirit of the time in which we live. Success is our national god. We are all in the game of life to win. It may be a contest of strength or a contest of wits—the goal is the same. On the whole, the passion to win is wholesome, but both sides can't win and there are considerations which may make the losers victors. It's better to play according to the rules of the game and lose than to win by foul means. We have men, and the world needs them, who would rather lose in a good fight than to yield on any essential point of honor. It is entirely possible to worship success more than righteousness and in the long run the real victory belongs to the man who is on the side of right. Let us not become victims of a vicious fear of losing.

The Child's Own Reading

“YOU can tell the sort of people who live in a house by the kind of books they read, and the odd nooks and corners where you find them. In a cultured household you don't have to reach very far for a book,” says M. J. Moses in House and Garden for August. For some years there has been an increasing tendency to trust the young people to choose their own reading. There is, of course, danger in this plan. Careful tests, however, show that in the main boys and girls will choose worth-while books instead of mere time-killers.

For the past four years there has been a concerted effort to get the ear of all the public on the subject of children's reading and the great heritage that belongs to every boy and girl. In this number you will find material which will be helpful to parents and teachers alike. Throughout the country there will be a discussion of the child's own personal reading. Teachers and parents are cooperating to develop the habit of reading side by side with the ability to read. In cultivating the love of good reading no better method has yet been devised than the placing of good books in attractive form where the children can lay their hands upon them at will. Following this simple method we have seen the covers worn from many of the most helpful books in a home library, including such books as “The Life of David Livingstone,” “John G. Paton,” “Anne of Ava,”

“The Life of Judson,” and many others which might be mentioned. The question of good reading for the children is not so much a matter of prescription upon the part of the parent as it is a matter of availability of such material in attractive form.

Has A Cyclone Struck Our Morals?

THERE seems to be a mental and moral cyclone sweeping across the land. Great metropolitan newspapers have featured events reeking with the slime of murder, divorce, infidelity, the spread of which is threatening the very foundations of the home. “Foil Six Child Honeymooners” read the headlines telling of the invasion of elements of destruction in the realm of youth. True human love and a permanent marriage relation are brought into question.

The authorities seem to be divided on the question of responsibility for conditions which have twisted our moral structure. In some quarters the public schools are attempting to safeguard their pupils by forewarning them. Still others feel that the home is the place for wholesome sex instruction. It is charged that home has abdicated its throne from which it may exercise the most lasting power for good over the lives committed to its care.

We are not prepared to lay the charge of criminal negligence at the door of any one institution. We are all involved to a greater or less degree in the moral slump which has brought disaster to so many lives. The newspapers themselves are at fault. That the salacious details of kidnappings, murders, sensational divorce and paternity suits are permitted to fill so large space in reputable journals is to their lasting shame. The blame, however, cannot remain at their door. It is the public which reads and gloats over such debauching “news” that is finally subject to just criticism and censure.

If we are to safeguard the future of our country; if we are to preserve its honored institutions of home and church we may well address ourselves to the task of creating a burning hatred of unrighteousness in its most alluring forms. Recreation, especially in the form of moving pictures and public dance halls and the press should, in the interest of all that is worth while, censor themselves and in this task the best elements of every community can hasten the process by a protest which is understood at the cash box.

Swift and Certain Justice

IN 1916 there were 7,667 culpable homicides (murders) committed in the United States. In England and Wales, during the same period, there were only eighty five.

What are the reasons for this terrific difference? One reason is that in America we have delay, appeal to higher courts, reversal of judgment on technical points of sentimentality, and technicalities, so that murder becomes one of the safest of the major indoor sports. In England a man who commits murder knows that he has about six weeks to live.

One of the great tasks before the electorate in this country is to reform our criminal jurisprudence, retire a lot of the criminal lawyers, make a trial a question about fact, and not a game in which you are really trying the judge.

"The Twelve-hour Day Unjustifiable"

MR. R. S. Lynd of the Survey Graphic has made an extended investigation of living and working conditions in the oil fields of the United States. Figures showing the extent to which the twelve-hour day and the seven-day week were in effect were placed in the hands of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. There was not the least disposition on his part to evade the issue. His interests represented by the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company have been in the steel industry pioneers of the three-shift system and of the one day of rest in seven for all workers. Mr. Rockefeller said in part: "I believe that, generally speaking, the twelve-hour day and the seven-day week should no longer be tolerated in industry, either from the viewpoint of public policy or of industrial efficiency; I believe that both have been proved to be unnecessary, uneconomic and unjustifiable. As a matter of general policy, subject only to the demands of occasional emergency, modern industry is justified in accepting the eight-hour day and the six-day week, as a labor standard toward which all the parties interested should steadily press. Even in those industries where the continuous process is an inevitable feature, the routine should be so adjusted that the employes can have at least one day's rest in seven and can obtain that share of leisure for self-development which accompanies the work-day of approximately eight hours."

Mr. Rockefeller clearly recognizes that far-reaching adjustment and perhaps temporary increased production costs would result where the plan is put into effect. In the matter of living conditions he says, "There is even less room for argument." Reasonable provision must be made for the home and recreational life of all workers.

"I have never believed that these things should be provided for working men and women either as a result of chance generosity or deliberate paternalism. Quite aside from the fact that, in my judgment, they represent the soundest economic policy, they are due the employe as a matter of common justice, required by the basic fact that man is a human being first and a member of industry afterward.

"As a private citizen and individual stockholder, I have never hesitated to state my position on these points with all the clearness at my command. I have not wittingly lost an opportunity—so far as a minority stockholder may do so—to reinforce my position on the general policy with action that would be most concrete and adequate."

An American Honored In China

IT comes as something of a shock to find that an American professor is far better known in China than in his own country. When Prof. Henry Carter Adams of the University of Michigan, died last year, the Chinese came and set up a tablet over his grave. Professor Adams was one of the great authorities of the world on finance, accounting and statistics, and it seems that his vast learning and his practical sense had been placed at the disposal of the Chinese republic. The tablet erected by the Chinese reads as follows:

"In the memory of Professor Henry Carter Adams, this monument is erected by his colleagues of the Ministry of Communications, republic of China, this tenth month of the tenth year of the republic, where, as adviser, his wisdom and kindly temperament, his knowledge of economics and railway statesmanship were effective in unifying the accounting systems of the Chinese government railways. We, strangers in the land, come in mourning to his grave. Our tears pay tribute to his honest and able help in our time of need. We commend his example to future generations."

Why Is Methodism in Rome?

JOHN Wesley declared that the world was his parish. His followers have not lost his aggressiveness. In 1872 they began quietly and in a small way to work in the Eternal City. For fifty years the work has gone steadily forward. In recent years there has been an increasing protest upon the part of the Roman Catholic Church on the grounds that the Methodists are interlopers. In an article in the official organ of the Knights of Columbus they say:

"They have gone so far as to plan the erection of a structure overlooking the Cathedral of St. Peter, the Vatican, and the whole city of Rome. In their hatred of the papacy, they have fraternized with the infamous Nathan, followers of the apostate monk, Giordano Bruno, and publishers of scurrilous literature against the Holy Father and the Catholic Church. These revilers of our Holy Religion, these seducers of her poor children, have been financed by American money. It is fitting that their propaganda be offset with funds contributed by American Catholics. By undertaking such a work, the Knights of Columbus will save many to our Holy Church, and will solace the heart of our Holy Father."

Zion's Advocate in the issue of Oct. 18 has an extended reply to the question as to why Methodism is in Rome. The opening paragraph sets forth clearly the lines upon which the reply is framed.

"Why is Methodism in Rome? Why is Romanism in Washington? One of these questions is just as pertinent as the other. In reply, however, to a considerable amount of criticism that lately has arisen from Roman Catholic sources concerning the efforts of the Methodist Episcopal Church in promoting evangelism and Christian education in Italy, we propose to go deeper into the situation than simply to answer one question with another. There is only one possible justification for Methodism's presence in the Eternal City and in other sections of the historic Italian land. We are there not to antagonize Roman Catholicism; we are there not for the mere numerical enlargement of our denomination; we are not there even, primarily, to secure adherents to our form of organization. Why, then, are we in Rome? We are in Rome to uplift and help humanity by promoting the kingdom of God. Our purpose is positive and constructive, and we are seeking to carry forward the work for which Christ died."

Imagination and Children's Reading

A Talk Given at the Hampshire Bookshop, Northampton, Massachusetts

By GRACE HAZARD CONKLING

WHAT is it people lose when they grow up? Simplicity and insight. They get wise with so many little details called facts that they lose the broad view. It's like getting into a fog. If we once realize how children see things, we can never patronize them again. They see colors invisible to us, contours we have forgotten. I don't mean to be sentimental about children, I want to be just. But I do believe that beauty is often real to them when we cannot see it, because they have not yet had time to get tired of anything. They are not afraid to put incongruous things together. They adore the whimsical, the grotesque even. Being ignorant of science, philosophy, tradition, they have an unspoiled directness of observation and fearlessness of expression. They have sympathies and intuitions which only certain poets, among grown-ups, can share; William Blake and Robert Burns, for example. Periods and dates do not matter much to poets, nor to children. They do not care that Jason and Robin Hood never knew each other personally. Siegfried might have killed the dragon yesterday, and flung back his head in a happy astonishment at understanding what the birds were saying about him.

First Books Are Life

The great stories of all time may be presented with success as so much realism. That is what they are to the child-mind. When the time has come for independent reading, when the child can travel through book after book without having to wait for the favorable mood or the leisure of any adult, it is of much importance that many books and good books be provided. Many because there should be possibility of choice, good because first impressions persist. Even more important is that preparatory period when the child must still be read to, for he may then be introduced to the work of great writers, not laboriously, but as a pleasure shared by the older person. That is an opportunity too many people miss, the chance to share the story, to experience that complete immersion in the subject. Books, the first books heard or read, are not about life, they are life.

To say that books are life to the imaginative child is to admit a tremendous responsibility. It is to require of oneself the furnishing of a varied library. Books must not all be serious, for children love nonsense. They should know Mother Goose and Edward Lear and Lewis Carroll; not the experience of Alice alone, but the "Hunting of the Snark," lest they miss acquaintance with the beaver who kept looking the opposite way. "The Rose and the Ring" by Thackeray should not be forgotten, nor much of W. S. Gilbert. Speaking of nonsense, do you know how delightful Walter de la Mare can be, in this field? If there were time I should tell you about poor Jim Jay who "got stuck fast in Yesterday."

Books must mean too the kind of wonderland Alice could have known without going down the rabbit-hole or through the looking-glass. They must mean the wonderland of adventure, of romance. Children should hear the Arthurian stories, from Howard Pyle perhaps, or retold by Janet Clark in an English edition, but best of all from Sir Thomas Malory himself, in an edition published by the Macmillan Company. The Romance of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table abridged from Malory's fifteenth century prose by A. W. Pollard. This book has the advantage of exquisite pictures by the English illustrator Arthur Rackham. You might be surprised to know how children enjoy the very diction of Malory, how soon they learn the terms used in the stories, whether concerning details of armor or graphic description of knights who smite their enemies from off the backs of horses. "Then Sir Ector de Maris smote Sir Gareth so hard that down he fell off his horse. And the noble King Arthur encountered with Sir Dinadan and he smote him quite from his saddle," and so on. "Buffet" is a favorite word with the children, whether the blow be given or received. On the other hand, they like the ever-delightful theme of disguise which is woven into these stories. Who can understand like the children, who love to "dress up," that moment when "Sir Tristram changed his horse and disguised himself all in red, horse and harness?" Or the account of Sir Launcelot's exploits after he had dressed himself in Sir Kay's armor—"though it was much too small for him"—Sir Launcelot who rode away to see what would happen while he pretended to be Sir Kay! Another element in these tales which is very natural to child-readers or listeners, is the element of the incongruous. They hear with no surprise that "The queen ran into the wood." They expect the unexpected. And having such close sympathy with animals, they love Sir Launcelot and the other knights because they looked well to their horses and usually let them drink first from the forest streams. In the fourteenth century romance of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, a tale I have known children to enjoy, they remember Sir Gawain's horse by name, and hear with relief that Gringaleit "had been well cared for and tended in every wise." This is an Arthurian story, too, and who wrote it, nobody knows.

From Prose to Poetry

It is quite simple and natural to turn from romantic prose to poetry concerning this material, whether you read the children some Tennyson or William Morris or let them listen to later narrative and lyric, even to de la Mare again, singing simply

Launcelot loved Guinevere

Ages and ages ago.

Beautiful as a bird was she,

Preening its wings in a cypress tree.

Happy in sadness, she and he,

They loved each other so.

If you believe that fairy tales are bad for children, you may not agree with me about these romances still less about the ancient enchantments of Greece—(and the Greek gods are so human after all, so impulsive, so reassuring!) or the folk tale of many other countries. There is

NO book is worth anything that is not worth MUCH; nor is it serviceable, until it has been read and reread and loved and loved again; and marked, so that you can refer to the passages you want in it, as a soldier can seize the weapon he needs in an armory, or a housewife bring the spice she needs from her store. Bread of flour is good; but there is bread sweet as honey, if we would eat it, in a good book; and the family must be poor indeed which, once in their lives cannot for such multipliable barley-loaves, pay their baker's bill—Ruskin.

he fairy element in most of them. Children do like tales that belong to the infancy of races, and librarians will tell you how earnestly they read Irish and Scotch and Welsh fairy tales, stories about Beowulf or Odysseus, other stories which come from Japan or from Russia. I think there is this same source of enjoyment in many of the Bible stories which children enjoy, about David, or Solomon amid splendors almost inconceivable. Inconceivable is a grown-up word. A child can conceive them with the utmost ease. There are various stories about Solomon and one of them in a book of Jewish fairy tales tells how a bumble-bee stung King Solomon on the nose, while he was waiting for the Queen of Sheba! I want to tell you, on the chance that you have not seen it, of a collection of fairy and folk tales made by the Irish poet, William Butler Yeats, who has explained terms without making them unattractive, and who includes poems with the prose tales. This book quite fascinates children. "Irish Fairy Tales," a collection of myths by another Irish poet, James Stephens, known as the author of "The Rocky Road to Dublin" and the "Crock of Gold," is published by the Macmillan Company.

The fairy tales for children so bound that it is hardly necessary to speak to them in detail, tales of all colors and types. Have them now Hans Christian Andersen, oh! it means! Even at the expense of the Brothers Grimm! And surely I will do them no harm to listen to a man like Andrew Lang, "dear Andrew with the brindled hair." His name reminds me of something quite separate from the fairy books, in the sense at least. Do you know his translation with W. Leaf and E. Vieu, of the Iliad? Do you know his Odyssey done with S. H. Butcher? These translations are in prose. Children understand and love them.

Reading Is Not "Lessons" and I think it is better to read them, not too much at a time, without special comment unless questions are asked. Reading must not be too much like lessons. It spoils the game somehow to stop for instruction. Unconsciously a child will learn to form judgment and to distinguish good from bad. I know a man who has had much to his children and with no success, for they know and love the best things. And he makes a rule never to stop to explain words unless challenged; then, of course, he explains the word as carefully as possible. Another rule is, never to point a moral. Children think that tellers of tales are in sympathy with them; they are able to deduce the moral, but dislike to talk about it. I think grown-ups feel the same way.

Books may combine imagination and instruction in varying proportions attractively, irresistibly even. Such a book is Selma Lagerlof's "Adventures of Nils," delighting little people equally with much talk of wild geese, great cranes and storks, big black crows and with descriptions of vast expanses of country, with geography in fact. Another is that extraordinary book from Henri Fabre, "Social Life in they build things with him! When in doubt what to read to children, read about somebody making something, the Swiss Family's House in the big Tree or Crusoe's many inventions or Odysseus busy with his boat!

The Authors of the Well-Known

They like Kipling, the "Just-So Stories," the marvellous Jungle Books; and from "Kim" they learn much about India, and from "Puck of Pook's Hill" much about the history of old England. These are more talked of in our days than Hawthorne's "Grandfather's Chair," which should not be forgotten, and is the more likely to be because of the emphasis on Hawthorne's own "Tanglewood Tales" and "Wonder Book." I think too that there is much to learn from Mark Twain in "The Prince and the Pauper" and in "The Yankee in King Arthur's Court." Do you miss Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn? But surely small readers will find them. Don't they know invariably about Tom whitewashing the fence? And the cave? and the raft? I am pleading perhaps for the books not as well known, though they are by well-known authors, and by the very authors of the well-known! Boys who know "Treasure Island" almost by heart are often unacquainted with "Kidnapped" and other tales by Robert Louis Stevenson. All of these books are now published in illustrated editions. I have been asked whether I should recommend books with pictures. Yes, if the pictures are good. I have found that children are stimulated by them and that in cases where very imaginative children study them, they have the courage to differ from the artist when they consider that he has failed to give the idea. It is very amusing to hear these criticisms and another way to get into a child's mind.

That is what we want the books to do and what we want to do ourselves surely. In Algernon Blackwood's book (is it for children or grown-ups?) "The Education of Uncle Paul," where Uncle Paul is gradually learning to re-enter the child-world and be as a little child again for the utter joy and wonder of it, there comes a great moment, the moment when he is accepted by the children, when small Jonah says to him, "We never thought you were as important as you pretended, and your being so big made no difference." Uncle Paul found that for the first time in his life he could play with others instead of alone by himself. The children had taught him. All they

Our Associates

IF the spirit of Ruskin's quotation from "King's Treasures" could be instilled into the children and the youth of the land today, what hope would there be tomorrow for a vast portion of the "literature" that floods the market today?

"Do you know, if you read THIS, that you cannot read THAT—that what you lose today you cannot gain tomorrow? Will you go and gossip with your housemaid, or your stable-boy, when you may talk with queens and kings, or flatter yourself that it is with any worthy consciousness of your own claims to respect that you jostle with the hungry and common crowd for entrée here, and audience there, while all the while this eternal court is open to you, with its society, wide as the world, multitudinous as its days, the chosen, and the mighty, of every place and time? Into that you may enter all ways; in that you may take fellowship and rank according to your wish; from that, once entered into it, you can never be outcast but by your own fault."

the Insect World," where they find beetles and wasps and bees and ants having adventures. Johanna Spyri's story of "Heidi" will help them visualize the Alps and "Hans Brinker" by Mary Mapes Dodge will teach them Holland. They do not appear to object to the tendency of Mr. Robinson of the "Swiss Family Robinson" to moralize. They smile indulgently over his preaching. What they learn from this much-loved book I don't dare guess. Maybe they learn to observe or to be industrious. Maybe they have an illusion that they learn something. I have been jealous of the bland Robinson because he could preach and explain all he liked, for pages, with no protest forthcoming, while I—! I can understand why they like the other Robinson, Robinson Crusoe. How expected of him was that he have adventures. And these had to be reported and shared. But he never tried to reduce experience to the "little hard pellet of an exact fact"; not for the children. For that, he felt, would be to lose it. "Exact knowledge, he knew, was often merely a great treachery, and fact, a dangerous weapon that deceived and might even destroy its owner."

It isn't that fact may never be used in great imaginative books, in such a book as Charles Kingsley's "Water-Babies" for example, "A fairy tale for a Land-baby." "There are land-babies," he remarks, "then why not water-babies?" This book begins quite simply. "Once upon a time there was a little chimney-sweep and his name was Tom." During the development of Tom's adventures, there is much talk of animals, of the English country-side. Names are given of water-creatures which it is exciting to wonder about; there is suggestive description of river or sea; there is in one way or another suggestive use of words, so that children's vocabularies are enriched, they expand under the influence of such story-telling. They do not miss the lessons of kindness and good faith and they know quite well what Kingsley means when he says in the very last sentence, "But remember always, as I told you at first, that this is all a fairy-tale, and only fun and pretense; and therefore you are not to believe a word of it, even if it is true."

A Map of Fairyland

Another book which children will listen to or read for themselves over and over again is George MacDonald's "At the Back of the North Wind." I think they love the sheer power of imagination in this book, the intensity of it, the personification, the mystery, the beauty of descriptive passages, the poetic quality in these. It is interesting to observe different children, their individual reaction to such an extended imaginative history. They are divided into two distinct classes: the children who concentrate attention upon the great North Wind and the others who are thinking all the time of the little boy. In some books there is too much mystery, too much suspense, for all but the most unusual children, those who are absolutely fearless about imagining. I think Walter de la Mare has written such a book in "The Three Mullah-Mulgars." There is something vital and beautiful about it; it is finely written, and so full of stimulation for the kind of child who can follow it at all, unafraid, that it would seem a great pity for such a child to miss the story. The Mullah-Mulgars were monkeys of a royal line. They travel through a country which combines jungle and snowy wastes and they experience strange things, too strange for the more timid child. I understand that some publisher is having made a map of Fairyland. No doubt this country of de la Mare's will be indicated thereon and surely we shall be able to learn from it something more about Peter Pan and the Never-Never Land! It would not be possible to leave J. M. Barrie out of the list of exquisitely sensitive and creative writers for children. Kensington Gardens interpreted by Barrie in "The Little White Bird" for example. I shall look on the fairyland map for the separate country. . . .

I have been taking it for granted that many of these books will be read aloud to children. I believe it is very important to read to them, but the children will read for themselves if the books are there. It is better not to depend on libraries, generous and resourceful as libraries certainly are, librarians, I should say! There is really a pleasure in owning books, however, and it is tempting to have them about. I have known children to be reading three books at a time carrying on happy experience through Mrs. Burnett's "Secret Garden," and reading history and Greek stories too. A small friend of mine who has twice read Mrs. Ethel Cook Eliot's "The Little House in the Fairy Wood" began it the third time and said that she was pretending herself into the story and was going to take Orpheus with her to make music in the wood for Iyra and the fairies. I hope that Mrs. Eliot will not object to having Orpheus get into her book.

CHILDHOOD is a tender thing and easily wrought into any shape. Yea, and the very souls of children readily receive the impressions of those things that are dropped into them while they are yet soft; but when they are older, they will, as all hard things are, be more difficult to be wrought upon. And as soft wax is apt to take the stamp of the seal, so are the minds of children to receive the instructions imprinted on them at that age.—Plutarch.

This is the child who wanted to know a long time ago who "Orfer-us" was and after hearing the story about him she said, "Well, if I could play a harp like that, so well that I saw tigers and wolves and lions sitting down to listen, I'd drop the harp and run. When he stopped playing, how did he get away?"

The Capacity for Wonder

Will you let Orpheus and his music suggest a music of words? Will you let me add a plea for poetry? Poetry is for children, quite literally. In a sense, poetry is merely the capacity for wonder. We who are grown, love poetry in proportion to the vitality and the curiosity which we have kept out of our childhood. The half-understanding of poems read, is often a source of the pleasure children have in reading. Words, sounds, may be full of witchery, full of music, without being wholly understood. And children need not have experienced things in order to feel them and respond emotionally. It is child-like poets who rescue the art from the world of sophistication. Nothing is trivial or commonplace to such poets. I want more poetry read to children, but it is a good thing to have them try to read it themselves. Not grown-up verse about children! That can hardly be expected to interest them. They have more alluring things to occupy them. Much verse described as verse for children is merely verse and nothing more; some of it is doggerel. There is no magic in it. But there are poems to be found, poems of all periods, which will hold them and which they will remember. I think obituary poems about dead birds, kittens, puppies or even dolls, certainly such poems concerning people, may safely be omitted from our list, for very young children at any rate. Writers of verse seem to have expected them to read of death with surprising frequency. I think blank verse can hardly be appreciated by children until they are fourteen or fifteen years old, though there again I am uncertain, having found children younger than that enthusiastic over parts of Shakespeare's Tempest and Midsummer Night's Dream and Twelfth Night. How can one generalize when a child under ten chooses Shelley's "Sky Lark" or "Ode to the West Wind" to read aloud, and chooses them as favorites?

Whatever poetry is chosen, let there be magic in it, magic of line of sound, some beauty, some strangeness. I have been asked what poet writing today would be most enjoyed by children. The name of one I have already mentioned, Walter de la Mare. Robert Graves, author of "Fairies and Fusiliers" and "Country Sentiment," is another. William H. Davies is another.

Better Books for Children

By MARY FRENCH, Assistant Editor, Rand McNally and Company

THE factors that enter into the selection of proper reading matter for children are numerous but they may be resolved into one general statement: the child's needs should be intelligently met with the best that literature can offer.

There has long been the tendency to feel that the child, quiet in his corner with a book, was satisfactorily occupied. In other words a book was a pacifier. Discrimination in juvenile literature was made upon the basis of morality. We now realize that the book which is morally innocuous may be the worst form of literary inanity. It may treat wrongdoing with the proper amount of disapproval and yet at the same time fill the child's mind with false social conceptions and form mental habits which will warp his entire outlook upon life. Through books the child aches out upon life; it depends upon them whether or not his vision is a distorted one.

Children are not interested in the literary qualities of a book; they read for the story. But literature is the expression of the beautiful. To achieve this purpose, it must use beauty and perfection of form as well as beauty and completeness of thought. The child who has good books laced in his hands is unconsciously forming a correct taste for the best. Continuous contact with the best will eventually establish an instinctive discrimination which will form the basis for all mature reading.

Literature Gives Vision

Moreover, few children are entirely surrounded by beautiful things either material or spiritual. Fewer children have the instinct to perceive and to enjoy the beautiful things they may find about them. Literature will enable the child to see the familiar objects and the familiar relations with new eyes.

Stories for children must always settle moral issues satisfactorily. The wronger must be suitably punished, the virtuous is emphatically rewarded or their simple side of ethics is violated. All the intricacies and relativities that comprise the fault conception of right and wrong are beyond their ken. Nor must a rascal be pothesized into a hero. A child takes the hero of his story for his ideal. The conduct of his hero must not lead him to form false ideas of what constitutes the best in behavior.

Many books have been denied children because their content was considered too highly imaginative. It is true that nearly every child is possessed of an imagination efficient to invest his entire reading—no matter how realistic—with a flood of fancy. Imagination, however, is an asset of an evil, if it is properly guided. That imagination which leads to creative impulse is responsible for the world's progress. The child's reading should be a stimulus in the direction of this creative imagination not to mere unproductive fantasy and notion.

A book should not subject a child to an undue emotional strain. The child is naturally emotional and as he has no background to aid him in appraising the relative importance of situations and events, his reactions are often unnecessarily violent. Every one has his memories of agonized hours spent over the vicissitudes of some unfortunate orphan or of some

THE literature we give the children should correspond to the stage of their development in matching as nearly as may be, in tone and spirit their own activities and interests, or should be calculated to arouse in them those interests and activities they ought legitimately to have. It should be of that kind that gives a large free sweep of activity; that reveals character and conduct in their simple, open aspects; that exhibits literary art phenomena in their plainer more striking varieties. — From "Literature in the Elementary School," by Porter Lander MacClintock, University of Chicago Press.

equally harassed pet. Continued indulgence to such harrowing emotion will dull its keen edge and in time result in sentimentality rather than in genuine sentiment. A reasonable amount of convincing emotional appeal is of course essential for the growth of the child.

Many books written of children fall entirely to appeal to them because they present child-life from the adult standpoint. "Alice in Wonderland" is perhaps the best example of a child's story that is more of a constant delight to the mature reader. The child will enjoy it but its delicate ironies and subtleties of humor are beyond him. Other books of this type but without its art can do no good at all. The child will be vaguely uncomfortable at seeing himself analyzed no matter how indirect and charmingly juvenile the method.

The Knowledge That Counts

THE only knowledge that can really make us better is not of things and their laws, but of persons and their thoughts; and I would rather have an hour's sympathy with one noble heart than read the law of gravitation through and through. To teach us what to love and what to hate, whom to honor and whom to despise, is the substance of all human training, and this is not to be learned from the magnet or the microscope, from insects born in galvanism and light polarized in crystals, but only among the affairs of men; from the rich records of the past, the strife of heroic and the peace of saintly souls, from the great thoughts of great minds, and the sublime acts of indomitable conscience. The soul takes its complexion and its true port from the society in which it dwells; it lives with the living and dies with the dead, and no intimacy with rocks and reptiles, however enlarging to its conception of the world, can lift it to its dignity, and warm it with its proper glow; but only communion with the prophets, the patriot, the sage, the martyrs of the cross. It is the grand fault of our modern education—a fault which reaches its acme

The story is the literary form with the greatest appeal to the child. It is a method within his comprehension and the more simple and direct its style the better. The most wholesome books for children will deal with realisms and with concrete subjects not with abstractions. The story which presents life in a healthy, stimulating manner and which leaves the child with a wider outlook than he had and with an increased desire to learn and do more is the one for him.

Fairy-tales and folk-lore, the expressions of peoples in their racial infancy are gravely accepted as realism by the mind of the younger child. The child who has missed the best of the fairy-tales when he was at the proper age has been denied one of the rights of his childhood. He has lost something which later reading cannot replace.

The old hero-tales with their simplicity of treatment and vigor of movement have a special appeal for children and are the finest kind of narration if properly treated.

The drama is too mature a form of art to be suitable for the child save in its most simple form. The essay, too, is a form of expression beyond his comprehension.

Poetry in which the rhythm and rhyme are accentuated and clear is loved by children. The more simple forms such as the ballad and short, stirring lyrics are the ones with the greatest appeal. The love for the other forms must be carefully cultivated and they must not be omitted entirely from his reading.

It is needless to say that there should be a variety in the child's reading. Tales of conquest and of adventure mingled with stories of other children should be wisely mingled. Informational books dealing with his studies and with his interests are of value provided the subject matter is wisely handled. Children often justly resent an indirect, veiled attempt to thrust information upon them.

in the theory of a purely secular education that we limit it to the mere knowledge of things, and, except where the Christian Scriptures save us from such blight, bring the scholar's mind into scarce any admiring contact with pre-eminent persons. We teach him the grammar and the forms of speech, but few of the things most worthy to be spoken. We teach him the seas and lands, the rivers and mountains of a dead or empty world, but of the histories they have passed there, the proud passages of his country's life, the good men that should be as the beacon to his path, we too often leave him in ignorance. We lost the true notion of human culture when we threw away the "lives of the saints." The type of excellence which they held up was not, indeed, the right one, or worthy to be preserved in the place it claimed; but until they be rewritten with a better selection of examples, and be made the manual and favorites of the cottage and the school, all our education will multiply the force without greatly mending the character of our society.—James Martineau in "Self Surrender," Macmillan Co.

The Rally to Romanism in France and Italy

Why? Because the church is regarded as the bulwark of social order against socialism.

By W. H. MORSE

THE people of France and Italy have rallied to the Roman Catholic church since the war. Why? Because the church is regarded as the bulwark of social order against socialism.

To what extent is this rally? A foremost answer as regards France comes in a paper in the Revue des Deux Mondes, by Vicomte Georges d'Avenel. With the aid of the ecclesiastical authorities in sixty-seven dioceses, comprising a population of 28,000,000, he has found that in the urban areas there is a revival of faith almost everywhere. In these districts the number of practicing Romanists among the men is sensibly greater than it was before the separation of church and state. He labels twenty-seven dioceses "religious." To substantiate this, he says the majority of the women go to mass and make their Easter communion; while half of the men also go to mass and one-fourth make their Easter communion. Twenty-eight dioceses are labeled "tepid." There the majority of women go to mass, but only half ever approach the sacrament, while one-third of the men attend mass, and not more than one-fourth make their Easters. The remaining dioceses are named "indifferent," the minority of the women hearing mass with some regularity, and less than one-eighth of the men making their Easters.

Blatant Atheism Gone

Leaving out of account Paris, with Alsace-Lorraine, the Vicomte estimates that there are in France 10,000,000 "practicing" Romanists, 16,000,000 who are more or less attentive to their church duties, and some 8,000,000 who live without any regard for religion. The former blatant atheism among the people is gone. The awakening is among the peasantry rather than the townsfolk.

The Vicomte not only omits to give figures as to Paris, but as well, he says nothing about the evangelical churches. Their number is said to be a full million. They are divided into seven different denominations, and, as far as statistics are available, it appears that there is a more fervent, aggressive spirit among them. A recent report says that "a more real religious disquietude is shown among those who are Protestant."

Vicomte d'Avenel, who is presumably a Romanist, says in his article that it is evident that "a good half of the French males do not believe and do not want to believe. To them Christianity is suspect, and moreover, they do not know what it signifies." Declaring that it would be presumptuous for him, a layman, to prompt the priests, he says, "We will limit ourselves to a simple remark. Neither in England nor in the United States is there perhaps more positive faith than in France, only in these two countries the Christ is a personage who is universally sympathétique. He is so because he is known, and he is known because the people have imbibed the Gospel, whose text is familiar to them. This is a great matter: it is, I imagine, the best point of departure for present-day religious propaganda. He who has made acquaintance with the human person of Jesus by conversing with him, will, probably, like the soldier who refused to arrest him, have the impression that 'Never man spake like this man.' Any way it would be surprising if such a one should hate him. Certainly the Catholic priest cannot pretend to create faith, for he himself teaches that faith is a 'grace.' But he can put the Son of Man into communication with those who know him, and thus inspire them with the curiosity to know whether that Personage is really the God that he said that he was, or some illuminated semi-impostor."

There we have an intelligent layman's plea for the circulation of the Scriptures. Assuredly the rally of the people to the Roman Catholic church will amount to little if a famine of the printed Word continues to obtain. This is as true of Italy as of France. In Italy the armistice was followed by a lowering of the national tone, by a relaxation of effort and discipline. Disappointment that victory did not immediately usher in the millennium, grave financial difficulties, economic difficulties and the high cost of living, brought forth a state of discontent that led to disorder. Russia was held up as a model for Italy. Lenin was hailed as savior of the world, and by some as God. Consequently the socialists increased their parliamentary strength threefold, and also captured certain municipalities. The red flag was hoisted over public buildings, and in the council chambers Lenin's portrait displaced the king's. Strikes grew common. In Piedmont and Lombardy workmen seized the shops. Soviet theory and practice seemed to be making head everywhere and government seemed powerless. But in June 1921 Signor Bonomi succeeded Giolitti, and the revolutionary movement was halted. The socialists lost ground in the elections, and were divided only sixteen deputies continuing to adhere to the Moscow régime. A reaction in public sentiment ensued. The fascist movement arose and combatted socialism. In 1921, the pope's famous "Non expedit," forbidding Roman Catholics taking part in elections, was relaxed, and the popular party sent 107 deputies to parliament. Bonomi gave them recognition, giving them three important offices in his cabinet and several under-secretaryships. In full truth, the nation rallied to the Roman Catholic church, and the church obtained a controlling influence. Under the influence of the popular party the pope and the government assumed a more friendly attitude toward each other. The nation rallied to the church in a rebound from socialistic tendencies.

Violence and Threats of Death

This reaction was marked by a crudescence of intolerance. This was to be seen distinctly in the bitterness with which the Methodist Episcopal church's erection of a college on Monte Marie, overlooking the Vatican, was assailed. This same intolerance is meted out to the colporters of the Bible societies and the emigrants who return from America with the Scriptures. This opposition is due in part to two curious notions. One is that the Bible colporters are socialists, while the other associates the circulation of the Bible politically with England! The fascists are against the league of nations, and denounce all that has to do with "the plutocratic nations"; and, of course, the Bible that comes from this "plutocratic" country, and from England, comes in for denunciation. But the 123,000 evangelical Protestants are full of hope, and in the past year nearly or quite a quarter of a million copies of the Scriptures were circulated by the Bible societies, and returning emigrants also brought in large numbers of copies. Violence and threats of death are employed to prevent the circulation of the Word, but with splendid courage and devotion the dissemination goes on, and Protestant progress is being accentuated in spite of opposition.

Prominent, if not pre-eminent in the popular party is a priest from Sicily, Don Luigi Sturzo. He has held three congresses of his party. The third was held not long since at Venice, and was largely attended by the flower of the Roman Catholic faith, who assembled on the platform around him as he opened the meeting. In an eloquent speech he pronounced a greeting to the ancient city. Then the mayor of Venice stood to respond. No Romanist is he, but a strong and wise Waldensian. In a happy improvisation he said:

"Carducci once said at San Marione, 'In a good republic it is permissible to speak of God.' I bring you the greeting of Venice, and I say to you: Let us repeat together the ancient prayer: Great God, bless Italy!" Then, with the Bible in his hand, he raised his eyes heavenward above the assemblage of Roman Catholic notables, and prayed devoutly:

"Great God, bless Italy!"

Ministers' Pensions and the New World Movement

By E. T. TOMLINSON, Executive Secretary of the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board.

THE first duty of the denomination towards its workers is to provide for them in time of need. This applies to churches and their pastors, to boards and their missionaries or workers, and to schools, colleges and seminaries and their teachers.

The Rainy Day

Salaries are so inadequate that it is difficult and in certain cases impossible for the worker to provide for the rainy day. Here for example is a young pastor who has been stricken with the mysterious and terrible disease known as "sleeping sickness." His savings are exhausted within a few weeks, his church is generous but cannot indefinitely continue his salary and yet the man has given years and money to preparation and was received by the denomination as one of its leaders. Here are other examples: a man in middle life is stricken with blindness, a young widow is left with three or four children. Tuberculosis has deprived three nephews of father and mother within a year. With many, age and feebleness, after long and faithful service, have prevented further work. The denomination in a modest way is meeting these many demands. Thirteen hundred and fifty beneficiaries are now on the list of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board. In addition to the cases of need, special retiring pension grants are made to men above sixty-five who have rendered good service and now have actually retired on work. None of these grants is adequate for the support of a family. The best the board can do is to help in such support. Even a modest grant of $300 year requires the income at 5 per cent $6,000. We have made a splendid beginning but after all it is only a beginning.

The Cooperative Plan

The board, looking ahead and after a careful study of the methods of other nominations and business corporations provide for their workers, inaugurated Cooperative Retiring Pension Plan by which the minister or his church shares the actual cost of providing a retiring pension based upon service. In the first year of membership the minister or preferably his church pays into the fund, per cent of the salary. These payments are made annually, semi-annually or quarterly as preferred. Thus far the board has provided 65 per cent of the cost in a second year of membership, leaving only 35 per cent of the amount due to be paid by the minister or his church. It is hoped that as the funds of the board increase, the proportions provided by it for a reduction in the annual dues may be increased, but it is not contemplated at any time to provide more than 90 per cent of the actual cost, leaving ten per cent to be paid by the minister or his church, as it is not deemed wise ever to dispense with the cooperative feature.

On this basis if a man retires at sixty-five, he will receive as an annual pension, amount equal to one-half his average salary during membership. That the pension appeals strongly to the men receiving modest salaries is apparent from the fact that the average salary of the ministers who have joined is less than $2300. The event of the death of the minister before he is sixty-five, all he has paid in, all accrued interest received by the board and all appropriations the board has made to reduce the annual payments of the minister, will be used to provide an income for the widow and minor children. A joint pension provides that the widow shall still continue to receive a pension from the board after the death of her husband.

That the plan adopted by the board and approved by the convention commends itself is evident not only from the fact that our ministers are joining in increasing numbers but also from the fact that other denominations after careful study are adopting the same system. By this plan, provision is made for cases of need and the recipient does not feel that he is an object of charity. Of course, whenever a pension plan is launched, it is bound to confront the problem of the men who then are in middle age or older. This condition is due to no fault of the men or of the board. In order to deal justly with these worthy workers the board has been following the plan outlined in the fourth paragraph. Of course, this part of the plan is temporary and is designed to meet the existing emergency. The Cooperating Retiring Pension Fund enables the minister to provide for a definite and larger retiring pension than otherwise he could receive when he no longer is able to work.

Only a Beginning

The splendid beginning which the board has made, is, as I have said, only a beginning. The number of grants to beneficiaries and the amounts of these grants, in justice to all, ought speedily to be increased. In the report of last year when 1255 beneficiaries were receiving grants the list was composed of 501 men, 479 women and 275 children. In spite of the reduction of 25 per cent in the budget recommended by the conventions, more than 100 new beneficiaries had been added in the list by September, 1922.

The relation of the New World Movement to the work of the Benefit Board is therefore clear. The board cannot appropriate money which it does not receive either from income, from the churches or from individuals. Just as rapidly as this income is increased the

Laughter

AFTER a hard day's work in serious discussions, Theodore Cuyler and Charles H. Spurgeon went out into the country together for a holiday. They roamed the fields in high spirits like boys let loose from school, chatting and laughing and free from care. Dr. Cuyler had just told a story at which Pastor Spurgeon laughed uproariously. Then suddenly he turned to Dr. Cuyler and exclaimed:

"Theodore, let's kneel down and thank God for laughter!"

And there, on the green carpet of grass, under the trees, two of the world's greatest men knelt and thanked the dear Lord for the bright and joyous gift of laughter.

There is no antagonism between prayer and laughter. One is conducive of spiritual health, the other of physical health. Both are necessary.

work of the board is extended. It is unable now to provide for the entire support of any family. The best it can do is to help in such support. On the other hand, the increased cost of living has made the problem almost unsolvable for many of these workers who have grown old in the service and who are no longer able to work. The needs in almost every case are tragic. It would startle the denomination if it were known how many had been rescued even from the poorhouse. Sickness, suffering, want, ought never to be the portion of a consecrated, faithful worker who has been accepted by the denomination, whose valuable services have been given and received and who finds himself penniless when old age has come and his labors are no longer in demand. The board is doing its utmost to help these worthy people and at the same time preserve their self-respect. How to help is as much a part of its problem as whom to help.

What Others Are Doing

It may be of interest to know what other Christian bodies are doing. The Methodists have a fund in excess of $16,000,000 and are hoping soon to add $10,000,000 more. The Episcopalians started out to raise a fund of $5,000,000 and already have more than $14,000,000. The splendid work of the Congregationalists in raising their Pilgrim Fund for this work is known to all. The Presbyterians are working most energetically to increase their funds. And so are the Baptists! Every gift provides an added power for the board. It has its appeal to the young people who are carefully, conscientiously considering the call for the higher service. A denomination which not merely urges young men to enter the ministry, but tells them when they shall have responded and have given faithful service, that they will not be forgotten in their old age, has added mightily to its appeal for workers. We are confident that the needs of these faithful servants of the Lord will be met as soon as our good people understand.

Answer to Appeal Inspiring

The answer to the appeal of the board has been most inspiring. Ten years ago we had nothing. At present we have a total fund of more than $9,000,000. In the Northern Baptist Convention, there are more than 13,000 ministers, missionaries, widows and their orphan children. The ministers who have been able to save in the midst of the multiplied demands upon their meager salaries or the missionaries who can provide for their old age on salaries which barely provide for their wants, are not numerous. They are the most generous givers in the denomination. No cause passes them by in its appeal. They have given long time to preparation, a longer time to active service and ought not to be forsaken in the time of their old age. The New World Movement provides an opportunity for showing our love for those who have given themselves to the utmost. "He that careth not for his own is worse than an infidel."

Let us not only love mercy and walk humbly, but let us also deal justly with those who have faithfully served and now believe, as one worthy beneficiary expressed himself, "The Lord through the M. and M. Board is caring for his own."

The Children's Reading

Being excerpts from the book by this title published by Houghton Mifflin and written

By FRANCES JENKINS OLCOTT

As a child grows older a regular hour should be set aside daily for reading aloud to him. This should not interfere with playtime in the open air. A bedtime hour for reading, or an evening reading in the family sitting-room, is conducive to a delightful companionship of parents, children and books. The literature thus read should be, as far as possible, of a vital kind that the children are not likely at first to enjoy by themselves. Such an introduction to fine books, with possibly a second reading of favorites, will make them forever a part of the literary equipment of the children.

One grandmother of today, the center and life of her large household, has, by dint of systematic reading aloud, and careful selection of books, developed the literary taste of six children of her own, and two nephews, and is now pursuing the same course with three grandchildren. The oldest grandchild is nine years old, and her general knowledge of history and literature would be remarkable in a girl of twelve. The child's unfatigued mind and plastic memory have unconsciously gathered from the reading many facts and ideas, which have become, as it were, a part of her being, and she readily absorbs this knowledge because it appeals to her through her imagination. Two hours a day the grandmother sets aside for reading aloud to the children. One directly after luncheon, and the other at bedtime. The children sew, embroider, or do other work, while being read to, and they look forward to their hour. The program covers a wide range of reading, including books for little folk, and biography, travel, history, poetry, and the classics for the older ones, and once a month St. Nicholas. Each evening reading-hour is begun by a chapter from the Bible or "Pilgrim's Progress," which are thus evening by evening read through with judicious skipping. A large share of this grandmother's success lies in her own enjoyment of what she reads; in her keen and youthful relish for a good story, and in her low but expressive voice, which modulates itself to the interest of the narrative. She unconsciously exemplifies the ancient admonition to "carry your voice softly and low, as it were in the chariot of another man's words." . . .

A Mooted Question

It is a much-mooted question whether great literature should be rewritten for children, and whether it should be expurgated. There are great books that few children read through, while chapters from those writings read when young may give the children, later in life, a desire to read the entire works. An example of such is "Don Quixote." It would seem well to place in the hands of children interesting, well-edited excerpts from this work. On the other hand, there are fine things that children should read in their entirety. Of these last there are good renditions which preserve more or less the quality of their originals. Such adaptations may, as far as is possible, be used as a means to an end,—to interest the children in plots and to lead up to the originals. As to expurgation, it is the opinion of the present writer that much in books thought by adults to be harmful to children, these pass over without notice—for it is beyond their range of vision; while that which is actually harmful to minors is the lauding of vice and success by craft, and the light treatment of lying, thieving, disloyalty, and other acts that children should be taught degrade character and undermine integrity.

It would seem that if in their early years children are taught by the means of carefully selected and edited stories to discern between good and evil, and weakness and strength, that they may, when older, be permitted to read certain masterpieces unedited and unexpurgated. By the time a boy and girl are fifteen or sixteen years of age their moral sense should have been so trained that, independent of the judgment or conscience of others, they should be able to perceive for themselves when an author fails to uphold uniformly high standards of virtue, or confuses falsehood with truth. This opinion does not apply to literature which is perverting—such writings are injurious to child or adult. . . .

We come to the really serious and much-discussed question—the love-story for the young girl. As soon as she outgrows juvenile books she plunges into the reading of full-fledged novels. In this she is following a natural and beautiful instinct. All she needs is guidance, and to be restrained from reading the painful, degenerating novels of the day. She should be taught that it is not the reading of the latest fiction that makes an educated woman, but the reading of books that build character or lead to wholesome thought, whether these books are newly published or hundreds of years old. She should be kept as long as possible in the high realm of romance into which her natural instincts, if encouraged, will lead her, so that, when judgment is mature, she may return thence "trailing clouds of glory" from the world of romantic ideals which will help her to meet in a nobler and truer fashion the problems of practical life.

Roosevelt's Life an Aid to Patriotism

IN honor of the birthday of Theodore Roosevelt, October 27, which was celebrated as Navy Day, President Harding issued the following statement:

"It is always heartening to note the interest that is taken each year in the commemoration of Theodore Roosevelt's birthday. That this man, the contemporary of our generation and personally known to more Americans than perhaps any other of his time, has so soon become an almost legendary figure, is the proof that high ideals and sincere, unselfish service are unerringly recognized and prized by the nation.

"No better schools in patriotism will ever be established than the gatherings which will from year to year recall the career and give voice to the public appreciation of this great American."

Faithfulness to one princess, as a moral standard, is the theme of many of the best myths and fairy stories. The Cupid and Psyche tale, with its hundreds of variants, deals poetically and forcefully with this type of loyalty. The prince's perseverance in the face of difficulties and dangers, in order to win his lady, forms the plot of many a favorite book. Much of the finest literature—poems, romances, and novels—deals with this subject. How, then, can the mistaken reformers of children's reading, successfully shut away from girls all references to love? They try to do this, claiming that the subject is beyond power of comprehension of young people. Surely this cannot be so, when one considers that the strongest natural instinct of girlhood is a craving for romance and for a hero who by devotion and courage wins his bride. This instinct cannot be killed. It can be suppressed or perverted by bad reading, but it is as much a part of a girl as is her heart-beat. The growing girl is throwing out delicate mental and moral tendrils searching for romance on which to lean. If the best romance of literature is shut away from her she will read instead the feverish, sentimental novels of Mary J. Holmes, or some of the three hundred and seventy-five volumes by Bertha M. Clay, or Mrs. Southworth's eighty-five novels. With what results? The girl's mind becomes filled with suggestions of treachery, jealousies, evil plots, and with wrong ideas of what marks a womanly girl or a gentleman. . . .

Protecting Our Children

"How can we, then, protect our children? How can we know what they are reading in private?" question anxious parents. The answer is, Shut off, by legislation if possible, all sources supplying weak or bad fiction; but first see to it that your community establishes a children's free library department, no matter how small and modest. Let it be stocked with books selected by approved educational standards, and put no restrictions on the free use of the books, excepting such rules as insure proper care of public property. If rules are made, even with the best of intentions, which restrict a child to one or two library books a week, the fast reader will finish his volume in a short time, and during the rest of the week he will read stories borrowed from comrades, or bought from the news-stand.

If funds permit, put the department in charge of a children's librarian pedagogically trained for that work, an who knows not only children's literature but also the approved modern methods of introducing children to good reading. Let her conduct story-hours and reading clubs, and encourage her to cooperate with both parents and teachers. Mother meetings, held monthly at the library for the discussion of children's reading, help to establish intelligent cooperation. A sunny, cheerful reading-room, equipped with low tables and comfortable chairs, its walls lined with bookcases, five feet high, filled with interesting books,—good modern ones generously duplicated, quickly becomes the natural rendezvous for the neighborhood children. They spend many hours in absorbed reading in their own omfortable quarters, which hours might otherwise be wasted in "riotous living" in the streets, or in reading yellow fiction in some secluded corner. . . .

The Bible reaches into the soul and impels the will to action. It clarifies the doubts of life; it makes the rugged places smooth; it comforts the afflicted; and shows the earnest searcher after truth the way to eternal life, bringing him, through Christ Jesus, from the presence of God the Judge into the presence of God the Father. The men and women of the Bible lived and were human like ourselves. All their acts are shown, good and bad; their hearts are shown, repentant and unrepentant; their deeds speak for or against themselves, and are related with little or no comment, the reader being left to judge the actions according to the teachings of the Bible.

For these reasons every child should be made familiar with the Bible from boyhood up. It should be read aloud to him in all its dignity and grandeur, not in rewritten versions with sectarian comments. The simple but elevated language of the Bible, especially of the King James version, its objective treatment and dramatic action bring many parts of it within the comprehension of even a very young child. If it is read without theological comment he will gradually learn its inner meanings, and draw from it lessons untrammelled by narrowing theological discussions which too often obscure the simple but profound truths. He will gain a truer Christian point of view from the Bible teaching uncommenced on than from any adult's personal religious opinions.

A knowledge of the wonderful interdependence of all parts of the Bible, and of the unfolding of the relations of God to man as shown therein, comes slowly but surely to the child who hears the Scriptures read daily. And as life unfolds for the child himself he will consciously or unconsciously apply Bible standards to all he hears or does.

The religious instinct in little children is strong but expresses itself with simplicity and unquestioning faith. The little child will often ask searching, logical questions with the desire to know the reasons for things, questions which an adult finds hard to answer in the same spirit of simplicity and truth. In the development and feeding of the religious instinct of little children hymns take an important place, either sung, read aloud, or memorized. The more simple and dramatic of the Bible stories read aloud are much enjoyed by little children, and so also are the story parts of "Pilgrim's Progress."

jumps a fifteen-foot gap in a broken bridge. In another, two poor girls of fourteen and sixteen attend balls and yacht parties given by the exclusive set of Newport. In another a girl says she has "a perfectly crazy desire to excite love." Do such books help or hinder the development of a love for fact and the habit of straight thinking?

Shall we teach children that honesty is the best policy?

The hero in these juveniles often wins his point by lying, evasion or smart trickery. . . .

Judge Lindsey, whose work among boys has made him a national figure, says, in a recent letter: "I recall a gang of boys in my court. In the trunk of one, in an attic, were found hundreds of 'cheap juveniles,' and I think they had much to do with the misdirected energy and spirit of adventure in these boys, which, instead of taking the wholesome channels, took easily to serious crime. The coarse, cheap appeal of some of this literature is certainly dangerous."

These are some of the characteristics by which the false and dangerous story may be detected. If every buyer of children's stories will read what he or she buys before putting it into the hands of children, or into libraries for their use, such stories will be easily avoided. There should be, and is beginning to be, hearty cooperation between booksellers, parents, teachers, librarians, members of women's clubs, and all other enlightened influences in the community, to stem the tide of poor juvenile stories now on the market and enlist public opinion on the side of literature that enriches and ennobs the child's mind.

But the individual bookbuyer can accomplish much by simply knowing something besides the price of the children's stories purchased. No parent or child-lover will long remain contented with the position, "It may be poison, but the boy likes it, and it's cheap."—From pamphlet issued by Penn Publishing Co.

What Do American Children Read?

WHEN, cooperating with the Children's Book Week Committee, The Bookman offered a series of prizes to children for the best essays on "Books I Like to Read," it was with a preconceived notion that much was radically wrong in the book education of children. This feeling persisted when the essays themselves began to flood the office. The prize-winning compositions, published in the January number, were entertaining but not brilliant. They were written obviously by children whose reading had been guided by their parents, who cared for the unusual in books, had imagination and were by no means the average.

Certain generalizations we were able to make from our reading of the essays submitted. Boys do not read girls' books, nor do many girls. The mind of the American little girl runs amazingly toward Boy Scout books, though she likes stories of girls' schools and colleges. The children whose papers were rated lowest, inclined most toward the conventional "series." There seemed to be a healthy love of biography, lives of American statesmen and figures like Joan of Arc; history, in the form of Greek and Roman mythology; travel books, such as the foreign "Twin" series; and nature books, the popular ones being those of Thornton Burgess and Ernest Thompson Seton. . . .

Choosing Books for Boys and Girls

By EDWARD W. MUMFORD

EVERY educated man and woman knows that story books are powerful influences in the moulding of character. How many parents study their purchases of children's books from this angle?

Jacob A. Riis hit the nail on the head: let the best—first and foremost for boys, Cooper's novels, Walter Scott, etc.—let the very best be published in the cheapest form, and so be rubbed in. . . . A boy would rather be good than bad, give him a chance."

Why not give the parent his chance so? He often buys ignorantly, accepting anything provided it is cheap and he thinks the child will read it. When convinced that he has been acting against his child's interest he will buy better books, even at a higher price. His eyes will be opened if he can be persuaded to read for himself—out loud—the poor story books he buys.

Every story cheap in quality, whether high or low in price, helps to make a cheap boy or girl, to lower the moral tone, to coarsen the character fiber, and to run the child away from what is fine, true, honest and worth while. Before he knows it he has been cheated out of his best heritage.

With the demand for lower prices has come an enormous output of juveniles sold within the limit of the child's own pocket money. They are bought by teachers to present to their classes. They are purchased for Sunday school libraries, although many of them are grotesquely out of keeping with the teachings of the school. Many a parent who would promptly take John out to the woodshed if he learned that the boy was collecting dime novels, himself frequently adds to John's library a book quite as bad.

This book—the commonest purchase for a child of ten to fifteen today—is usually one of a series (several pages in the body of the story advertise the other books of the set). Its infallible hero and his friends are invariably opposed by a despicable villain and assistant who, although a little worse than the villain, is often reformed. The villain seldom reforms as he is needed for the plot of the next book. The forces of vice and virtue invariably clash in the first chapter, and thereafter the villain stops at nothing that will injure the hero. If they are rival candidates for the position of pitcher on the school nine the hero may expect to be assaulted by thugs at night. If it is a girl's book, the heroine (blonde) has a "dangerous enemy" (brunette) in the person of a rich schoolmate. The youthful villain, by the way, is almost invariably rich.

These characteristics sound most unbelievably ridiculous, but they are found in scores of such books. It is amazing how often the same old plots and themes, revamped with a few allusions to modern boats, airships and other inventions pass muster as new stories. They are, of course, cheaply and, therefore, hastily written. One writer produced recently in one year fifteen new books of this kind. Another well-known author easily surpasses this annual output by frank use of the factory method, outlining the plots, incidents and characters to a corps of assistants, who submit their work for his final revision.

Now the final verdict of the book-buyer depends upon his vote on certain counts in the indictment against such stories.

Do we wish our boys and girls to think straight? These poor juveniles distort facts, make impossible feats possible. The young hero of one series builds and runs an airship with sleeping berths and automatic control, has miraculous escapes from earthquake, hurricane and shipwreck, thwarts gangs of desperate men, captures bank robbers, rescues beauty in distress, and presents to his sweetheart diamonds worth thousands of dollars. In another, boy aviators reach the South Pole. In another "our hero" on a motorcycle

The State Conventions

Work of the year shows progress in spite of financial handicap

"Solving Today's Problems In Cooperation With Christ"

New Jersey Baptists Faced Issues Frankly In Ninety-third Annual Gathering

THE Central Baptist Church, Trenton, was the host of 400 visiting Baptists for three days, Oct. 23-25, and well did Trenton Baptists, with the help of Judge Davis' Bible class male chorus, look after their fellow-workers in the state, to the great profit of all. From the opening night when Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, of Boston, won the sympathies of all in his masterful presentation of the theme of the convention: "Solving Today's Problems in Cooperation With Christ," until the closing hour, Wednesday, when Mr. Arthur Nash, of Cincinnati, drove home a gospel that works in a mighty business, the delegates "stayed put" and were abundantly repaid. The attendance increased with each session until the last night when hundreds could not find places. Next year takes the convention to Asbury Park, the closing days of October.

A Jersey Baptist Year

Just at the time the politicians are crying their wares and a Baptist is most likely to be elected governor of the state—a Baptist church school superintendent, "Fred" Taylor, came back home to the ninety-third New Jersey Baptist Convention, as president of the Northern Baptist Convention. He brought a great story of Europe. New Jersey must stand by Czecho-Slovakia. The most significant event from a denominational point of view, was the final acceptance of the executive-secretaryship by Pastor Chas. E. Goodall, of Roselle, N. J., who has been acting executive since Dr. I. P. Holloway's decease last March. As a token of the influence exerted by the old South Jersey Institute, then of Bridgeton, it is interesting to note that Dr. Goodall and his two predecessors, Dr. Holloway and Dr. Raymond M. West, are all South Jersey graduates. A suggestion of the value to the denomination of one of its schools.

Education and Evangelism

In thirty minutes Dr. Padelford settled the question in any open mind of what business Northern Baptists have to establish schools in the Orient. Manifestly we increase our Christian educational work or go out of business.

Ministry in First Place

The M. and M. B. Board came into its own some time back, but Dr. Wright won still more supporters when he wove in the announcement of a layman's generosity that makes it possible for smaller-salaried pastors to take advantage of the pension system at reduced cost.

Dr. Montgomery made known the denominational program in a stirring and characteristic appeal.

The pastor of the largest Baptist church in the world—at Argole, South India—knows what he is talking about, too, or he mightily fooled the delegates assembled this year. J. M. Baker loves India and he loves Christ. His idea that the purpose of the gospel is to "evangelize every last thing"—personality, talent, time, money, all—sounds like our Lord's conception.

The "Bigger and Better Brothers"

The Publication Society could have been represented by many good men but none would have better presented the "Local Church and Religious Education" than Dr. Owen C. Brown. He stressed the present campaign to make "Bigger and Better Baptist Church Schools." While New Jersey ranks near the top in the number of schools enrolled, after this address some states will doubtless be passed in the race.

What More Shall We Say?

Convention men, beginning with President Ayer, had a large part in the proceedings at Trenton, giving proper emphasis to evangelism, education, promotion, state missions and all. The Pastors' Conference opened with a splendid sermon by Pastor Deems and continued at luncheon, attended by nearly 150 ministers, when President Joseph Taylor, of China, was the inspiration. The Woman's Society of New Jersey never was more happy over its annual gathering. Dr. Montgomery, Dr. Catherine Mabie, Dr. Eleanor Campell, Miss Ballard and a host of denominational workers instructed the women.

A Great Climax

But that last night—a modern prophet was there. The social service commission brought its report which made a great setting for the address, and not one person who "came early and stayed late," felt that a minute was wasted. Arthur Nash, of Golden Rule fame, told the gospel story as he tried to practice it in his clothing business in Cincinnati. Hundreds of communities have heard Mr. Nash but any one he has not been able to visit has missed a great blessing, for he makes a heart-searching visit. When he had finished, verily the Baptists of New Jersey had listened to one who is "solving one of today's problems in cooperation with Christ."

Colorado

THE Baptists of Colorado held their annual meeting with the First Church, Colorado Springs, which was organized fifty years ago. The work of readjustment has progressed rapidly during the past year and a number of changes have been made in the various departments. The missionary secretary is now engaged with the work of the director of promotion and occupies a position very similar to the era before the New World Movement.

There are a total of sixty-four workers employed by the board, of which number fifty are in charge of one or more churches. These workers report accession of 361 persons to the churches by baptism.

A number of new churches have been organized during the year, among the number are Amherst, Bethel, Bijou, Center, Frozen Creek, Glendale, Gunnison, Highpoint, Littleton, Mt. Zion, Plainview, Superior and Simla. There has also been considerable activity in building enterprises. Arvada has built a new parsonage, Barnum has built the basement unit of a new building, Boone has erected a new meeting house at the cost of $3,000. Boulder has invested $7,500 in lots and will build a new $100,000 edifice, Brighton has completed a new $20,000 building; Eaton has put up an addition to its present equipment at a cost of $15,000; Englewood has a like amount in subscription for a building; Ft. Lupton has the basement unit completed and is now worshipping therein; Galilee, Denver, under the leadership of Dr. Gravett has erected a $50,000 church and parsonage; Hotchkiss and Lafayette have new parsonages; Longmont, a new $50,000 building; Mancos building cost $3,500; Littleton the basement unit of a new building. It has been several years since there have been building operations to the same extent.

The Budget

The convention closes the year with a small balance in the treasury. Since the first of May it has been operating on 71 per cent of last year's budget. The reduction has applied principally to overhead expenses, and no single missionary salary has suffered thereby. We shall have but little financial resources to draw upon for new churches organized or building contemplated, yet throughout the year we shall endeavor to deal fairly with all interests. Increased giving alone will enable us to meet the needs of worthy fields. Our budget for the convention year just closed was approximately $45,000, this included the Denver Baptist Union.

Encouraged by the more than 1800 baptisms this year, and the still larger number received by letter and relation, we shall continue to stress evangelism. The sixteen new Sunday schools organized, all have potential possibilities for new churches, and we will have to increase the number of missionary pastors, although we have a larger number of missionaries on our pay-roll than any western convention.

Growth Embarrasses

So troubled are we over our financial situation that we feel the necessity of stressing the call to "Carry On!" God has manifested his approval of our large giving by pouring out blessings on ever hand. "Our growth is embarrassing" because in every department of our work we have taken advanced positions for the Master, to hold which there must be liberal, immediate and increased reinforcements. "Retreat is unthinkable" for Northern Baptists when our word has been given to God and the world that we are going forward, and such enormous responsibilities and such challenging and unparalleled opportunities confront us every hand. "Victory lies just ahead" is a heroic, self-denying, sacrificial spirit the part of all our people, and courageous leadership on the part of a pastors, lay leaders and women workers. There are obstacles confronting us, but we can surmount them all through prayer sacrifice and hard work, as we undertake to carry out the following future policy: 1. Every one win one; 2. Gospel stewardship, issuing in systematic, regular, and proportionate giving by every Baptist; Every New World Movement subscriber paid up and every church quota redeemed to date; 4. A worthy subscription to remainder of five-year period, from every non-subscribing Baptist, and a cash offering from all; 5. The Baptist papers every Baptist home.

Not even a cross halted our Christ. We will fail him now?

We find an occasion of widespread oiding by reason of the commendable growth in attendance for the opening semester at the Colorado Woman's College. We express our appreciation of Pres. J. V. Bailey's fine leadership and the able enforcement of a worthy faculty.

Resolutions Taken

The committee on resolutions presented resolutions expressing appreciation of hospitality shown by Baptists of Colorado prings, commendation of the position taken by denominational agencies for a bigger and better Sunday school, assurance of hearty accord with the "carry-on" program. Also, resolved that we urge upon our churches the advisability and necessity of conducting the all-important stewardship Campaign during the month of November, or as soon as possible thereafter. Resolved, that since Baptist folks in be persuaded to undertake such worthy things as they at least partially understand, and since we will never have a thoroughly united and efficient constituency, we urge our churches to carefully endeavor to place the State Bulletin, The Baptist and Missions, in every Baptist home. Resolved, that we recommend the Colorado Woman's College as the fitting place for our assembly for young people, and that we heartily and constantly cooperate with our annual assembly, or school of methods to be held at the college. Resolved, that inasmuch as our attention has been fixed for some time upon the conditions in the Near East, we recommend that our Baptist people heartily support our federal government in the and it has taken for the pacific settlement of these difficulties.

The Liquor Question

Resolved, that we reaffirm our position already taken on the liquor question and ask our people to cooperate actively with all agencies which are seeking to enforce the eighteenth amendment, the Prohibition Act, and our state constitution and statutes.

Resolved, that we cannot surrender the conviction that the individual church one has the right to determine in any individual case the fitness of a candidate for ordination but, also, that we constantly hold before our people the necessity of a higher standard in our Baptist ministry and seek in every way to protect our churches against unworthy aspirants and pastoral leadership.

Resolved, that as a convention of delegates from the Baptist churches of Colorado, we hereby express our conviction of the vital significance and earnest necessity of Christian education in our denominational life and program. We therefore accept the Colorado Woman's College as one of our treasured inheritances from our far-seeing Baptist pioneers.

We urge our pastors to give frequent utterance to the importance of Christian training and the responsibility of our Colorado Baptists for increased cooperation and support in the building up and strengthening of their own college. Moreover, that any criticism of methods or policy, be offered to the Board of Trustees rather than voiced publicly to the embarrassment of the institution. We shall hereby to assure the management of the college, of our sincere confidence and renewed loyalty in their splendid efforts to build and maintain for us an institution altogether worthy of our unqualified support.

Resolved, that as a convention body representing the Baptist churches of Colorado, we do hereby record our vigorous protest against retaining upon the faculty of any of our denominational schools, any person or persons who are manifestly at variance with our essential Baptist faith.

The officers of the convention for the new year are F. W. Freeman, pres.; F. B. Palmer, exec. sec'y; F. I. Smith, treas.

The next annual meeting will be held with the First Church of Denver, the third week in October, 1923.

Interview with Dr. Rushbrooke

"Is the Rev. William Fetter in Russia?"
"I believe not. I have seen him at Warsaw and in London, but I do not know that he has applied for leave to enter Russia."

"Is there much interest in Europe in the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm?"

"Yes. This will be the dominant interest of European Baptists for the next few months. Our continental people have been so long separated from their brethren of America and Britain. The war, the disturbance of communications afterwards and the huge cost of traveling have practically isolated them. Americans can perhaps scarcely realize how eagerly the Baptists of the 'Old Continent' look forward to their coming over. I earnestly hope you will use the full influence of THE BAPTIST to secure a large delegation to Stockholm. It has delighted me to find that we may expect many of your leading people who have already made their plans."

"Please state briefly your view of the possible usefulness of the next meeting of the Alliance."

"It will serve as a demonstration of the strength and unity of Baptists in the world. This demonstration will be peculiarly valuable in Europe. There it is scarcely realized that we are the strongest Protestant body on earth. It will help us also to understand one another, and I have no doubt there will go forth from Stockholm some declaration or manifesto that will express our common convictions. We shall pool our experiences and ideas in regard to missionary problems throughout the whole world. But the chief matter is the warm, living fellowship that will be engendered by hand-grips and face-to-face talk. The measurable tangible results are likely to be very great, but it is the 'imponderables' that matter most. 'The kingdom of God cometh not with observation.'"

"Can you tell us anything about the British Baptists and the Lambeth approach? Many of our people are puzzled. Is it the case that English Baptists are ready for ordination by bishops?"

"I am not surprised at the question. Since I landed on this side I have been in the territory of the Northern and Southern Conventions and into Canada, and I have met with similar inquiry everywhere. You may tell your readers this—they are entirely mistaken if they imagine that the Baptists of England are ready to accept Episcopal ordination for themselves or their successors. Every representative Baptist body that has yet spoken on our side has spoken decisively. If there is any considerable movement of opinion in that direction—and so far as my observation goes there is not—I am perfectly certain a halt would be called as soon as the fatal consequences to Baptist unity came to be recognized. You have told me (and others have confirmed this) that not a Baptist in Canada or in the States, Northern or Southern, 'liberal' or 'fundamentalist' minister or layman, has the slightest sympathy with such a proposal as you have named. Do you think that when this is realized in England it will not have immense weight? Do you suppose British Baptists would disrupt the World Alliance? But believe me, they do not need this argument."

"I know that some misunderstanding has arisen on this side respecting British Baptists because of the long drawn-out conferences with the bishops since the Lambeth appeal. The truth is: we found the communication of the bishops so courteous and considerate in temper that we felt that it should be met in a similar spirit and its full significance carefully explored and our own position made clear. But the time of definite decision will come, and meanwhile I am convinced that British Baptists are no more ready than American to repudiate their distinctive historic principles or to repent of all they have ever been. I would earnestly appeal to American Baptists to trust their kinsfolk overseas."

By the death, Oct. 17, of the Rev. Dr. Reese P. Alsop, the American Bible Society has lost the chairman of its versions committee. Dr. Alsop has been for years faithful in attendance upon the meetings of this committee which takes into consideration all the questions arising in connection with the translation of the Bible into new languages in different parts of the world and the revision of such translations where changes in the language make this necessary or desirable.

WHERE ARE THE TWO NEW TESTAMENTS?

In Dr. J. E. Conant's reply to your editorial asking the question, "Where are the two New Testaments?" he says, "This pushes us back to the Bible and makes it . . . the fundamental issue amongst us." In this he is right. It is in our approach to the Bible that we separate, or rather in our reaction from that approach. There are no two Bibles, or two New Testaments, though there are many interpretations. For if the two groups into which these interpretations are classed give us two essentially different New Testaments, then it might be equally well said there is a different New Testament for every reader. Let us get nearer the heart of this problem.

When I take a New Testament in my hand what am I holding? Some will say the Word of God. But I can take this New Testament and put it in the fire. Do I therefore destroy the Word of God?—which Word, it hath been declared, "abideth forever." No, you say, for there are many other copies. But isn't it possible to burn all copies? Would the Word of God then be destroyed? No, for the Word of God cannot be destroyed. What then is this that I hold in my hand, which I can so easily destroy? It is paper or parchment with markings on it; which markings are put there that, as I look at them, I might be able to get the thought which was in the mind of the one who put the markings there. Now the important thing is not the markings, but the thought which the marker had to convey. Supposing I am illiterate, the markings will mean nothing to me. In that case, the marker has entirely failed as far as I am concerned. In whose mind then, as they look at these markings, will the same thought arise, as in that of the marker? It is impossible to say. Maybe not in any, for every one will interpret according to his own background—more or less true to the thought, more or less in error. How inadequate is the written word to be an inerrant conveyor of thought!

But some may argue that God gave not only the inspired thought, but the inspired word, adequate to convey infallibly that thought. How can that be proved in face of the facts? As a matter of fact we do not get infallible the thought, hence this difference of opinion among us. But it may be objected that it was given at first, and afterward lost through translations, etc. If God thought it necessary to give an infallible word, would he not have gone a little farther and preserved it?

In any case, taking the Bible we have, there is no guarantee that another mind will get the thought of the writer in its exact setting, proportion and relationship. He will inevitably give it the stamp of his own mind, with its peculiar background. Why then contend for an inerrant Bible, when no exactness of expression is infallibly sure of reproducing in another mind the exact shade of thought? We may feel, concerning this, that we are losing something precious. But even so, why not face the facts? And if we do, we will find that God has for us something else even more precious.

The question why Christ did not write has been a puzzle to some, and yet I think the answer is simple enough. Christ found the Jews contending about the letter when they had lost the spirit. For this he rebuked them, and said, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." The same thing would happen to any written words of our Lord. What a fetish we would have made of them! The letter would have been our spiritual death. Jesus wanted to touch us with his own spirit in immediate contact. So he took another way, and said to his disciples,

Books Boys Recommend to Each Other

PROF. HUBERT V. CARYELL in the Outlook for Aug. 12 writes from a long experience as a public school teacher. For ten years he gave careful study to the matter of the reading of boys and for five of these years the study was intensive. He made the discovery that boys distinguish the masterpiece from the mere time-killers as well as grown-ups and in some cases better, for they are not bound by tradition. He advises parents, teachers and all workers with boys to give the boys the opportunity of choosing their own reading. It was the rule that any book recommended by another boy was read with zest while the same book assigned by the teacher seemed to lose its charm. Classes in English were transformed when the boys were given a part in the selection of the works to be read and reviewed. A simple method of classification was determined upon and the boys listed their books as class one—books which no boy should miss; class two—books which were worth while but should be the second choice; and class three—books which were frankly time-killers. The wide-awake boy can read from 200 to 400 books during boyhood. The book shops and libraries contain thousands of juvenile works. It is evident that a choice must be made and the boys under a wise parent, or teacher will make their own choices and the selection will contain an amazing number of those which bear the approval of adults. It was found that the good books which were in danger of being neglected because prescribed were relished by the boys when selected by themselves.

"When he the Spirit of Truth is come, he will guide you into all truth," and that is still his way. He wants to commune spirit to spirit, which is a more sure way of revelation than any parchment.

But now having thus given the parchment its proper place, we can approach it in the right attitude, and find it not a fetish, but something of extreme value, which God in his providence has brought to us, and so approaching it, we shall find in this earthen vessel, a draught refreshing to a thirsty soul.

NOT THE ONLY ONE

In your issue of August 12, on page 859, in an article from the Bible and field secretary of the Publication Society appears the statement that . . . "so far as we know" the Publication Society "is the only denominational publishing house in the world which prints Bibles for itself." May I shed a beam of light upon the darkness of this ignorance? The American Baptist Mission Press in Rangoon, Burma, is the denominational publishing house of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and has been printing Scriptures for more than a century—and yet this Philadelphian secretary never heard of it! This mission press has printed the complete Bible in four languages, and complete New Testaments in two other languages, while the Old Testaments to match these New Testaments are both well under way and will ere long be issued if the lives of their translators are spared. These will be followed by Scripture printing in Chin, Lahu and other dialects of Burma.

But this is not all. Have we not a joint press in Canton which prints Scriptures in Chinese? Is not the English Baptist Mission Press of Calcutta the denominational publishing house in India of the English Baptists, and does it not print Scriptures in Bengali and Hindu and Urdu, and I know not in what other tongues? What about the Methodist presses at Lucknow and at Singapore? How about the great Presbyterian mission press at Shanghai? But these names are only those that come to my mind at the moment, and I ought to add Beirut as another instance, and I know not how many more.

No, dear Mr. Editor, the Publication Society has no such distinction as being the only one "in all the world" to print its own Bibles. Please tell that Bible and field secretary not to feel so lonesome, for the "woods are full of" denominational publishing houses printing God's Holy Book, and with this added distinction that we print the translations we make and own, about every one of us, and then we work for others as well.

The Personal Touch in Sunday School Work

For the purpose of promoting interest in the work of the Sunday school, the pastor of the First Church of Springfield, Ohio, sent out the following letter:

To My Fellow Workers and Church Members:—

In this letter I am presenting to you three slogans for our church and Sunday school in our October campaign for a Bigger and a Better Sunday School.

I. Our first slogan is: "Every resident church member a member of some department of our Sunday school." It seems that our church is rapidly approaching this standard. If you are not already enrolled in some department of our school, will you not do so not later than Sunday, Oct. 29? Those who cannot conveniently attend some class in the Sunday school are asked to enroll in the home department. The best of literature will be placed in their hands.

II. Our second slogan is: "Every church member bring another to Sunday school by Sunday, Oct. 29." This would increase our school by nearly 100 per cent and divide the responsibility. Will you not try to do this task for Christ's sake? One person brought three others in one Sunday, another brought two and another one. Let us all build together or him.

III. Our third slogan is: "Every church member read the Gospel of Luke during this month of October." This wonderful Gospel contains the Sunday-school lessons for this quarter of the year on the life and teachings of our Lord.

Please do not fail to bring or send your name with address by next Sunday or later than the following Sunday, if you are not already enrolled in some department of our school, telling us that you may count on your cooperation in building up a great school.

We Baptists profess to believe the Bible. Let us prove our faith by our enrollment in the Bible school. Some of our members come several miles every Sunday to the school. Several others teach a class every Sunday without any financial compensation. We can every day do something to show our interest and fellowship, if we truly love the Word and the Christ who commands us to teach the word and to feed the lambs.

Very cordially yours,
Robert Bruce Smith, Pastor.

The following invitation has in it an appeal that it would be difficult to refuse:

The Pastor's Study,
My Dear Brother:
We want a record attendance of young men in our Baraca Class next Sunday morning at 9:30 sharp. At this time we are to begin a course of lessons in the Life of Jesus as told by Luke. Thousands of young men are taking this course.

We had thirty of our Baraca members present last Sunday. We must have more! Your presence next Sunday will be deeply appreciated in helping to build up a great class.

Be sure to come whether you have time to study the lesson or not. The discussions and the fellowship are most helpful, also your example.

Kindly read the first chapter of Luke for next Sunday, and the second chapter of Luke during the next week.

Faithfully yours,
Robert Bruce Smith, Teacher.

International Sunday School Lesson for November 26

JESUS THE GREAT MISSIONARY

Lesson: Luke 8. Golden Text: Luke 19:10

Introductory

Physician, Teacher, Friend—in these lights have we viewed Jesus during the past weeks. Today we consider him as the Great Missionary. Luke 8 is a chapter crowded with the activities of the Master. It must be read from the first verse to the last to understand his work among men. The country of the Gerasenes was probably the region in Perea about Gersa upon the steep eastern bank of the Sea of Galilee.

Lesson

"He went about through cities and villages, preaching and bringing the good tidings of the kingdom of God, and with him the twelve . . . and certain women . . . Mary Magdalene, Joanna, Susanna and many others ministered unto them of their substance." Before a great multitude he told of the parable of the sower, the lamp on the stand, the claims of natural and spiritual kinship. Then he stilled the raging sea when he was in the boat with his disciples. When the boat came to shore it was at the country of the Gerasenes. Upon landing they met the tormented man who had been roaming among the tombs, finding some sort of shelter among the caves of the burial section beyond the city. No provision was made for the public care of the poor or afflicted. This insane man, a menace to the countryside and to himself as well, had no choice but to seek whatever poor shelter he could find. Upon seeing Jesus this one fell down before him and cried: "What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the Most High God? I beseech thee, torment me not," for Jesus was commanding the spirit to come out of the man. "What is thy name?" asked Jesus of this creature who had become nameless and inhuman to the people—a thing to be feared. "Legion," he answered, because there were many devils in him tormenting him. Upon the command of Jesus the demons left the man and entered into a herd of swine which rushed down the incline into the lake and were drowned. The healed man begged to remain with Jesus, but the Master commissioned him to return home and tell what God had done for him. "And he went his way, publishing throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done for him."

Leading Thoughts

1. "What is thy name?"—thus speaks Jesus to the outcast; he would know him personally. 2. When Jesus entered a new country it was the sick, the needy, the tormented he sought, never the rich or powerful. 3. Love which conquereth all things was the keynote of Jesus' life—Jesus was Love itself. 4. The cured man begged to stay with Jesus, but the Master's command was: "Return and declare how great things God hath done for thee."

Mission Study Class Institutes

A very successful institute for the training of teachers to teach the mission study books was held in Providence, R. I., under the direction of the missionary education secretary for Rhode Island.

The institute covered but one afternoon and evening, and the schedule was so worked out as to utilize every hour of the day. The attendance was not delegated but rather selected. Prospective teachers of classes and others specially interested were invited to come. The attendance record was as follows: 186 persons came from thirty-six churches. There were forty-two men; seventy-nine women; thirty leaders of boys and girls, and thirty-five leaders of young people.

This intensive and stimulating training brought the following results: 1. All present determined to offer themselves as teachers. 2. New teachers were discovered. 3. Churches not represented were visited. 4. A follow-up plan was made to set teachers to work. 5. Sixty-one study classes were put on in these thirty-six churches.

The department of missionary education will furnish special schedules for such institutes, carefully worked out to include the current study materials.

Dr. James H. Breasted of the University of Chicago and director of the Haskell Museum was recently awarded the degree of Doctor of Letters at Oxford University. Dr. Breasted has gone to Egypt where he will spend a year or two studying the Coffin manuscripts.

Friends on the Shelf

Quotations from various sources indicating what speakers, writers and educators think about books for children.

"DURING the war the draft discovered to us our own America—a land made up of people with an eighth-grade mind. If we continue to keep it eighth-grade, now that we see the facts, whose fault will it be? Movies are not helping us perceptibly as yet, nor vaudeville, nor the comic sheet. Let the poor 'tired business man' relax to his eighth-grade state of mind after work hours if he must, let him chuckle over comics in his newspaper and on the stage; but how far will the next generation 'move forward on the feet of little children' if it must keep at the low level of said comics, movies and vaudeville? Evidently I am on the proper platform tonight, ladies and gentlemen. In such a serious slump it is always the sane right-thinking Christians who help."

"Have you read 'Babbitt'? Here you see the national eighth-grade mind at its national eighth-grade business of daily routine. The author is too much a slave to realism to do anything but bring out the flat, low level of his characters, and incidentally his own prejudiced bent against an institution whose ministers try to elevate souls by preaching on slogans and advertisements and other eighth-grade appeals. That is all America is expected to react to! But there is a child in the midst—what are you going to do with him? Buy him a book with a fancy cover? Any book, any cover? Most children will devour the book that is handy. God bless the home that has some of the classics within reach—books that were not written to buy authors automobiles and diamond rings."

"Minds are fostered in the home. But what scant food for thought the average living room table offers! If I had my way not a child under twelve should ever see a 'funny page' of the daily papers. What do these comics depict, anyhow? Cheap comedy, sordid situations, exaggerated mishaps, marital bickerings, divorces brewing, or at best—a clever getting-ahead-of-the-other-fellow which is decidedly not what the Great Master taught in his golden rule. All this, served up in glaring colors, with distorted noses, arms, feet, is as great an offense to art as to literature and ethics. Yet a million Christian grandfathers likely spend their Sunday mornings before church reading these cheap 'funnies' to a million or so of wee new Americans. An odd spectacle! But grandfathers like to be popular, they like to have little elbows gouging into their knees while adoring little spellbound eyes wait and watch. Mighty few grandfathers would dare feed the stomachs of these precious little mortals with the cheap candy or ice-cream products of the five-and-ten-cent-store counters; but minds? Well, my friends, minds can catch a germ and grow sick also. Minds can break out with pretty disgusting sores which no power on earth can cleanse. Minds can have indigestion from gobbling greedily forever on sweetish food stuffs; minds can have autointoxication. An odd spectacle for Sunday mornings, I repeat—a million fond grandfathers deliberately poisoning the unspooled intellects of clean little minds with the flimsy, taudry output of funny columns. All to get a noisy guffaw! Must we be forever catering to the lowest pitch of laughter? Where are the fine ideals these same grandfathers nod approvingly over in their pews one hour later?"

"Sydney's aunt gave him 'Lamb's Tales of Shakespeare' and Hawthorne's 'Wonder Book'."

"My land!" said his mother, "he won't wade through them, Clare."

"But Clare thought it no experiment; she had a quick vision of Sydney's father and herself in a dim past reading just such books under the eaves of the attic. 'I will be a very gorgon of an aunt!' she said to herself, firmly. So she kept on giving the books Sydney's mother said he wouldn't wade through; and Sydney was finally impressed with the number of them and began—wading. Like all bathers, the first step was the worst."

"During that almost endless siege of pain Mainwaring was impressed with what the nurse did on the terrible sleepless nights when even a hyperdermic did not work. She gathered the frail little body into her arms and lulled him to quietness not with nursery jingles about Bo Peep and Miss Muffet, but with the fine cadences of lovely old psalms, chanted in measured monotones of her own inventing, so that peace like a river stole over the twitching limbs . . .

"She is a good woman!" he thought on the first night, with gratitude.

"She is a rare soul!" he said on the second night, as he saw the little tortured form quiet down perceptibly . . .

"You sang religion into me, you know," he said to her on the day he preached his first sermon. Mainwaring looked from his son to the woman who had done the miracle.

"My own mother sang them into me," she said, "I hear Psalms in the very rustle of leaves, in the sigh of the wind."

"Mainwaring wished for the thousandth time that she would marry him, but even this long distance friendship was stimulating. Twenty years of knowing her had not dulled the impression of that first night years ago when the chant of a soft low voice had restored to him the majesty all children feel in religion until the business of getting on in the world dims it . . .

"She is a good woman," he said devoutly. Men still expect such restoration at the hands of woman. Yet of all his little world, who else had he?"

"The Very Little Girl handed back the picture-book politely: 'I guess you think I'm just a baby,' she piped up, (her nose on a level with the middle knob of the filing case) 'but what I really want is something real like 'Little Women' or 'The Just-So Stories.' Did those books stop?"

"No," said the Librarian, abashed, and looked up Alcott and Kipling diligently.

"Her mother is English," whispered the Other Librarian. The Very Little Girl heard every word.

"Oh, that explains it," nodded number one, wisely.

"The Very Little Girl went home with the Jungle Book under her arm. 'The English do not read picture books,' she said to her mother at tea.

"But although she was a quick mother, she did not see the point."

Bernard Shaw said once that "the first condition of a children's library is that there shall be no children's books in it!"

"Children's Book Week" means various things to various people. To publishers it is a chance to flourish their wares (good, bad and indifferent) enticingly before a gullible public of unwise parents, aunts, and neighbors; to real lovers of little children it is a week in which to hold high real books versus any book. A decorated cover and a two dollar price do not necessarily make a good book.

There are some books which are immortal. They will always be loved; such as Charles Kingsley's "Water Babies"; Kipling's "Just-So Stories" and his "Jungle Book"; Hawthorne's "Wonder Book" and his "Tanglewood Tales"; Lamb's "Tales from Shakespeare"; the "King Arthur Stories"; "Robinson Crusoe"; "The Arabian Nights"; "Aesop's Fables."

But above all, give something real. There are some books of true and thrilling adventures which every boy and girl in every Christian family should know: "Uganda's White Man of Work" (Sophie Fahs); "Ann of Ava" and "The Moffets" (Ethel Hubbard); "The White Queen of Koyong" (Livingstone); "The Blackbearded Barbarian" (Marion Keith);

"Life of John G. Paton" (Paton); "Jungle Tales" (Musser; a new and absorbing book just issued by the George H. Doran Company); "Livingstone, The Path-Finder," and others which are true, heroic, engrossing, stimulating and the kind to make the entire world "move forward on the feet of little children," as we are so fond of quoting.

"But what is the gleam?" asked Knowlitt.

"It is the best!" answered the Page. "Things that are comic for a million-trillion-frillion years aren't the best; things that are merely exciting for a billion-trillion-zillion years are never the best; but things that are true and exciting and funny can be the best forever and ever and ever, for they lead a person straight into the Palace of The King. There are books with Flimsy Funny Pages and books with Excitable Pages, but books with Gleaming Pages are the very nicest of all. See?"

"Oh yes, yes, yes!" cried Knowlitt, Thinklitt and Dolitt in a chorus as they looked at the wall paper of the lovely rooms through which they passed. Sometimes they laughed at the amusing sights, sometimes they shuddered, but always—by following the gleam—they saw that there was a wonderful end in view, and that the Palace of The King was nearer every day than it had been before. Until gradually—would you believe it?—they had to change their names! Knowmuch, Thinkmuch and Domuch they became, all on account of following the gleaming page in such books as these: (Have you read them yourselves?) "The Magic Box," by Anita Ferris; "The Wonderland of India," by Rocky and Hunting; "Mook," by Mrs. Sites; "African Adventurers," by Jean MacKenzie; "Mr. Friend O'Man," by Dr. Stocking; and those mentioned on the opposite page, too.

Three Pages in The Palace of The King

A STORY FOR CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK.

THEY stood at the door and looked in. It was certainly the most beautiful palace that ever, ever was, and the children were all perfectly crazy to enter it. But none of them knew enough! Knowlitt began to cry because she was so stupid; Thinklitt and Dolitt however had come to the don't-dare-cry-in-publicage, so they just looked in and looked in and looked in, wistfully and wishfully. Oh, if they could only go inside!

Just then a very polite little Page came long: "I will guide you," said he. So they smiled all over their somewhat stupid faces and in they stepped, following the footsteps of their guide. "My name is Flimsy Funny Page," he explained, "and I laugh a lot. See, this is what I laugh at!"

And behold, they came to an immense corridor, the walls of which were hung with the most ridiculous pictures in the world: Men with enormous noses were tipping on banana skins; mammoth ladies were wearing tiny hats; tiny ladies were wearing mammoth hats; purple cows were jumping over green moons; babies were writing on typewriters; oh, it was a comical corridor, I assure you. Poor Knowlitt nearly giggled her head off; Thinklitt did nothing but chuckle and chortle and laugh in an ashamed sort of way at some of the pictures which really weren't very nice! As for Dolitt, he trudged along rubbing the left wall and then at the right wall, taking everything in. You would have supposed that it would be a perfect work; exactly like a million-trillion-frillion funny pages of the Sunday papers stretched mile on mile on mile. But by and by Knowlitt began to yawn, Thinklitt began to gap, and Dolitt actually went to sleep while he was walking, if you can believe such a thing!

"When will we get there?" asked Knowlitt, yawning between every word.

"Get there? Get where?" inquired the Flimsy Funny Page, turning around in a very surprised fashion.

"Why, into the Palace of The King," said Knowlitt and Thinklitt.

"Oh!" said the Flimsy Funny Page in crestfallen way, "I didn't know you wanted to get anywhere. I thought you just wanted to be amused. This Comic Corridor never gets anybody anywhere, you know. You just walk along and giggle for a million-trillion-frillion miles and for a million-trillion-frillion years."

"But we will be rather stupid, I fear," said Knowlitt and Thinklitt.

"Oh yes, stupid, of course," agreed the Flimsy Funny Page, "I guess you've chosen the wrong page to guide you if you really want to get somewhere where you will be bright and intelligent. I will call my brother for you." So he gave a low whistle, and instantly another page stood near them.

"I am Excitable Page," he explained, and led them off into a big hall full of tomahawks and guns and pirates and highway robbers and spies and battle aeroplanes and submarines and secret passages. It was a terrible place, a thrilling place, a tense place. Cold shivers ran down your back! Your hair stood up on end! Knowlitt and Thinklitt clung to Dolitt, and they felt littler than ever in the presence of such a host of frightful surroundings.

In a spellbound fashion they walked round and round that giant hall for a billion-trillion-zillion miles, trying to keep from trembling as each new horror burst on them.

"Look here!" said Dolitt at the end of a dillion-pillion-quillion hours, "When are we going to get there?"

"Get where?" asked Excitable Page, excitably.

"Into the Palace of the King, of course," said the Little family in a chorus.

"Oh!" sighed Excitable Page, "I didn't know you wanted to get into the King's Palace; I thought you were boys and girls that liked adventures."

"We do," said the Littles, "but we've had too much of it. This monstrous hall is like all the dime novels and all the blood-and-thunder stories; we feel dazed and stupid and useless."

"Of course you do," said Excitable Page, waving his fingers in a crackly way, "sights like this never get you anywhere. They just pass the time. I'd better call my brother." So he gave a special whistle, and behold a very pleasant little page appeared. Gleaming white, and smiling, and friendly.

"I am the Gleaming Page," he explained sociably, "if you want to get anywhere you mustn't expect a Flimsy-Funny-Page to guide you, or an Excitable-Blood-And-Thunder Page. But if you follow the gleam, you will find the way into the palace of the King."

Suggestions for the Stewardship of Youth

I. Cooperate with your pastor in all his plans for the promotion of stewardship in your church and young people's society.

II. Use "Stewardship Principles and Programs" in your young people's society before or during the month of October, or during the period when your church is observing stewardship month.

III. Appoint a stewardship committee which shall make adequate plans for stewardship month in the young people's society. This may be any period of four weeks before the end of April.

IV. Keep the stewardship principles constantly before the young people of the church by a free distribution of pamphlet literature on the subject.

V. Start a young people's study course in Christian stewardship, using "The New Christian," by Cushman, as the textbook.

VI. Endeavor to enrol all members of your young people's society in the local church chapter of the Baptist league of Christian stewards, as well as in the Baptist tithers' league, if you have one in your church.

This chapter is to be a permanent factor in the life of all our Baptist churches.

VII. Pray! Pray for your church. Pray for your denomination. Pray for all kingdom activities at home and abroad. Pray that we all may prove ourselves stewards of the manifold grace of God.

PRAISE GOD!

Psalm 145:1-21

(THANKSGIVING MEETING)

"My mouth shall speak the praise of Jehovah; And let all flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever."

We come up to Thanksgiving this year with mingled emotions. It was only a very few years ago that we were gripped by the martial spirit and our bosoms swelled with great surgings. The sound of the drum beat was heard on every hand and we were swept on by a great moral idealism, backed by a great purpose. Well, we achieved that purpose in part. Some of the fellows went West. Most of them came back. But, the thought of the experiences of those days, startles us.

For several years now, we have been in the backwash of the war. Some ghastly things have been revealed as we study post war records. We have been reaping, and will be reaping for a number of years, the seed-sowing of those days when passion ran riot. We have looked on for the past few years, seemingly helpless, while the very foundations of morals and religion seemed to be crumbling.

Today Europe is in the struggle of the reconstruction period. The Turkish situation has given us great alarm. Reactionism has set in in religion and politics. In our own land, we see men who profess to be Christian, quibbling over theological vagaries while the world is bleeding to death. One would sometimes get the idea that these men had rather save a theological formula than to save a life.

In the midst of such a situation, is there anything for which we may be thankful? A thousand times yes!

1. A returning sanity. It is sometimes difficult to tell which is the worse, war hysteria or a rabid reactionism. In spite of all the forces at work, the keen observer finds a slow return to sanity. Please God we shall never return to some of the situations such as existed before the war. People are becoming more quiet and restrained and the prospects are growing brighter with the days.

2. A returning prosperity. In spite of strikes and labor disturbances, there is a slow return to prosperity. It is quite evident that we have reached the peak of the financial depression. We are on the road to "normalcy."

3. A slow recovery of moral idealism. Immediately following the war, our great nation suffered a terrible lapse in idealism. We are not yet beyond the danger point of falling into a morbid selfishness, but there are signs that America still has a heart, even though it does take some great disaster like Smyrna to arouse our people. The problems of reconstruction should be tackled with the same great swell of idealism as we attacked the enemy in war time, but alas not so with us.

4. A new interest among young folks. After we recovered from our silly preaching that the returning soldiers would revolutionize the church, we got down to business to win a new generation to the Master and the church. Great has been our reward. By the thousands they are attending the conventions, assemblies, training schools; all for the purpose of better preparing themselves for service through the church. We should be devoutly thankful for this.

5. A big job. It may be that some will not have very many special blessings to voice their thanksgiving for, but we can all humbly thank God for the opportunity of living in a day so brimful of opportunity for service. "Lift up your eyes." There are big, commanding tasks on every hand. "Let us do with our might what our hands find to do."

Here and There

Virginia Young People lead all the various states of the Southern Baptist Convention in the published list of A-1 (Standard) unions, senior, intermediate, and junior for the second quarter of 1922.

Toronto, Ontario, Young People held their fall rally Oct. 2, at College Street Church. Rev. W. E. Hodgson, president of the Inter-provincial B. Y. P. U., delivered an address on the subject, "The Power of a Consecrated Personality."

The Western Association (Ontario) young people, about 200 strong, gathered at Kingsville on Labor Day for a picnic. The afternoon program was given over to sports. Supper was served on the beach. Following the twilight service, Rev. G. A. Lechlitter gave an address on "The Highest Conception of Life."

Mr. Robert P. Wilder, secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions writes: "Is it not a striking fact that 9,378 of our student volunteers have been accepted by their respective mission boards and sent to the foreign fields since the beginning of the movement? And not withstanding these trying times the mission boards have sufficient faith to call for more than 1800 new missionaries this year. The finding of qualified men and women to meet the ever increasing demands of the boards is the task which challenges us to go forward with renewed encouragement from year to year."

Church School Objectives, the big co-operative plan for study and work for Baptist church schools, is being enthusiastically received. The various state directors are cooperating and many churches will be greatly blessed because of this renewed effort for better Bible schools.

"The Negro in America" is the home missionary theme for this fall and winter. Young people's societies should purchase at once "The Trend of the Races," price 75 cts., paper, 50 cts., and "In The Vanguard of a Race," same price. A number of the young people's topics for 1923 will be based on these books.

The Foreign Missionary Theme will be "India." The study books are, "Building With India" and "India on the March," prices of both, cloth 75 cts., paper 50 cts. A number of the missionary topics for 1923 will be based on these books. They should be purchased now in preparation for efficient work, beginning with January, 1923. Study classes should be started this fall.

Georgia Baptist Young People's Union goals for 1922-1923 are as follows: 250 new unions; 250 A-1 (standard) unions; 50 AA-1 unions; 8 associational organizations; 6,000 new titheers.

The Young People of Pennsylvania have plans under way for the organization of the young people of the state. At the present time they have very limited facilities for keeping in touch with each other. Pittsburgh Association sent eleven delegates to the St. Paul Convention. Harold I. McKeever is president of the association.

Christianity in Action, is the title of a three-months' course on Christian stewardship for adult Sunday school classes, young people's classes, brotherhood, etc. The price is 25 cents net. Send your order to any branch of the Publication Society.

The New State Organization of Indiana young people is projecting a great program of enlistment. The Life Service League of India has a fine enrolment.

The Minnesota State Organization of young people is forging ahead under the leadership of Richard Hoiland. This organization was perfected at the time of the St. Paul Convention. The young people's banquet of the state convention was served in the spacious dining hall of Pillsbury Academy, Owatonna, Oct. 10. Plans are already under way for a large Minnesota delegation to the Boston Convention, July 4-8, 1923.

O loving Master of us all, and kind,
Thou the creator of man's soul and mind,
May thy great love around our hearts entwine
Until by it we are of dross refined.
And may we in our daily grind
A path to loving service find,
And put all thought of self behind
To do our duty to mankind.

Our Own Folks

Philadelphia Letter

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

What are the signs of the times and to what are our many disturbances leading us? For men of faith there was encouragement in a great dinner recently staged by the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. Nearly a thousand men prominent in big business attended. In the amount of capital they represented and power that was in their hands, it was the greatest collection of men I have ever seen. The subject was the industrial unrest. The dinner began with prayer by a Catholic priest and was closed with prayer by Russell H. Conwell. Senator Pepper made the address, pointing out that fundamentally the problem of unrest was a spiritual one and that prevention was better than cure. He urged that God be seen as the third party in all disputes. The outcome of the hour was a most carefully drawn resolution defining the necessity of a spiritual movement and the working of the Golden Rule to solve the problem of industrial unrest. These resolutions have been given a nation-wide circulation.

A Long Way to Go

It is a long way, however, to the full recognition of the imperative of a social Christianity. This was to be noted in the public reaction over the recent death of a prominent Philadelphia politician. His power in the city has been defined as greater than that of Tammany in New York. His control over the present city council permitted him to veto anything the mayor desired no matter how righteous the issue. The result of his influence was a private fortune and a political machine that has made Philadelphia and the state politics a by-word in the country. Yet personally and in his family life, this man was clean, honorable, faithful. To friends and family he was all that could be asked. His abstract relation to private morals, schools and religion was flawless. In the eulogies, these have been the things that were emphasized by Christian ministers. Social Christianity, the public conscience that holds up all of life's relations to the standard of Christ, has still a long way to go.

The dinner of the Baptist Social Union given on Oct. 26 was a brilliant affair. Our Carter Helm Jones was the speaker. For more than an hour, with the wit and the skill of word painting for which he is noted, he held the company spellbound as he told the story of Czecho-Slovakia and the persistence of the life of John Huss.

The state convention meetings in Germantown were largely attended, the local constituency proving to Secretary Soares and President Ray Hudson their interest and loyalty. The standard of addresses has been described as unusually high. Pastor Dodd and all the other pastors of Germantown cooperated to make the details of entertainment smooth in their running and highly efficient.

We are glad to note a number of church building enterprises begun and some of them nearing completion. Jenkintown has laid the corner-stone of a new addition for Sunday school purposes to cost $35,000. New Berean of West Philadelphia, is already worshipping in the basement of its new building. This church expects to dedicate its beautiful new house in November. Rev. Francis E. Steever and the Logan Baptist Church have completed a new structure at a cost of $125,000 and will dedicate during the week of November 5. Brother Steever was chaplain with the 78th Division in France. I shall say more of this work in my next letter.

Dr. J. F. Behrens continues to do fruitful work with fellow pastors. The last report I have is from the Linden Baptist Church of Camden where, after three weeks of special meetings, sixty conversions are reported. Pastor Blaser also reports a beautiful memorial painting being now made for the baptistry. Fairview Community Church, Rev. Thomas M. Master, pastor, dedicated its new building on Oct. 22. Pres. Milton G. Evans preached the sermon.

Among the real and irreparable losses caused by the financial situation in the denomination should be counted the break-up of inspirational and administrative agencies, the return of men to the pastorate and to other activities, whose experience cannot be replaced. Here we have seen this happening in our Publication Society. In the last year we have counted among the losses, Behan, Sly, McGorrell and now Thomas B. Frizelle who goes to the pastorate of the First Church of Fresno, Cal. Brother Frizelle was pastor of the First Church, Toledo. For the last two and a half years he has been director of training schools, specializing in summer assemblies and religious institutes. A farewell luncheon was given in the City Club on Oct. 7 by all the staff of the society. We congratulate the Coast on the strong addition that has come to the ranks there.

Two Fiftieth Anniversaries

In our conference two brothers have celebrated fiftieth anniversaries. Rev. George E. Rees, gave a paper on Oct. 2, "The Evolution of a Green Horn into a Hoary Head," celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of his arrival in this country. It was such a reminiscence as only he can give, keen, full of wit and wise philosophy. Dr. Rees' best memorial is perhaps the stately, beautiful architecture of the Chestnut Street Baptist Church which he built and where he ministered for more than twenty years but his influence is felt and written all over this city. Rev. T. M. Eastwood gave a paper on Oct. 23, "A Review of a Ministry," celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination. Dr. Eastwood is one of those men who have made successes of that most difficult thing, a second pastorate. He served the Burlington church in New Jersey for ten years and later returned to them for twenty-four years more. He is now retired. His paper was rich in experience and suggestiveness.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

The First Church is looking forward with confident expectancy to the coming of its new pastor, Rev. Mark F. Sanborn who will assume his charge on Nov. 12. Since the going of Dr. T. J. Villers, to Portland, Ore., on March 1, the First Church has been without a pastor, the responsibility of the work resting largely upon the assistant pastor, Rev. Lawrence M. Kelly. The pulpit has been supplied by well-known preachers, denominational leaders and Mr. Kelly. The church building has recently been rededicated. The Bible school under the superintendence of Allen B. Crow is in the best condition ever and growing. The First Church is the mother church of this great metropolis, is 95 years young and is looking forward to a new era of prosperity and service under Mr. Sanborn's leadership. Being international president of the B. Y. P. U. of A., Mr. Sanborn's coming has a peculiar significance to our Baptist young people.

Our B. Y. P. U. organizations are out for a doubling of membership by Nov. 30. The larger churches like the First Woodward and Temple have reorganized into three to six unions and all are in friendly rivalry for new members and more vigorous program outlined at St. Paul.

The Detroit Baptist Union is building a house of worship for the new Monnie Road Baptist Church on Grand River Avenue. This building will later be transformed into business property when the demand for a permanent structure has matured. A new church building for the St. Clair Heights Baptist Church, on Hurlbut Avenue near Warren Avenue East, has been decided upon and contracts let. This is much needed as the church has greatly outgrown its present home.

The Baptist Forum has a ladies' night every fall when some outstanding speaker is the guest of honor. Dr. Beaver, Mr. Montgomery, Dr. Rafferty had already spoken before Detroit Baptists. Rev. R. Petty, of the Judson Memorial Church, New York, was the choice this year. He brought a vision of Christian service to down-town New York that lingers with his attentive audience. Probably there is no more difficult field in all the Northern Baptist Convention than the community this noble church is ministering to. The dinner was held in Temple Church, the ladies of that great church preparing and serving the splendid meal.

The Bigger and Better Baptist Bible School Campaign is gripping the Sunday schools of all our churches. A definite enrolment is required and frequent meetings of officers held to bring to each school the stimulating ideas and ideals that are gathered everywhere. Never have our Bible schools been in better spirit and form and attendance than at the present time. This work is under the direction of the education committee of the Detroit Baptist Union of which Vice-president

Allen is chairman and B. T. Leonard religious education director.

The Detroit Baptist Union has been conducting an educational conference for the Negro churches at the Christian Center on Russell Street. The program included lectures to pastors, Bible-school teachers and leaders in young people's work. The dean was Rev. B. T. Leonard, religious education director of the Detroit Baptist Union. There was a faculty of nine. There has been a marked improvement in the quality of work done in the Bible school, connected with our Negro Baptist churches. There are now forty-four organized churches for Negro Baptists in Detroit. This group has increased by not less than 5000 souls this present year and till they come.

Rev. Frank L. Anderson, president of the International Baptist Seminary, was a recent welcome visitor. He preached before large audiences at the First Church, Sunday, Oct. 29, spoke before the Detroit F. M. C. A. and on Monday following spoke before the Baptist Ministers' Conference. Detroit has four or five students at East Orange and others are to follow.

Rev. James S. West has closed his work with Beulah Baptist Church and accepted an urgent call to the First Church, San Francisco. He did a splendid work here in Detroit and his wife was greatly in demand as a soloist. His wide circle of friends follow him with their best wishes and progress. His brother pastors gave him a luncheon on Monday, Oct. 30 and many expressions of love and appreciation.

Dedication of the Royal Oak Baptist Church

The First Church, Royal Oak, now in the metropolitan area, dedicated its beautiful new brick auditorium on Sunday, Oct. 9, the program extending through the week. Royal Oak is one of the nearby residential suburbs of Detroit, that is rapidly filling with modern homes. The first Church is one of the oldest churches in the state and has taken on new life and vigor since the coming of Rev. George W. Dawkins as pastor. For three years he has worshipped in a cheap frame tabernacle building which has long since proved inadequate for the demands upon it. The new auditorium is on Main Street opposite the high school building and costs nearly $100,000. The full plans call for another unit to be built later which will be devoted to the Bible school and social needs of a large congregation.

President Spencer, of Hillsdale College, as the preacher of the day. He has lately recently come to the state. If his silverances of Sunday are a fair sample, we would say that Hillsdale College and its Baptist cause in Michigan are to be congratulated. The handsome new building was crowded each service and especially at the evening service. Dr. H. C. Leiss, general superintendent of the Detroit Baptist Union, led in the gathering of funds. It was a great day and Pastor Dawkins' soul was largely satisfied. Friday evening, Nov. 3 was the concluding service of dedication week, which was known as Baptist night when Baptist churches of the metropolitan district were presented by large delegations.

Our Schools

In a chapel announcement before the student body, Pres. W. G. Spencer notified the students and through them the public at Hillsdale College had just come into possession of $100,000 additional endowment as follows:

"Sometime in February last year Pres. W. Mauck announced a notable gift of $100,000 to Hillsdale College from the Ball Brothers of Muncie, Ind. This gift was conditioned upon the raising of an equal additional sum of money. All of us deeply appreciated the impetus thus given to secure additional endowment for our alma mater.

"In a letter dated Oct. 19, 1922, Mr. F. C. Ball, president of the Ball Brothers Company, announced to Mr. E. A. Merrill, through whom the college has placed many of its investments, that the company had decided to offer to turn over to the college at this time the $100,000 'with full expectation that the officers and directors of the college will put forth every possible effort to secure the $100,000 to match our $100,000 endowment, and we fully expect that they will be able to do this.' In another letter later the same day to Mr. Merrill is this: 'We enclose herewith our check for $100,000 payable to E. A. Merrill for Hillsdale College.'

"It gives me great pleasure at this time to announce to the student body the consummation of this transaction and the immediate increase of $100,000 to our endowment.

"It ought to be further stated that this is not the first notable gift of the Ball Brothers to Hillsdale College. They gave in 1915 $30,000 to endow the Ball professorship as a memorial to Lucius Stiles Ball and Maria Bingham Ball, parents of the donors, and the chair of modern languages was designated as the object of this gift."

The Bible Institute

The Baptist Bible Institute, New Orleans, latest training institution of the Southern Baptist Convention, opened its fall session with nearly 200 students enrolled the first day. These students represented all of the southern states except New Mexico, five foreign countries (including Brazil) and several of the northern states. Dr. John T. Christian, of the chair of history, delivered the opening address telling of his summer's experience in Germany and France. Dr. B. D. Gray and Judge Gaines of the Home Board, Atlanta, Ga., addressed the student reception.

There is a remarkably fine spirit present and some excellent prospective Christian workers among this year's student body. A finer or more able lot of students could not well be assembled and the faculty of twelve members count themselves exceedingly fortunate to be privileged to work in this institution which is such a manifest "child of Providence." Though not yet five years old it already has a firm place in the support of the brotherhood and has an equipment valued at nearly $700,000.

VERMONT

VERMONT ACADEMY, WHICH opened Sept. 12 with 165 students, now has 171 students enrolled; it has been found necessary to add another member to the faculty. September 15 was a day of great rejoicing. On the evening of that day, in the presence of the board of trustees, members of the faculty and the entire student body, the formal burning of all mortgages occurred. The school is now free from debt, and with the splendid corps of teachers is rendering a service which was much needed in Vermont.

THE ASSOCIATIONAL MEETINGS HELD during the first two weeks of October were well attended. The program had been carefully prepared with the view of making definite and practical the goals which had been recommended by the Ministers' Conference held in September. The program carried out at each association was as follows: Devotional service; organization and appointment of committees; annual sermon; reading of church letters; discussion: "Why a School of Missions"; address: "Work in the Philippines," Miss Margaret Suman; devotional service; address: "Vermont's Needs," President Wallace W. Nichols; address: "Beginning at Our Own Doors," Dr. W. A. Davison; discussion: "How It Can Be Done?"; address (followed by conference): "Bigger and Better Bible Schools," Rev. Selden L. Roberts; devotional service; address: "Mission Work in China," Rev. Joseph Taylor. After the discussion on "How It Can Be Done," the recommendations of the conference were unanimously adopted by each of the associations and many of the churches have already launched the program.

THE CHURCHES ARE ENTERING heartily into the educational program for the year. Enrolments for the contest which began Oct. 15, and which includes missionary reading, study and programs, reading for Sunday-school workers, Sunday-school workers' conferences and Sunday-school handwork, are being received at the convention office in gratifying numbers. Many churches are enrolling for the complete program. There has been a great demand for mission study material, and some classes and schools of missions are already under way. The schools now in progress at Bennington and Brattleboro are proving to be interesting and helpful. The East Dover Church will start its school November 5, and many other churches have plans well under way.

THE NORTH SPRINGFIELD CHURCH has planned an interesting program for the evening of Nov. 15, when certificates for the completion of the first year's teacher training work will be given. Among the features of the evening's program will be an address by the state secretary, Dr. W. A. Davison, the dramatization of "Ruth" conducted by a member of the teacher training class and a paper on "The Value of Teacher Training" by another member of the class. Miss Carrie A. Upham is the teacher of this class.

THE SOUTH WINDHAM CHURCH, Rev. E. B. TreFethrin pastor, has recently put up six new horse-sheds at an expense of over $100.

THE NORTH TROY CHURCH, Rev. G. E. Gould pastor, has made extensive repairs to the parsonage and has bought an organ for the vestry of the church. The prayer meetings are well attended. Pastor Gould is organizing a young people's Bible class.

ON OCT. 12 REV. A. D. BENNETT closed his pastorate with the West Pawlet Church, having accepted the unanimous call to the Lynbrook Church of Long Island.

REV. A. M. WATTS, who for five years has served the Northern Mills Church while pastor of a church at Dixville, Quebec, has closed his work with these churches in order to take up the pastorate of the Federated Church at Westford. Mr. Watts is already at work on his new field.

REV. CHRISTIAN PETERSON has resigned his pastorate of the North Danville Church, in order to accept the call of the Windsor Church, where he began his work Nov. 5.

THE PASSUMPSIC CHURCH, Rev. A. N. Pierce pastor, recently received four into the church by baptism.

THE RUTLAND CHURCH, Rev. G. W. Peck, Jr. pastor, put on an aggressive stewardship campaign during October. The prayer meetings for the month were given over to stewardship. One week three men advocated and developed the idea, and the next week three women spoke on tithing. The young people also carried out stewardship programs in their meetings. Four men have recently been received into the church by baptism.

REV. A. C. BERRIE, for about two years pastor of the church at St. Albans, has closed his work there to accept the call of the church at Auburn, Me.

ON OCT. 15 EIGHT WERE RECEIVED into the Huntington Church by baptism and two by letter, while three more were received by the church for baptism. In the special meetings which closed on that day, Rev. G. H. Grey, pastor, was assisted by Rev. W. F. Sturtevant.

THE GEORGIA PLAIN CHURCH called a council for Nov. 3, for the purpose of ordaining to the gospel ministry Miss Grace M. Brooks, who has for about two years served this church as pastor. Miss Brooks has been connected with the work of Vermont State Convention for about fifteen years and has proved to be an intelligent, consecrated worker.

NEW YORK

ON THE EVENING OF OCT. 20 the First Church of Owego held a reception in honor of its new pastor, Dr. Henry D. Coe and family. Mr. Charles R. Dean, a deacon and long-time member presided. Gen. Henry M. Robert, author of "Robert's Rules of Order," a member of the church, welcomed the pastor to the hearts and homes of the people. Greetings were brought by the Methodist and Presbyterian pastors, Rev. T. Valentine Parker, of the First Church of Binghamton, a long-time friend of Dr. Coe, having worked with him in the Long Island Association, brought greetings from the Broome and Tioga Baptist Association. Thus begins another pastorate in an historic church, of which Dr. William A. Granger was pastor, where Dr. Lathan Crandall did a notable work, and which Rev. Warren C. Taylor has just left after ten years of fine service to go to Albion, New York.

JOHN SAMUEL DETWEILER, who passed from this life at the home of his son, Rev. C. S. Detweiler, Tarrytown, Oct. 10, still lives in the work of his four sons and of a daughter, Helen C. In Chicago, at the age of twenty, John Detweiler met Dwight L. Moody, taught in a Sunday school that Moody had started and, like the great evangelist, forsook a promising business career to engage in religious work exclusively. Through Moody he went into the Y. M. C. A. work, eventually becoming secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Harrisburg, Pa., where he was led to enter Gettysburg College, from which he graduated in 1871. He then entered the seminary at the same place. As a Lutheran minister his most important charge was the Kountze Memorial church, Omaha, Neb., which he served for twelve years. Kountze Memorial Lutheran church of Omaha is the largest Lutheran church in the United States today. Late in his ministerial career he found himself in substantial accord with the Baptist faith and practice and built up two strong Baptist churches in Kentucky. At the age of seventy he was obliged to withdraw from the active pastorate by reason of physical infirmities. The four sons are carrying on in Christ's name in widely separated points. They are John F., who is dean of the Spanish-American Theological Seminary, Los Angeles, Cal.; Charles S., superintendent for Latin North America, Home Mission Society; Frederick G., professor of sociology, Denison University; and James E., professor of church history, Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Osaka, Japan.

FIRST CHURCH OF MALONE, Rev. Robert S. Wallis pastor, has completed the most prosperous financial year of its history, each organization reporting a balance in the treasury; $3,000 has been paid to the New World Movement. Thirteen have been added to the membership. The feeling of harmony has been promoted by monthly fellowship suppers and social evenings by the various district groups. Mr. Wallis and wife have richly shared their Indian missionary experience with the churches of Northern New York. The church showed its confidence in the pastor's work at the annual meeting by voting a substantial increase in his salary.

NEW JERSEY

THE FIRST CHURCH OF BAYONNE, Rev. C. H. Rannels pastor, celebrated its fortieth anniversary Oct. 22-27. Mr. Rannels has been with the church since March, 1919. The church now has 295 members and during the past two years cleared off all indebtedness and greatly increased its contributions to benevolence.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE NEARLY FOUR YEARS that C. O. Fuller has been pastor of the Parsons Church thirty-eight have been baptized and thirteen received on confession of faith. The debt on the church has been paid; a parsonage bought and the debt over half paid. The interior of the church has been renovated. The financial support of the local work has nearly doubled and the missionary giving increased. A junior society of over eighty members and a senior young people's society has been supervised by Mr. Fuller. Mr. Fuller is about to close his work at Parsons and would be pleased to communicate with a church seeking a pastor.

DELAWARE

REV. A. F. WILLIAMSON, evangelist, has accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate of the Bethany Baptist Church, Wilmington, Del., and is already on the field. The outlook for a prosperous season is bright. There have been conversions, and baptisms, and there are other signs of the Spirit's presence.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

EVANGELIST GEORGE R. STAIR closed three weeks' evangelistic campaign with Albany Park Church, Chicago, on Sunday, Oct. 22. Sixty-six decision cards were signed; fifty of which expressed intentions of uniting with the Albany Park Church.

REV. J. A. BURROUGHS resigned his pastorate at Farson, Iowa, to accept a call to the First Church of Virden. He began work on this field Oct. 22. A reception was tendered him the evening of Oct. 26 at which the pastors of the other Protestant churches each delivered an address of welcome.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH at Jerseyville, R. B. Favoright pastor, has had another revival. Dr. Edwin R. Dow and Prof. Echols constituted the evangelistic team in a two weeks' campaign the first of October. Over fifty persons went forward. Thirty have thus far united with the church, twenty-eight of them by baptism. This makes a total of 152 additions to the church, the number baptized during this pastorate being 121. The pastor held a revival for a neighboring church, baptizing thirteen there, and his wife conducted a revival for another nearby country church and the pastor baptized seven persons there.

BELDEN AVENUE CHURCH, Chicago, has just celebrated the close of the second year of the pastorate of Dr. J. W. Hoyt. During this time over 300 have been received into membership. The benevolent pledge of $8,000 for the year 1922 has already been overpaid to the extent of $1,360.84, with two months yet to be added. The current expense budget has been raised from $7,000 to $14,000. During the summer the church building has been redecorated and various necessary repairs made, at a cost of over $3,000. The evangelistic services being conducted at the present time by Dr. George R. Stair are well attended, and successful in numbers responding to the invitations given.

Woman's Union of Chicago

Every meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Union of Chicago is a great meeting, but that of Tuesday, Nov. 14, promises to be of more than usual interest. First of all, the place of meeting is attractive and accessible—the beautiful new North Shore Baptist Church, corner Lakewood and Berwyn Avenue, two blocks west of Edgewater Beach "L" station. Second, the time is such that the men of our Baptist churches may have the privilege of attending. And last, the program is so attractive that no one can afford to miss it.

The program begins at 3 o'clock with a conference of great importance, followed by addresses by Mrs. Andrew MacLeish and Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham. At 5 o'clock there will be a vesper musical and at 6:15 the banquet served by the ladies of the North Shore Church. A special room will be reserved for World Wide Guild Girls. The evening program, beginning at 7:30, will be a veritable feast, as Dr. George L. Robinson of McCormick Theological Seminary will deliver an address on "Christianity and Other Faiths." This will be followed by the cantata "Ruth," presented by the young women of the Baptist Missionary Training School.

MINNESOTA

SUNDAY, OCT. 22, WAS THE first anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. H. W. Lough of West Duluth Church, and was appropriately observed in the morning service. During the first year thirty-nine persons have been added to the membership of the church, twenty-five by baptism. The increase in membership has been about 10 per cent. Progress has been made along all lines of church activity. The Sunday school has had a prosperous year. The church has a great field which is growing in population. It also has a fine building centrally located on Grand Avenue. The church is greatly encouraged and enthusiastic in its work.

OHIO

FIRST CHURCH, LIMA, is doing excellent work under Pastor Warren L. Steeves. Current expenses, exceeding $9,000 have been cared for and payments to the New World Movement increased over $1,000, making over $5,000 paid in for the year. The new subscription of $5,000 has just been received for home mission work in the New World Movement. Since last October, 153 new members have been received into full membership. Sunday school enrolment has increased over 200 and it is planned to have 1,000 enrolled next Easter. The church is filled for morning and evening services. The prayer meetings overflow the prayer-room frequently, and are greatly blessing the membership. The watchword is, "Cooperation and service."

MICHIGAN

REV. HERBERT GRIMWOOD, pastor of the Northville Church, presented his resignation, Sunday, Oct. 29. Although the church declined by unanimous vote to accept it, he decided to close his work there in the near future and is therefore open to correspondence with pastorless churches in Michigan, Ohio or Western Pennsylvania, with a view to settlement in another pastorate. Mr. Grimwood came to Northville three years ago after successful pastorates in Pennsylvania, Nebraska and Iowa. The work in Northville has suffered from serious difficulties for many years, yet the financial income for current expenses has more than doubled, contributions for benevolences have increased several hundred per cent, a new double garage has been built, a new furnace put in the church and the parsonage painted and otherwise repaired. The church has no debts and the Ladies' Aid has $1500 in reserve for further improvements. About thirty-five new members have united with the church.

AT A RECENT BUSINESS MEETING of the church at Pocatello, a strong building committee was appointed with the pastor as chairman to arrange the erection of a new church building next spring. The present edifice has become entirely too small and inconvenient for church use.

COLORADO

RICHARD GOBLE SELDON died Sept. 21 in Denver, after an illness of a few days.

He was the elder son of the late Rev. Edwin and Mrs. Emma Goble Seldon and was twenty-one years old. He was graduated from Denver University in June, 1921, with high honors and taught for one year in a Denver junior high school. His younger brother, Donald Perkins Seldon, survives him.

REV. C. P. MORRIS has accepted the pastorate at Sedro-Wooley. He is already on the field.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Southwestern Association

The Southwestern Association held its twenty-ninth annual meeting Oct. 17-19 with the church at National City, of which Rev. Geo. M. Parks was the pastor until a few months ago, and of which Rev. F. L. Blowers becomes pastor this month. Brother Parks is now educational director in First Church, San Diego, working among the young people, organizing boy scouts and similar work.

All the meetings of the association were well attended and were of unusual interest. This association consists of seventeen churches of San Diego and Imperial counties. Delegates and letters were received from all of them. Rev. F. O. Belden, of San Diego, was moderator, and Rev. Joseph D. Page, of East San Diego, clerk. The song service was led by Rev. F. T. Barkman, who also gave an address, and who is still doing a much-needed and efficient work among the thousands of service men now permanently located in San Diego. Addresses were also made by the Revs. C. E. Flanagan, F. L. Blowers, T. F. McCourtney, F. G. Davies, C. M. Kilgore, F. D. Finn, W. J. Beaven, Wm. Thomas, L. P. Valentine, J. D. Springston, W. F. Harper, Geo. Holt, R. Fredrickson, S. D. Bawden, and Dr. R. T. Gardner. A Ray Palmer and Deacon Bennett. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. E. Maley, of Holtville. Among the ladies who led in devotional exercises or made addresses were Mrs. Marston, Grace G. Van Zandt, M. Grant Edmonds, P. Fredrickson, J. R. Matthis, S. R. McKern, A. W. Rider, F. A. Crandall, F. O. Belden, R. W. Requa and the Misses Clara Nielson and Mary A. Greene. Mrs. F. O. Belden was toastmistress at the woman's banquet.

The address of Rev. P. Fredrickson on his missionary work in Africa, and that of Rev. S. D. Bawden on his missionary work in India, were thrillingly interesting and instructive.

The association is to meet next year with the Ocean Beach Church, of which Rev. Rolla E. Brown is the pastor. The new officers are Rev. T. F. McCourtney, of Brawley, moderator, and Rev. J. D. Page, clerk. The new B. Y. P. U. president is Roy Done, of Ocean Beach.

Play Santa to the Picaninnies!

Just now we are reading and studying a great deal about the Negro in Sunday school, mission circles, W. W. G. chapter, and C. W. C. band. To be useful, though, thought must be turned into action. A chance really to help the black man in whom we are all so interested is standing at our very door right now.

A letter from the only woman missionary of any denomination in Chattanooga, Tenn., tells pitifully of the need among the Negroes there. Says Mrs. Bishop, for many years a worker under the Woman's American Home Mission Society, "I always scrape the lining out of my pockets buying what it takes to finish out even after all the other things sent in have been stretched to the utmost limit." With fuel prohibitive for poor people, rents higher than ever before, and a great deal of unemployment, Mrs. Bishop dreads to face the winter without a supply of warm garments to supply the need. She works regularly with the people of twelve churches and at Christmas time the number of "chillens" would populate a whole county.

What does she need? Warm second-hand clothing of all kinds and sizes; wraps, overcoats, shoes and stockings; and for Christmas handkerchiefs, hair-ribbons, picture books, dolls, jack-knives, tops, boys' ties, fancy aprons, beads and little articles of household decoration such as table scarfs, pillow tops, towels, etc.

A new school has just been started in one of the poorest parts of the city and its attendance has grown in less than two weeks from forty-five to sixty-five. These little Tennessee picaninnies will go unvisited by Santa Claus unless some of their friends respond to this plea. Send any packages directly to Mrs. Nellie

Don't forget, also, that this is home mission period, and that this year the Christmas offering in church and Sunday school will go for the Negro in the North and the South. Christ alone can avert all race problems. Support his work and suspicion will turn to confidence, and hatred to love.

In the issue of June 15, of the Ussurijskoye Slovo, a Russian newspaper, the following item appears under the title "The Work of Baptists": "In these days arrived at Nikolsk-Ussurijsk the so-called American Mission which is occupied with Baptist propaganda. It is not enough for them to have their own preachers, they are arriving from abroad also. The Americans are preaching in English and are being interpreted by their own local preachers. The preaching is conducted in the Golgatha House, which for some reason is decorated with national flags. What hypocrisy! It were better if they should cover their face but hang out the red flag. There obviously is abundant harvest here for the Baptists, and it is not noticed that the Greek Church clergy is doing anything against them. True sometimes on holidays they have the book discourses but they are of little use. The living, burning word is what is needed, but that they have not. Because of this condition the Baptist community is growing. For us as Greek members, it is painful. Local clergy, start to work!"

Obituary

Mrs. Carrie L. Patt

Mrs. Carrie L. Patt, youngest daughter of Rev. S. M. Osgood, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., July 6, 1856, and passed away Thursday evening, Oct. 19, 1922. She was united in marriage to Rev. B. F. Patt in Chicago, Ill., June 13, 1878. During these forty-four years of married life she has been a most helpful companion in ministerial life, adapting herself to the many and varied phases of Christian service. The remarkable influence she has had over individual lives is evidenced in the unusually large correspondence she has held with the many friends made in the various fields of pastoral service. The home life was made beautiful and delightful by her sweet Christian spirit. The secret of her personal influence over others is to be found in the faithful observance of a quiet early morning hour of prayer, before any other home duties were performed. The past year has been one of failing health, and last May public church life and service were closed, and the past few months have been spent in the quiet home of her daughter, Mrs. Walter Castle. Her husband, Rev. B. F. Patt, and two children, Mrs. Walter Castle, of Alexandria, C. B. Patt, of Pittsburgh, and their families, with two brothers, E. S. and C. A. Osgood, of Chicago, Ill., sustained a great loss. The fragrance of such a life abides.

What Do Children Read?

After our first examination of these papers, 298 of them, 218 from girls and 80 from boys, we decided to tabulate them, and we were astonished to find that as far as prose is concerned the American child reads with credit and discretion.

There are some outstanding tragedies in these statistics. We offer them to you as a fairly nation-wide canvass, for what they are worth.

The most popular books, according to the number of times each was mentioned, are:

Little Women, 62; Treasure Island, 51; Huckleberry Finn, 41; Tom Sawyer, 40; Pollyanna, 30; Campfire Series, 29; Little Men, 26; Penrod, 25; Robinson Crusoe, 23; Anne of Green Gables Series, 23; Freckles, 22; The Five Little Colonel and Five Little Pepper Series, 21; The Last of the Mohicans, Heidi, 20; Ivanhoe, Uncle Tom's Cabin, 19; Grimm's Fairy Tales, Poe's Tales, 18; Andersen's Fairy Tales, The Call of the Wild, 17; Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, the Bible, Black Beauty, 16; David Copperfield, A Girl of the Limberlost, 15; Alice in Wonderland, Tarzan Books, Seventeen, 14; Joe's Boys, The Jungle Books, Kidnapped, Oliver Twist, 13; Burgess Bedtime Stories, Old Curiosity Shop, Swiss Family Robinson, 11; The Crisis, The Prince and the Pauper, A Tale of Two Cities and Tom Swift Series, 10.

Are you more surprised to find "Pollyanna" among the first five than you are to find the Bible twenty-third in the list?

If there were space to publish the entire list of books mentioned you would be even more astonished to find such titles as "The Broken Engagement," Balzac's "Comédie Humaine," "The History of Jesse James," "Wells' Outline of History," "St. Elmo," "The Shadow of Sin," "Ten Nights in a Bar Room." Three children (one of them, if we remember rightly, a girl) confessed to a weakness for Nick Carter. And two girls there still are who cling to the Elsie books.—J. F. in The Bookman.

A Banquet Start

The Baptist calendar of a certain church contained the following item: "Thursday evening the officers and teachers of the Sunday school had a splendid banquet at the parsonage, . . . a rally for the Bigger and Better Baptist Church School Program for 1922-23. Rev. Mr. Jensen was toastmaster and the following toasts were given: 'On the Mark,' 'Ready to Go,' 'Get Set,' 'Where To?' 'The Little Ones,' 'When Nobody Works.' This came from Delavan, Illinois: Rev. W. G. Everson, pastor of the Baptist church in Muncie, Indiana, also a brigadier-general in the United States army reports 35½ per cent increase in attendance from Oct. 2, 1921, to Sept. 24, 1922, and says, "The outlook is splendid and we are confidently expecting to hand up a new record during the next twelve months."

Rank of first seven in numbers registered: Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Ohio.

Rank in per cent: Montana, Southern California, Oregon, New Jersey, Arizona and Rhode Island, Nebraska and Nevada Minnesota.

New Books for Children—Little and Big

The Comics, by Mary Carolyn Davies. New York: Funk Wagnalls Company. $1 net.

And what would be the good of books if we'd never learned our a, b, c's? Yes, n a, b, c book—the kind that grown-ups will read from a to z. The illustrations are colored and up-to-the minute.

Beautiful Joe, by Marshall Saunders. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. $1.50 net.

This is an attractive new illustrated edition, revised by the author in 1921. The fact that 750,000 copies of "Beautiful Joe" have been sold prior to this edition speaks for itself as to the popularity of this autobiography of a dog.

Christmas Light, by Ethel Calvert Phillips. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co. $1.50.

A children's story of Bethlehem and the first Christmas. In picturesque style the author tells how little Naomi is taken by her father to see the Christ-child in his manger. The details which will especially appeal to children are emphasized. A story that will bring the Babe near to little ones.

The Boy Jesus and His Companions, by Rufus M. Jones. New York: Macmillan. $1.25.

Stories of the child Jesus always have an appeal to children. This is so written that it can be read to children from six to eight years of age, and it can be put into the hands of children eight to twelve years old. The illustrations add much to the appeal of the book.

My Little Fendal Cousin of Long Ago, by Laura E. Richards. Boston, Page Co. $1.

Another of Mrs. Richards' "Little Cousin Series," this being the story of Ian of Morven, a boy of Scotland in the time of Robert the Second. The book is well illustrated. Particularly recommended for parents who wish their children to have meaty reading that is simply and temptingly served.

Adventures of Tommy Tittlemouse, by Clara Ingram Judson. Chicago: Rand McNally Co.

It's surprising what Tommy Tittlemouse, dining about the garden, learns of garden ways. He and Mrs. Tommy set up house-keeping and their little story gives a deep insight into nature's charming ways. The lectures (they must be spelled with a capital letter) which are many, a number of them beautifully colored, are made by rances Beem.

Star Cottrell's Treasure, by Rupert Sargent Holland. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott. $1.75.

Tom Hallett was sixteen and "ready for anything"—and the "anything" came out excitingly in the invitation of a passing stranger to a camping party on Cottrell's Island, the same island having become his by inheritance. There's a old pre-Revolution house on the island, hidden treasure, mysterious visitors and big surprise. A good story for a live boy, and well told.

The Foxes, by E. A. Henry. New York. Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25 net.

A collection of five-minute stories. Here's the little fox of cruelty and the little fox of dishonesty and of shame—the foxes that are likely to creep in and spoil the fair life of boys and girls. The book is written for boys and girls. It will be a fine thing to have it lying on their book-case where they can observe often just what the little foxes will do to them if they don't watch out. Also—ministers who find it a little difficult to manage the children's sermon will like to have the book handy.

Early Candlelight Stories, by Stella C. Shetter. Illustrated by Dorothy Lake Gregory. Chicago: Rand McNally & Co.

Goodnight stories which grandmother tells to her three grandchildren about the good times she had when she was a little girl—for instance the day grandmother whistled in church! The book makes an instant appeal to the eye.

Father and Son, by Philip E. Howard. Philadelphia: Sunday School Times Co. $1.

The father who has a son will get something worth-while from this book. He cannot fail to, even though he may feel that he has been an ideal father. And the father who has not known how to get close to the heart of his boy may be shown the door that will permit him entrance.

Stories from the Old Testament Told for Children, by Caroline Kellogg. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Co.

Especially for little children, might be added. The stories are carefully selected and the flavor of the Bible text is retained throughout. The print is large and the volume artistic. One of the books that will give much pleasure to the eye of the child as well as help in his right development.

Ann and Her Mother, by O. Douglas. New York: Doran Co. $1.75 net.

In which Ann persuades her mother to "write her life," and thereby is set down the story of a Scotch minister's wife with all of its busyness, its humor, its warmth. The characters have individuality and are well-drawn. Those who have read "Penny Plain" by the same author will find herein the same charm.

Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea, by Jules Verne; translated by Philip Schuyler Allen of the University of Chicago. Illustrated in colors, by Milo Winter. Chicago: Rand McNally & Co.

The story, written fifty years ago, holds boys spellbound as they follow the rich imagination of the author. Not only is the boy's own imagination richly stimulated, but his knowledge is increased. The attractive form in which the book is made up fits it especially well for a gift book.

Winona and Her Own, by Margaret Wildemer. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.75 net.

One of the Camp Fire Girl Series, and the fifth of the Winona Books, the preceding one being "Winona's Way." Those who have followed Winona thus far know that she is a girl who does things and to whom things happen. There are no dull moments in the story. It is a safe, clean and interesting story to put into the hands of girls of the Camp Fire age.

Doggy Woof and Pussy Meow, by Mary Carolyn Davies. New York: Funk Wagnalls Co. Size 13 1/4 inches by 9 1/4. $1.50 net.

Other friends of children as well as Doggy and Pussy are pictured and set to verse. The pictures, twelve in all, are realistically colored and will make the chief appeal but as well the child will be delighted to hear such as this:

"Because it is their nature,
There, under the blue sky,
The ducklings swim already,
Better than you or I."

Jeanne-Marie's Triumph, by Clara E. Laughlin. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25 net.

"There was Jeanne-Marie who was twenty when the word came which suddenly stripped her world of so much that made it worth living in," and Jeanne-Marie triumphing over her personal loss, catching her vision is the story Miss Laughlin gives us out of the Great War.

The Merry Children's Book of Play, by Mary Carolyn Davies. New York: Funk Wagnalls Co. Size 11½ inches long by 8½. $1.25 net.

Not a book telling children of games to play, but showing in full-page beautifully colored illustrations, children at fascinating plays, such as skiing, "creep-door, sneak-door," sleigh-riding, skating, blind-man, tea-parties, laundering, punch-and-Judy. Jingly verses go with each picture.

Heroes of the Ruins, by Francis Rolt-Wheeler. Illustrated by C. A. Federer. New York: Doran Co. $1.50 net.

This is the third of the "Round the World with the Boy Journalists" series. "From his humid and gloomy dug-out, out deeply into the slope of the Ravine of the Dead, Andre Mortieu crept . . . The War was over" and so the reader follows Andre through the war-devastated country and learns of heroic deeds and sacrifices almost first-hand. It is a worth-while book to put in the hands of a boy who will find here real bravery not mere daredevilry.

Brin, the Adventures of a Little Bear. Pictures by Louis Moe. English verse by Mary Carolyn Davies. New York: Funk Wagnalls Co. Size 15¾ inches by 11½. $2.00 net.

The pictures are mentioned first because they are primary, the verse secondary. They are in colors, and the sort that will draw forth many delighted giggles from little ones. There are but twenty of these pages, but each page is a volume of fun and entertainment.

Tales Told by the Gander, by Maude Radford Warren and Eve Davenport. Illustrated by Charles A. Federer. Doran Co. $2.50 net.

Well, isn't it almost time the Gander had a chance to speak, after all these years and years of Mother Goose? Not that Mother Goose is left out—they are really her tales, only the Gander has the last word, so to speak. He takes up the tale where Mother Goose leaves off—for instance, he'll tell you whether little Miss Muffet ever did have her supper and ever so many things that Mother Goose left in mid-air. The Gander's tales have ever so many colored pictures that are very beautiful, and also many black and white pictures that tell delightful stories.

Little Glad-Heart, by Linda Stevens Almond. Boston: Page Co.

There's Jinny Warwick, just returned from boarding-school with "a strange manner and a head full of strange notions"—rather "uppety" notions, and there's "the crowd" and twelve-year-old Joan, Little Glad Heart. Miss Jinny's notions cause some strained relations, but everything is straightened out satisfactorily for everybody, with Joan having a generous share in the process. It's a book that the ten to sixteen-year-old Jinny's and Joans will curl themselves over contentedly until the last page is reached, and then they'll begin at the first page again.

The May Byron Books for Children. New York: George H. Doran Co. 75 cents each. These are four gay little books in verse—and pictures. The pictures illustrate the sing-songy verses and, besides, they tell all sorts of stories of their own to those who can read pictures but not verses. There's no choice between the four volumes, so if one can have only one shut your eyes and choose between "The Little Black Bear," "The Little Brown Rooster," "The Yellow Duckling" and "The Little Tan Terrier." Some of the pictures are delightfully colored and the black and whites have their own particular merit. We can't give you a sample of the pictures, but you may have a tiny bit of "The Little Brown Rooster."

"He'd a fine big voice, and a fine red comb, And a splendid tail, and a happy home.— But (mind, this must never be repeated), The Little Brown Rooster was too conceited!"

A Boy's Life of Grenfell of The Laborador, by Dillon Wallace. New York: Revell Co. $1.50.

This should be placed in the list of "best" books for boys. It gives the boys geography, history, the touch with strange lives and the account of simple and heroic sacrifice for a worthy cause.

DICTION IN SINGING

"Diction in singing is adapting the rhythm of perfected speech to the less exacting rhythm of song."

The above is one of the many definitions of diction given at a recent meeting of the New York City Singing Teachers' Association.

We will analyze it—"Adapting the rhythm of perfected speech"—"perfected speech" must mean, for our use, the words which in a sentence are given perfectly. That is an exceedingly broad demand. It must be perfect in pronunciation. Pronunciation refers to the color and use of vowels, prescribed by the pronouncing authorities, such as dictionaries and other books of philology. Now the books which are conceded as authorities in pronunciation, make their way into all parts of the country and are read and examined by persons of every shade of culture. Nevertheless, while the words published by them are accepted as reliable, they are, in the active intercourse of life, almost invariably disregarded. Philadelphians, Georgians, and Bostonians disport themselves among vowel colors, as their parents did before them, before the builders of dictionaries and pronounced on how they should be given. But, let it be said that this verbal intercourse is not "perfected speech," it is colloquial speech. Our definition of "perfected speech," which makes it clear that "perfected speech" is that which is required by the authorities of correct pronunciation. And how true it is that the singing artists leave the idiosyncrasies of their pronunciation behind them, when they enter the realm of song. Converse with singers from Philadelphia, Atlanta, or Boston, and you can quickly tell the section of the country from which they came. But if in singing they meet the requirements of good diction, it is not possible to tell.

Another quality of "perfected speech" is articulation, which cannot be localized. "Perfected speech" assumes that the speaker uses the organs of articulation perfectly, that each word and syllable brought to the listener's ear with perfect distinctness.

To all intents and purposes our "perfected speech" has passed its technical requirements, but before speech can be pronounced as "perfect," it must be identified with thought. It is thought's audibly vehicle. It must ever carry with it an idea.

This is the parting of the ways as between better and best. The one who adheres to the technical exactions of perfect pronunciation and accepted pronunciation is certainly better than those who have given no thought to diction, from those standpoints. But, to be best, one must see the beautiful image in the uncut block of marble. In other words, the sentence which conceals the elevated thought, the tender sentiment, or the patriotic impulse in its text, quite aptly identifies with the uncut block of marble" symbolism, in the ordering. On the one hand the better does not ignore the thought behind the text, but they too often use it as a vehicle to exploit their perfected technique; while those who are of the best use their perfected technique to exploit and bring out the beauty of the thought. And, so, after the storm has passed, and the clouds have entirely disappeared, we are compelled to embrace a rather homely summing-up of the question, which is as follows: those who,—speaking in the parlance of the craft,—"get it over" have good diction, and those who do not, have not.

Let those who will prate or write of "pure vowel emission," perfect enunciation of syllables, etc., obtained by lowering the larynx, hollowing the tongue, rounding and hardening the lips, keeping down the hyoid muscle, etc., etc., through pages and pages of physiological analysis, and attempt to magnify the importance of these things, by the revelations of magnifying glass or laryngoscope. But the highest flights of technique comprehend perfected enunciation and correct pronunciation, neither of which are of much avail to a high level of artistic achievement, unless they are used by a singer who has the taste, refinement and poetic insight to employ them to further the power of his or her interpretations.

MUSIC REVIEWS

From the Lorenz Publishing Co., Dayton Ohio.

The Beatitudes Ashford
Triumphant Life Fearis

Two serviceable and intrinsically worthy cantatas for chorus choirs able to digest, and deliver music of average grade. Like all the output of this house, there is evident a fine balance of what is musically effective, tempered with a keen appreciation of what is practical and possible. The tone of the two works is devotional and sincere; progressive choir-leaders will do well to examine them.

From the Rodeheaver Co., Chicago, Ill.

A Musical Evening with Shakespeare
Herbert

To the choir or choral organization on the lookout for a number of more than usual interest, this novel production is highly recommended. Doctor Herbert has conceived the plan of arranging many of the lyrics of the immortal bard of Avon, collecting the time-honored musical settings by Arne, Haydn, Schubert, Bishop, Purcell, and others, as well as making some corking good songs and glees of his own and presenting us with a happy alternation of solos, quartets, and ensembles of various types, agreeably spaced out by explanatory material designed for a reader. The arrangements are first-class, easy to do, attractive in every way. I can think of no more delightful and up-lifting evening than one spent in hearing this coherent program well presented.

From J. Fearis & Bro., Chicago, Ill.

L'il Black Pansy Webb

This simple lyric is attractive and easy—two traits which will doubtless win for it a wide popularity. It is a typical dainty fantasy, with an ingratiating melody and an individual accompaniment. With a singer able to present the song with the appropriate coloring, the effect upon an audience will be without question.

The Near East Relief has just received a box of clothing from the Baptist Orphanage, 58th and Thomas streets, Philadelphia. Inquiry was made for particulars, and the reply came that every one at the orphanage felt that, owing to the great need of the children in the Near East, it was only right to divide with them.

In reporting the laying of the cornerstone of the Temple Church, Chicago, recently, it was stated that the Temple Church represents the combined membership of Lorimer Memorial and Pilgrim Temple. The Lorimer Church has merged with no other church. It is located at 70th Street and St. Lawrence Avenue and is erecting a $75,000 building of its own. Rev. C. B. Althoff is pastor and has been with the church for ten years.

President Harding has honored the Baptist denomination with the appointment of Ex-Governor Carl Milliken of Maine, President Faunce of Brown University, and Colonel Edward H. Haskell of Boston, on the special cooperating committee of the Near East Relief Association, which is making a vigorous campaign in behalf of the sufferers and refugees of Asia Minor and Greece, deported from Smyrna.

In President Harry Pratt Judson's recent statement at the thirteenth anniversary of the opening of the University of Chicago a few facts of striking interest were presented. The total area of the university grounds in 1892 was twenty-four acres; in 1922 the total is ninety-eight (with seventy-one acres additional in the observatory site at Williams Bay, Wis., and ten acres in the geological field station, St. Genevieve County, Mo.). The total buildings in 1892 were four; in 1922 there are fifty. The faculty in 1892 numbered 140, which has grown to 375 in 1921-22. Matriculations, Oct. 1, 1892, were 551, while matriculations to Oct. 1, 1922, reached a total of 98,511. Registrations in the opening year were 742; in 1921-22, 12,439. There were no alumni in 1892, while the total number in 1922 is 14,951. The total assets in 1892 were $2,778,166; last year's budget expenditures were $3,374,083.43.

Unanimously adopted by a rising vote at the services of Second Baptist Church, St. Louis, Sunday morning, Oct. 22, 1922, at the close of a sermon by the minister, W. C. Bitting, on "The War Upon War" was the following: "Resolved: That we request the president and executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, either alone or in conjunction with other religious bodies as may seem most expedient, to call and arrange for a meeting of members of all religious and moral organizations in the United States, and of such other bodies as may be sympathetic with the purposes contemplated to consider the unification of existing sentiment against war as a means of settling international questions, and such expression of that sentiment as may be most effective with our own government, and the governments of the world; and that the pastor of this church be requested to communicate this action to the president and executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, and to such others as his judgment may decide."

God Cares—Do You?

Thousands of mothers and little children in this America of ours are hungry and cold today. With the coal high priced and hard to obtain there is sure to be much suffering this winter. Christmas is coming and many parents will have no gifts for their children. Will you not enable your home missionaries to supply their needs by furnishing such articles as the following:

Wearing Apparel: second hand clothing of all kinds in good condition, such as dresses, overcoats, stockings, underwear, suits, shoes, caps, mittens and baby layettes.

Industrial Supplies: patch work, stamped linens for embroidery, thread, thimbles, scissors and basted garments.

Medical Supplies: bandages, surgical dressings, hospital garments, bed linens and towels.

Miscellaneous Supplies: gifts of all kinds for men, women and young folk. Toys for children of all ages. Remember what Christmas meant to you when you were a child!

(For more specific information apply to your State White Cross Director and send for the new leaflet on White Cross Service—Overland Division.)

BOMBARD MATHER WITH BARRELS

Mather School, in Beaufort, South Carolina, is especially in need of supplies just at this time. The budget has been cut $1,700 and the salaries of several teachers must be met by selling the contents of barrels to the Negroes in the surrounding country.

God's Answer

EVERY Christian is a worker in God's Kingdom. "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" is the first expression of the Christian life. If we have not the will to work, we are not yet Christians. As Christians in the Baptist denomination we have our work in our organized activities reaching all over the world. To know of these activities is to know what God will have us to do. This information we have week by week in "The Baptist," and month by month in "Missions." These, then, are God's answer to the Christian's first question.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan recently delivered a series of lectures at the First Church, Wilmington, N. C., under the auspices of the Wilmington Ministers Association.

Rev. W. T. Roberts of Lansing, Mich. after more than seven years of service with the Michigan Baptist Convention has closed his work. Mr. Roberts has a longing for the pastorate and will probably return to that field.

As a result of the agreement made at the Washington Conference, the United States postoffice in Shanghai will be closed. All mail sent to Shanghai after Dec. 1, 1922 must have full international postage.

The Winthrop Street Church, Taunton, Mass., welcomed its new pastor, Rev. J. Earle Edwards, Nov. 5. The church was organized 103 years ago and during its history it has had only thirteen pastors, the present pastor being the thirteenth.

Among the preachers at the University of Chicago we find the names of Rev. M. A. Jones of the Ponce de Leon Church, Atlanta, Georgia, who will speak Nov. 26 and Dec. 3; and Rev. A. W. Wishart who will deliver the convocation sermon Dec. 17.

Mr. Martin Hofmeister, Pittsburgh, Pa., father of Dr. T. M. Hofmeister, First Church, Greenfield, Ohio, has retired after fifty years' service with the United States Steel Corporation. He is the only veteran serving the corporation during a full half-century. The firm expressed its appreciation in the form of a substantial cash bonus and a liberal pension. Dr. Hofmeister points to this institution as a corporation with a soul.

The International Convention of the World League against Alcoholism will be held in Toronto, Can., Nov. 24-29. The league grew out of a demand for cooperation of the friends of prohibition throughout the world. All individuals in sympathy with the world prohibition program are invited to attend the convention as individuals whether they represent organizations or not.

Dr. J. W. Conley, who has served churches at Omaha, St. Paul, Oak Park, Ill., and Fresno, Cal., will celebrate his seventieth birthday anniversary Nov. 20. He is in very feeble health and feels that he is about to make the Great Adventure. We feel sure that it would be a comfort to this man who served so long and faithfully if his old friends would write him a word of greeting. He may be addressed at Cannon Falls, Minn.

President Harry Pratt Judson, of the University of Chicago, in addressing the students on the thirtieth anniversary of its opening, made the following striking comment: "The material growth of the university has been marvelous. It will, I believe, in the near future be still more marvelous. But these material things are after all of least importance in an institution of learning. They are the things which strike the eye. The things which are of more importance, however, are the things which affect the spirit of university life, the spirit of university work. They are far more important than the mere magnitude of the physical plant. Great spirit, not great wealth, means great things. The university is not educating anybody. We can only give you an opportunity, and if you avail yourself of it you can get things that are priceless, that will last as long as you last, and will make you more of a man or a woman."

The church at Elgin, Ill., has refused to accept the resignation of its pastor, Rev. A. D. McGlashan. More than 400 attended the midweek meeting when action upon the resignation was to be taken. The vote was practically unanimous that the pastor be requested to reconsider. He will remain in Elgin.

Prof. Albert Henry Newman gave an interesting estimate of William Cleaver Wilkinson as "a high critic of our own times." Dr. Newman gave him the place of the best literary light in the Baptist denomination since the days of Milton. The address was given before the Chicago Baptist Ministers' Conference at the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary.

The Metropolitan Church comes to the close of its associational year with a splendid report. The outstanding features have been the burning of the $25,000 mortgage and the passing of the 1000 mark in membership. Pastor John Compton Ball has received 136 members during the year; after allowing for deaths, removals and exclusions, there is a net gain of eighty-three in membership for the year, bringing the total membership to 1036. The total receipts for the year amount to $29,400.

The inauguration of special service in the field of recreation is announced by the children's bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor, with the appointment to its permanent staff of Martha Travilla Speakman, recreation expert. Miss Speakman was in charge of the organization of play in the schools of Porto Rico, during the children's year campaign recently concluded by the children's bureau. She conducted classes in various cities throughout the island to teach the schoolteachers games and instruct them in play direction.

The warehouse of the Foreign Mission Society in Brooklyn reported, at the close of business Nov. 8, that a total of 661 packages, bags and barrels, had been received, coming from all sections of the country. This is a most gratifying showing for so early in the season of baling, and indicates the extent to which the appeal on behalf of the suffering people of Russia has awakened response. Already forty-eight bales, in size and weight similar to those sent last year, have been packed and are awaiting transportation to the steamship pier. Baptists of Southern California forwarded all their packages on one of the steamships of the Luckenbach Steamship Company from Los Angeles to New York through the Panama Canal. This company has graciously furnished free transportation for these packages, which will be delivered at the warehouse in Brooklyn about Nov. 25 and will thus be in time for baling and transportation to the steamship which will carry them to Russia. It is anticipated that every day will now show an increasingly large number of deliveries of packages at the warehouse. A second edition of shipping tags had to be printed in order to meet the numerous requests for extra tags. Everybody is helping to "rush that ship to Russia."

That December Campaign

We may not have torch light processions but all the other essential equipment for an orthodox campaign is now ready. There will be four-minute speakers; hundreds of every-family canvasses; scores of churches will try the experiment of placing THE BAPTIST and Missions in the church budget so that every member will have at least the opportunity of giving worth while to his church and to the kingdom at large. What is your church doing to make the December campaign for these journals a smiling success?

Killam's Kollum

She Would Killam by the Grose

"The machine works without knowing what it is doing. The unbalanced person is very busy, but he does not realize what he is doing. The drifter does a good many things, but he does not think what he is doing.

"The denomination is doing a vast number of things, but it does not want to be a machine, it wants to be perfectly sane and it does not want to drift. The only adequate way in which it can know what it is doing is through its denominational journals. Their purpose is to let each of us know what all the others are doing. Like the telephone system, they can only carry out their purpose when everybody is a subscriber.

"Somebody has suggested that the purpose of the denominational journals is to put an end to ignorant, non-missionary Baptists and that the best way to do this is to Killam by the Grose."—Mrs. Nathan R. Wood.

They Are Life Preservers

"The denomination must support THE BAPTIST and Missions, for self-preservation and self-propagation. The denomination must live and grow. The children must sustain the mother, and the mother must serve the children.

"The Christian who is not missionary in spirit is not a Christian. It is impossible to sustain missions without intelligence. Missions, the magazine, is the intelligence department of the Baptist army around the world, where there is neither East nor West. The only question is whether we shall give and sustain sacrificially or half-heartedly.

"Like it or not, the times are such that every big thing done in a big way demands publicity, information, facts. The merchant who does not advertise soon goes out of business. Our denomination needs THE BAPTIST just as much as it needs a vision, funds, officers, or even vital principles derived from the New Testament. Those who do not support THE BAPTIST and Missions practically say by their decision that they are willing to let the denomination with its world message, dwindle peak and pine. Is this what our Lord wants? If not, then let us all get busy and push the campaign for THE BAPTIST and Missions because of what these two publications mean to the truth in which we believe and for which we stand."—W. P. Lovett, Secretary of the Detroit Citizens' League.

Executive Committee Meets

The Executive Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention met in Chicago, Nov. 2, 1922. All members were present, or sent regrets for unavoidable absence.

Committee Changes

The changes in convention committees are: Committee on Denominational Day, Rev. Arthur Cleaves, Providence, R. I., in place of Rev. J. B. Slocum, deceased; Finance Committee: Mr. Ambrose Swasey, Cleveland, Ohio, in place of Pres. C. A. Barbour; Future Denominational Program: Rev. C. Wallace Petty, Pittsburgh, Pa., in place of Mr. J. C. Colgate, who resigned; Hon. C. E. Milliken, Augusta, Me., in place of Mr. O. R. Judd; Mrs. Cornelia Woelfkin, New York City, in place of Mrs. G. C. Moor, Messrs. F. W. Ayer and Robert L. Scott resigned as members of the Finance Committee. Mr. Ambrose Swasey resigned as representative of the Executive Committee on the General Board of Promotion.

The Executive Committee voted to recommend to the convention the proposed amendment to the By-laws, Article I, Section 1, relating to qualifications of delegates to the convention, slightly changed in phraseology.

Committees were appointed to make arrangements for the participation of Northern Baptists in the centenary of the Walloon-Huguenot settlements next year; to join with other committees in the promotion of the expression of sentiment against war as a means of settling international disputes; to prepare the convention budget for 1923-1924.

The Convention Preacher

The Rev. W. W. Bustard, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, Ohio, was chosen as the convention preacher, with the Rev. D. J. Evans, pastor of the First Church, Kansas City, Mo., as alternate.

The stimulation of interest in attendance upon the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance, July 1923, was committed to the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

The special committee which had been studying the matters of transportation of the Northern Baptist Convention made a full report containing recommendations which were adopted as follows:

1. That Mr. Brimson, through his long railroad experience, is probably better qualified to administer the office of transportation manager than any other man of our denomination; and that we, as an Executive Committee, express to him our heartiest appreciation of the service he renders in this difficult and delicate position.

2. That we suggest to Mr. Brimson the desirability of requiring each beneficiary of transportation privileges, to report to him at the end of each year the number of miles traveled on each pass.

3. That secretaries or other denominational officers carrying annuals which they use only once or twice a year be requested to relinquish them in favor of other men who travel constantly, and thus assist in an equitable distribution of transportation.

4. That our transportation manager be requested to furnish annually to the Executive Committee a complete list of persons who are entitled to passes, a list of the passes which they now hold, and a description of the territory that each man covers in his official work.

5. That a list be secured of the names of Baptists who have passes, but who are engaged in non-denominational work and that the railroads be urged not to check such transportation against the transportation granted our denominational workers.

6. That we urge the officers of our societies, boards, and conventions to make only reasonable requests for transportation.

7. That we are convinced that no transportation should be secured except through our transportation department. Brethren who succeed in this through other points of contact with the railroads embarrass the transportation manager in efforts at securing legitimate privileges, increase irregularities, and put in jeopardy the whole distribution of free transportation.

8. Finally, your committee suggests that a committee of three be appointed: one from the East, one from the West, and one from the Midwest, to continue the study of the question of transportation, to hear complaints, to confer if need be with railroad officials, and to cooperate with our transportation manager in any way that will conserve our interests and increase our denominational efficiency.

Other important matters were carefully considered.

The next meeting of the Executive Committee will be held in Chicago, March 8, 1923.

W. C. BITTING, corresponding sec'y.

Promotional Workers' Conference

By HARRY S. MYERS

About six months ago a small group of men interested in promotional work met at Atlantic City to confer about their work. The session was so helpful that it was agreed to ask Rev. S. M. Cavert of the Federal Council to arrange for a conference at Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 1-2.

About ninety men and two women, representing eighteen different denominations met for the two days. These people were the men and women from the promotional departments of the various denominations. Mr. W. B. Lippard, Rev. S. R. Warburton and Harry S. Myers were the Northern Baptists in attendance. Bishop Nicholson of Chicago, a Methodist, presided. Rev. S. M. Cavert of the Federal Council was secretary. Robert E. Speer gave the opening address on "What Should be the Purpose and Scope of the Denominations' Promotional Work." This was the only formal address given. The other topics were presented in a ten or fifteen-minute statement and then discussed. Some of these statements gave the combined experiences of several denominations. Many of them gave the experience or practice of the denomination represented by the speaker.

Among the topics discussed were stewardship, literature, charts, advertising, the press, stereopticon lectures, organization of financial department, accounting, every-member canvass, individual gifts, field work, relation of promotional agency to other denominational agencies.

Plans of Others Similar

It is impossible to give much of this discussion but a few things are of interest. The Disciples, Methodists and Baptists have boards of promotion of about 140 members. The Disciples have merged their board of promotion and their national societies (except the board of education) into the one society called United Christian Missionary Society. The plans followed by other denominations are very similar to our Baptist plans but we learned some things that will be turned over to the proper officers and committees.

It is very plain that some of our Baptist difficulties are the difficulties of others. Also that some of the successes of our board of promotion are similar to theirs. A well known Methodist secretary recently stated that in spite of their difficulties they must not think of returning to old methods of separate board solicitations but must keep the present more efficient method.

It became evident at every session that there were many things that might be done together better than separately, but there did not seem to be any way to get them started. It was agreed to hold another meeting in about six months and have as the topic "The Relationship of the Promotional Agencies to the Mobilization of the Local Church for its full Program." A committee composed of Dr. Patterson, Presbyterian; Dr. Sampe, Reformed; Dr. Diffenderfer, Methodist; Mr. Myers, Baptist; and Mr. Cavert of the Federal Council, was appointed to prepare the program. Also to this committee was referred the question of a joint program in some city similar in interdenominational participation to those recently held in Schenectady, Hartford, Fort Wayne, Canton and Erie by the Foreign Missions Conference, but of course with a program related to the whole promotional program.

After such fellowship with such splendid Christians as were found here it becomes easy to think of helping one another and receiving help in return. We also see more plainly that the board of promotion is the promotional department of every Baptist mission interest.

The City Mission Society of Denver, Colo., reports gratifying progress. Three of its missions have been organized into churches. Its Mexican mission, only three years old, has been organized into a church with seventy-five members. The new Hope Church (Negro), which was organized with thirty-two members a few months ago, now has one hundred and seventy-five members. It has recently bought church and parsonage property costing $10,000. The church is making a heroic effort to raise the entire sum for this purpose. There are now five Negro Baptist churches in Denver.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce recently sent out a questionnaire to pastors in various sections of the country. The motor car has been praised in the pulpit as a great asset to society and it has been denounced as a competitive temptation drawing persons away from the church services on Sunday. It is said that the average opinion is that the automobile has been a great aid to the pastor who possessed one increasing the range of his calling ability about threefold. The question of whether cars tend to increase the attendance at service or diminish it seems to vary with the locality. The average opinion on this point is said to be well expressed by Rev. W. O. Benthin of the Presbyterian Church, Camas, Washington. "The car may be a church aid, but it must be converted."

The Baptist

What We Need Just Now

THIS is a very practical question which we confront in our denominational life just at this period of the year's work. We have gone past the half-year mark and are headed for the climax next April.

The first and greatest need is for a prayer passion to envelop our denominational life and structure. The only hope for such an intercessory passion to be produced is through the determined efforts of those who now know the power and the possibility of real intercession. The sick and weak cannot run a race until the strong and well have ministered and changed their weakness and ill-health to vigor and health. We shall never be able to develop a larger group of intercessors until those who know what prayer really means to their lives, to their church and to their denomination, and the kingdom, have definitely and positively set themselves the task of enlisting and training those who through spiritual weakness and failure have heretofore failed to produce and develop the power of intercession. Intercession, without doubt, is the greatest unused force we possess. Recently we found in a church a member who for twenty-nine years had determinedly set his face against the missionary enterprise and had ruined the missionary passion of many another member because he occupied a place of leadership. A little band of people formed a prayer circle and his name was at the head of the list to be prayed for secretly. To some it seemed a hopeless quest, but within a few weeks the Spirit of God, energized in that man's soul by the intercession of faith, had brought the man to the place where he saw the vision of his Lord in connection with world missions. Yes, we can do great things—when we have prayed.

The second thing needed just now is a spirit of brotherly love to cast out the fear that possesses the hearts and lives of many a preacher and member when they confront a non-participating church membership. To confess Christ and profess him with the lips and then deny him in our daily living is to do what brought swift death to Ananias and Sapphira. Yet our church membership rolls are full of church members who for years having promised to give themselves to Christ, have not done so and have neither worshipped, served or given. They have a name to live but are dead in trespasses and sins. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not to him it is sin." "By this ye may now that ye have passed from death unto life because ye love the brethren." Yes, we must love those non-participating members enough to overcome our fear of them and immediately proceed to minister to them in love and courage until we have either won them back to Christian living or discovered that they are dead and should be buried. But the church is not a burying ground and should not be used as a morgue.

We fear so we fail. We love our ease so we let many die of sin sickness. Love and courage are needed now, brothers and sisters. Prayer, love and conscious action will produce within a short while over 80 per cent of your church membership as stewarding participants. Think what that would mean to our local churches and our world missionary enterprises, but think, first of all, what it would mean to the souls whose blighted spiritual lives were saved from sin's ravages. Some one says, "It would create trouble in the local churches." Could there be any worse troubles than those found present when we have feared and allowed a go-as-you-please attitude to rule?

Finally, we need just now to talk up our pastor, our church, our Baptist association, our state convention and our Northern Baptist Convention, with all its outreachings. Talk them up because they are part of our Lord's heritage and we believe in them with all our heart and soul. They are worth while—very much worth while. They are vital to us and to our Lord and therefore they must not fail now or in the remaining months of this convention year. Pray, brothers and sisters. Love each other with a love that serves the others and think well enough of all your fellow servants and the cause to speak well of them constantly and everywhere. That sort of living and loving spells victory for Christ and his cause.

Evangelism and Evangelists

Churches, like individuals, are creatures of habit. They become accustomed to doing things in certain ways. This fact is true in the matter of evangelism. In some sections of the country the "big meeting" is an event of the summer months and there are accessions to the churches in large numbers during the heated period of the year. In the more formal and frigid North there has been a constant trend toward the Easter time as the season in which the most emphasis is placed on securing definite commitment to Christ and his church.

In spite of the grip which habit has on the churches, styles in evangelism change. For some years the great tabernacle meeting has been the most dramatic of all the various types of effort to secure the conversion of individuals and the transformation of communities. That good has been and is accomplished by these great mass efforts, few will care to question. In hundreds of communities a revolution has taken place in the lives of outstanding citizens and wide-spread community clean-ups have resulted. The great evangelistic parties include specialists from the stage carpenter to the "star" himself.

We scan scores of religious newspapers of all denominations week by week and it is clear that tabernacle meetings are going out of style. The emphasis is being placed upon evangelistic efforts of the local church or churches of the community. Experience has proved that it is a most difficult task for the local church to satisfy the ideals of many of those who took the first steps in a Christian life down a saw-dust trail.

Pastors are being impressed with the fact that by the very nature of their calling they are messengers of the gospel. They may not be able to jump over a table or turn handsprings on the platform, but they can and will preach the gospel of salvation from sin as good ministers of Jesus Christ.

We have recently had conversation upon the subject of evangelism with two men whose churches through the years have been peculiarly blessed with the fruits of an evangelistic ministry. These men emphasize the value of keeping in mind constantly the needs of individual hearers and the necessity of expecting results in the form of personal commitments to Christ. The pastor whose desire to help folks shapes, in some measure at least, his message week by week, creates an atmosphere of expectancy in which evangelistic results are natural if not inevitable.

Preaching the "simple gospel" is not a simple matter. Not all so-called "gospel sermons" are fruitful in the conversion of men. One of these pastors to whom reference has been made states that it is a source of constant surprise to find that the messages which seem to have the least of personal appeal often bring the largest results. On Sunday mornings, preaching to edify and establish the saints, he has found sinners seeking salvation. The habit of expecting God to honor and bless his word is a good habit. The custom of keeping constantly before the mind the needs of the people is a good habit.

Whose Money Is It?

LAST week we asked the same question and cited an exceptional case where the treasurer with full knowledge of the trustees has been "borrowing" the mission funds of a church for purely local work. We believe that many of our readers congratulated themselves that such high-handed business could not go unchallenged in their churches. We grant that the case described is unusual. We do not believe it could be paralleled in very many churches in the convention. It savors of the sharp practices which would in the wicked world be termed misappropriation of funds.

We are asking the same question again this week. Whose money is it? The question here takes a more serious form. Whose money is that which you as an individual giver have withheld? A certain portion of your pledge easily determined is due to date. The work was projected upon the assumption that your word was as good as your bond. Most churches, and we must assume most individuals, who made subscriptions are far back in the payment of the amount due to date. If we have met with financial reverses or been overtaken by affliction it seems that the honest method would be for us to treat the pledges we made to God and his work at least as seriously as those we have made to the bank and business institutions.

As a matter of fact have we not obligated ourselves for many new and not altogether indispensable objects since we gave our word to support the extension work of the church to the measure, if not of our ability, at least to the amount of our pledge? Whose money is that which you have put into this or that investment during the past year? Have you like the church treasurer in question, "borrowed" some of God's money?

"Excessive Wet Enthusiasm"

THE interest of our readers in the fall elections has centered largely in those contests where a strict and a liberal interpretation of the prohibition laws has been concerned.

There has been a great deal of shouting upon the part of the wets. Col. Gillette, general counsel for the Association against Prohibition says, "The iniquitous Volstead Law must be repealed if the Republicans hope to carry the next presidential election." The friends of wine and beer point with pride to the 155 liberal representatives who will go to Washington. There seems to be, however, in the words of the New York Times "excessive wet enthusiasm."

Let us analyze the situation. Just what is it that has taken place? First, we need to remember that in almost every case where the issue was clearly drawn between strict law enforcement and a modification of the Volstead Act there has been a clear cut victory by the dry forces. No more striking example can be found than the passing of the Wright Act in California. This act will in effect write into the statute books of the state the Volstead Act and make the officials of the state the enforcement officers, in cooperation with federal officers. In the face of great business interests represented by the grape-growers and wine-makers the act carried by a vote of 219,912 to 156,180. Our wet friends are not enthusing over the results in California. In effect the same condition may be seen in the Ohio elections where the beer and wine amendment was badly defeated and a prohibition senator elected.

The triumph of the wets has been largely in the states where from the first there has been a restless element seeking by fair and foul means to nullify the eighteenth amendment. Of the 155 liberal representatives twenty-seven come from Pennsylvania where the state has elected a governor pledged to enforce prohibition and the man elected has the reputation of doing exactly what he says he will do. This surely cannot be the grounds for "excessive enthusiasm."

Again, thirty-seven of these liberals come from New York, eight from New Jersey, five from Louisiana and four from Maryland. In other words more than one-half of the entire number come from a half-dozen wet strongholds. It is true that the prohibition vote in Illinois is overwhelmingly in favor of the wets. It should be remembered that there was no clear-cut issue and that thousands of dry voters followed the suggestion of the dry officials and entirely ignored the ballot. The whole Middle West and the solid South, except Louisiana, have been unmoved in their stand for bone dry enforcement.

The forces which stand for decency and good government may well be thankful for the election results. We are not warranted in relaxing our efforts, but we may go forward with the confidence that we are fighting with a victorious army.

Christian Scholarship

SIR W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, the veteran editor of the British Weekly, writes with reverent appreciation of the late Dr. James Hastings, who died at Aberdeen, Oct. 15, after a brief illness.

The dictionaries and encyclopedias edited by Dr. Hastings, beginning with the "Dictionary of the Bible," 1898, and ending with the publication last year of the twelfth volume of the "Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics," constitute a noble achievement and a remarkable contribution to Christian scholarship.

A passage in Dr. Nicoll's tribute to his friend and fellow-worker is significant in its application to current theological controversy. Many Christians who refuse to accept or even tolerate the methods and results of the so-called "higher criticism," go even farther in their repudiation and denounce all higher critics as heretics, Unitarians, infidels, and enemies of Jesus Christ.

Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas of London, an eminent champion of orthodoxy and defender of Christian fundamentals, said during a lecture to the students at the Northwestern Bible School in Minneapolis last winter: "We are all higher critics, only we don't know it." He defined and differentiated the three forms of biblical criticism; the lower, the higher, and the "highest." All of these forms of criticism he approved and defended. The "highest criticism" he conceived to be the reverent judgment of the Christian conscience of the humble layman as taught by the Spirit of God. The significance of this reference here is in the fact that a notable exponent of the most conservative school of biblical interpretation admits and defends the methods of the higher criticism.

Dr. James Hastings followed the methods of the higher criticism, as every student of his works of reference well knows. Sir Robertson Nicoll says of him: "He was from the beginning in sympathy with what is known as the higher criticism, and I remember him saying that Wellhausen had put the whole of the Old Testament before him in a new and surprising light." Yet it is beyond controversy that Dr. Hastings cherished and vowed the historic evangelic faith concerning the Person of Jesus Christ as the unique Son of God and as incarnate Deity. His second great work, the "Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels," affords ample evidence of his positive sympathy with the common Christian faith. Says Dr. Nicoll, who was intimately associated with him for many years: "He held by the great evangelical tradition, and had no heresy of his own so far as I ever discovered. But he liked some presentations of Christianity and disliked others. He was specially jealous for the doctrine of the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and popular books in which he thought that doctrine was denied did not please him."

The great aim of Dr. Hastings in the creation of the many books which bear his name, was to help ministers to preach their message more effectively. Men who knew him well said of him after his death: "He was one of the greatest preachers of the day. . . . His aim was to preach Christ, and to preach Christ crucified." "He never ceased to be a preacher: I would say, a great preacher. . . . He was a better preacher in his later years than he had ever been. And the main purpose of all his scholarly labors was to make the pulpit a greater power because enriched with knowledge."

Whatever may be the particular methods of research one uses, and whatever party label one may covet or endure, it would seem that we have in Dr. James Hastings an evidence that a Christian scholar may profess the methods and accept the assured results of the higher criticism and still worship and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as God manifested in the flesh and the Risen Redeemer.

Why Not Tax Church Property?

THE Dearborn Independent, the Ford international weekly, in the issue of Nov. 11, treats editorially the question of the taxation of church property and such a levy is discouraged. The admission is made that, due to the necessity of finding new sources of revenue, agitation is being revived with a view to placing of the vast holdings of religious bodies on the assessment rolls. It is argued that the notion is false, that if put into effect it would not lessen the tax burden and would make for even greater inequality. It would be, so the editor argues, an injustice to such institutions as maintain their own schools and charitable institutions.

THE BAPTIST fails to feel the force of these arguments. Our Baptist fathers when their possessions were meagre insisted upon a complete separation of church and state. Shall their children grown rich in church property and equipment accept favors at the hands of civil authorities? A levy upon church property might not lessen the burden of taxation. It would, however, in many quarters increase respect for the churches. If we want to conduct secondary schools under proper educational standards the way is open. Such effort has not only the interests of the state at heart but primarily the interests of the churches concerned. Do parochial schools exist for the altogether altruistic purpose of saving the state from the expense of building new buildings and employing a larger number of teachers? These schools exist primarily to instill the principles of the churches conducting them.

Does not the freedom from taxation of hundreds of millions of dollars of church property require in effect a contribution from every tax payer? How can we reconcile the fact with the principle of voluntary support of religion? Baptists above all others should not forget the dangers which lurk in state-supported religion.

Every-Member Evangelism or Why Many Pastors Fail

*"Go ye" is a command to every Christian without exception.
And it is "go" not "send;" it is "go" not "come."*

By J. E. CONANT

NO! You are utterly mistaken! Three thousand souls were not saved at Pentecost as a result of Peter's sermon. We have thought and said this so long that many almost think they can find it in the New Testament in so many words, but it is not true. Moreover, this notion has worked havoc—yes, is now working increasing havoc in every phase of church life, and it is high time we got it out of our minds.

Not Brought By Peter's Sermon

We do not mean that there were not 3,000 saved on the Day of Pentecost. There were. But we do mean that they were not brought by Peter's sermon. That sermon was simply the climax and culmination of a preceding something without which there isn't the least likelihood that any such results would have followed, and in the absence of which our Baptist churches are evangelizing at such a dying rate that we are said to be adding to our membership only one-fourth the number of children born into Baptist families. We will study what that preceding something is.

The best way to do this is to go back of Pentecost and get both the historical setting and the actual meaning of the church's evangelizing commission.

The Word "Witness"

If we gather together the pre-crucifixion and pre-ascension instructions of our Lord and give them careful study, we will clearly see that the word "witness" lies at the heart of everything he said. Then if we analyze these instructions, we shall find that witnessing is to be the whole work of the whole church in the whole world during the whole age. We shall also discover that all this is gathered together into the Great Commission. Study Mark's phrasing of it for a moment.

"Go ye" is a command to every Christian without exception. Nothing else can be made out of it. And it is "go," not "send." And so that oft-heard phrase, "If you cannot go, you can send some one in your place," is utterly unscriptural. For, in the first place, the Great Commission is not simply a command either to enter the ministry or to go as a

THY word have I laid up in my heart,
That I might not sin against thee.
I will delight myself in thy statutes:
I will not forget thy word.
Thy word is a lamp unto my feet,
And light unto my path.
—The Psalms.

missionary. It is a command for every Christian without exception to do just one thing, and that is to go! And in the next place, the Lord's instructions were to go "both" to Jerusalem, Judaea, Samaria, and the uttermost part of the earth, which includes everything from our own doorstep—yes, our own household—to the uttermost limits of habitation. That is, every Christian is to "go" with the gospel—not "send" it—into that particular part of the inhabited earth which is, in God's providence, his own personal world.

Empty Sitzings

Again, the command is "go," not "come." And yet we reverse it! And verily we have our reward in the increasing number of empty sittings in our churches. For the way we do it is to "get up" an evangelistic campaign, and then say to the lost, "Come ye out of all our community into our church and hear the gospel preached." But there isn't a single command in all the New Testament for a sinner to go to church after the gospel. On the contrary, there are multiplied commands to every Christian of us to take the gospel to every lost one in our respective personal worlds. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that"—bringeth the people to hear the good tidings?

The Set of a Soul

ONE ship drives east and another drives west
With the selfsame winds that blow;
'Tis the set of the sails
And not the gales
Which tell us the way to go.

Like the winds of the sea are the ways of fate
As we journey along through life;
'Tis the set of the soul
That decides its goal,
And not the calm or the strife.

—FRANK B. McALLISTER.

Never! Of him that "bringeth good tidings" to the lost where they are.

"Into all the world," is the next phrase in the commission. "Behold a sower went forth to sow." Forth where? Into the field. Where is the field? The world is the field—the world which is all about us, whether we are in Chicago or Shanghai. The field does not come after the seed; the sower takes the seed to the field.

The Harvest Is There

Do you ever hear any one pray, "O Lord, give us a great harvest of souls"? Then you hear a prayer he never commanded us to make. He is surely not displeased when we pray for a harvest, but what he commanded us to pray for was for harvesters to go into the field after the harvest, for no harvest ever comes out of the field to be gathered. And a vast harvest is going to ruin all about us at this very hour for want of laborers to go into the field after it.

Not Education

"And preach the gospel," or proclaim the good tidings, is the next phrase. Right at this point we must bring ourselves up short and remind ourselves sharply that this is all he commanded us to do. There is nothing here about education. That is a by-product that always follows evangelization. And yet we are trying, today to educate men into the new life in Christ! "Religious education" is taking the place of evangelization. Indeed, they are being increasingly regarded as synonymous. As well try to cultivate a thistle into a rose! As well wash a pig's hide, comb his bristles, tie a beautiful ribbon around his neck and call him "sheep," in the confidence that such a process will cure him of mud! The only thing that will cure a hog of mud is for him to be born over again into a sheep—which is impossible in nature. And the only way to cure a sinner of sin is for him to be born over again into a child of God, and this is possible in grace, thank God! And so it isn't education—not even religious education—that a lost man needs, it is regeneration.

Neither did Christ say anything about civilization. And yet we have officially expressed the "acceptance f the conception that the mission of the Christian church is to establish a civilization, Christian in spirit and in passion, throughout the world." But, according to our Lord, our mission is evangelization, and that alone, and it has been our consistent history that when we have stuck to our evangelization, civilization has followed as an inevitable by-product in the exact proportion to the success of our evangelization.

Christ's Program

Neither is there anything in the Great Commission about social service. This is also a by-product, especially in the form most emphasized today. There are two distinct forms of social service, which even its most earnest advocates seem to be hazy about. There is the kind that has to do with direct relief of human suffering, especially that caused by sickness, poverty, misfortune, and so on. "The poor always ye have with you," said Christ, and he himself had great compassion on those in sickness and affliction. But he only began at the blind man's eyes and the lame man's feet, and then he kept right on going until he got to their sin and gave them forgiveness. Evangelization was his main program.

But there is another form of social service that has to do with equity, righteousness and justice in human relationships, which is especially set forth in the sixteen items of the social service program of the Federal Council of Churches. Now he state, not the church, was specifically set in the world to be a barrier to evildoers against temporal human welfare, and the only way, in the nature of things, to carry out this mission, is to administer equity, righteousness and justice among men through law and its sanctions. The church in its corporate capacity has absolutely no mission in this field, and insofar, therefore, as it succeeds in functioning in these affairs in any official capacity whatsoever, it is inevitably bringing about a union of church and state. Its one mission is to proclaim the gospel, and the state will properly function in administering equity, righteousness and justice among men in the exact proportion in which the church evangelizes its citizens.

What Is This Gospel?

What then is this gospel we are to preach? Of what are we to be witnesses? On the evening of resurrection day, Christ suddenly appeared among his disciples, first frightened and then scarcely believing for joy, and then after outlining their message, he said, "And ye are witnesses of these things." First, there was the testimony of Scripture concerning Christ. Next, his unique sufferings, atoning death and triumphant resurrection, as the heart of Scripture testimony to him. Again, the good news of the

"I Have Kept the Faith"

By Arthur T. Fowler

THERE is something majestic in a man if when life is no longer a vista but a retrospect, he can say: "I have kept the faith," not to boast, but merely to state a fact. The sacred trust committed to him by Christ had been held firmly to the end. This, however, was not all, it was more than fidelity; he had been a faithful trustee, and was ready to render an account of his stewardship. There is a stewardship of faith as there is of money. Paul regarded the grace of God as revealed in Christ as a deposit or trust, so that through his own life and experience he might enrich others. There are invaluable gifts that it is in the power of man to give to man. Not the gift of money or any other material possession but the more spiritual gifts of life and character—faith, hope, love, knowledge. No man does his whole duty by his brother man who gives money and leaves out these. Many people have a blind notion of stewardship in relation to property, but very few have it when it comes to these finest and highest qualities of life. Paul wanted to be the best, not for himself but for others. He was not satisfied to just know God, he had to give God. Faith was not merely for possession, it was for transmission. What was a seeming contradiction in human experience—to keep the faith, and yet be a faithful steward, was to Paul a profound reality. What was Paul's secret of "keeping the faith"? It was intensely personal. Truth never becomes our own until we have experienced it. To hold it as an opinion is not enough. True faith is won by the experience of the truth in our lives. Paul's faith was vital. This is seen in its discriminating and assimilating power. He could separate fact and theory in Christian experience. He was not afraid to claim anything for the sake of Christ. It was sacrificial and it was compassionate. A man's life becomes finer and more spiritual as it becomes capable of transmitting purer motives, loftier impulses and faith into the lives of other men. Paul's faith was centered in Jesus Christ. To him Christ was Prophet, Priest and King. He sought to be faithful, strong and good in Christ, and no man can be really thus without helping others. In this is the world's salvation!

remission of sins for all who would believe on and receive this crucified and risen Christ as personal Saviour. This is the gospel, and the preaching of this is the whole mission of the church, every desirable by-product inevitably following as a result.

"To every creature," is the last phrase of the commission. There is no human uplift en masse here. There is no regeneration of society in bulk. We are not sent to society, but to each individual composing it. This phrase of the commission could not be made more individualistic, for it sends individual Christians to individual sinners with a gospel of individual salvation on condition of individual faith.

Then in Matthew the Lord says, "Lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the consummation of the age," which indicates that he intends us to continue this witnessing ministry through the age.

A study of these phrases taken from the Great Commission, therefore, indicates that witnessing is to be the whole work of the whole church in the whole world throughout the whole age.

The Background of Pentecost

Now we can go forward to the events of Pentecost and learn just what it was that brought those 3,000. There was first the background of those ten days of prayer. Prayer must literally saturate every evangelistic activity. Then when the Holy Spirit came to begin his official ministry, according to promise and type, he so possessed the praying and yielded disciples that they were first impelled to go out where the lost were, and then enabled to witness—note this well—in languages that all present could understand, to the wonderful works of God in their lives. They did not go to some meeting place and invite the lost to come and hear their testimony, they took their testimony to the people. And they all witnessed, men and women alike, in the midst of a great company of lost souls.

A Climax of Decision

How long this continued there is little means of telling, but at any rate it continued until there was produced such a condition of heart in the lost as made possible a climax of decision. Then it was, not before, that the Holy Spirit selected Peter, set him forth before that multitude of sinners made eager to listen by the informal witnessing of the 119 besides Peter, and spoke through him the message which became the climax and culmination of the informal witnessing that had preceded. That was what brought those 3,000 to Christ. It was not Peter's sermon. It was the informal testimony of all of them, making possible the climax of decision through the formal testimony of one of them.

Pentecost is the pattern day for the church throughout the age. For it is the Great Commission carried out in detail exactly as the Lord had given it. The only thing they did was to witness to the crucified and risen Saviour. And they all witnessed, men and women alike. And they witnessed simultaneously, in a representative way, to all the world, for their testimony went out to "men out of every nation under heaven." The one important thing added was that the Lord illustrated how the witnessing was to be done. The formal, public testimony was to be preceded by informal, private testimony on the part of every Christian, and it was to continue to the point where the public testimony would be all that was necessary to bring about the climax of decision. This is the Divine program of evangelism. And it always works!

Clergy and Laity

In early church history it worked too well to please Satan. So he struck the church a staggering blow from which it has never fully recovered, by dividing an equal witnessing brotherhood into "clergy" and "laity," and then working the witnessing out of the hands of all but the "clergy." Then came the devil's millennium, which history calls the Dark Ages. And some of us are not altogether out of the Dark Ages yet!

But Satan knew a good thing when he saw it, so having put that program out of business in the church, he adopted it for his own work. And it works! Why do the cults and heresies grow so fast? Because they are worked by the Lord's program. Who ever saw an Eddyite or a Mormon who were not propagandists? When D. L. Moody was within forty miles of Salt Lake City on his way to hold a meeting, the engineer came back into the train and invited him up into the engine, and then tried that whole forty miles to convert him to Mormonism! Mohammedanism has captured one-eighth of this earth's population because every Mohammedan is a propagandist.

The Program Provided

But the Lord did not intend this program to be set aside and a human program substituted, so he made provision to keep it going throughout the age, and we have failed him. After he ascended he gave to his church the gifts of "evangelists, and pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints for the doing of service" (1911 Bible); "with a view to the fitting of the saints for the work of ministering" (Rotherham); "for the perfecting of God's people in their appointed service" (Conybeare and Howson); "in order fully to equip his people for the work of serving" (Weymouth).

The pastorate, therefore, is a spiritual generalship, not a religious lectureship. Pastors and evangelists are not the official soul winners of the church, they are the trainers of the church members in soul winning. But a lot of us are not on the job. And part of the reason is because there was a great vacuum in our seminary training.

But when a church works by this program, its success is marvelous. This was the secret of Spurgeon's

The Upward Trail

By LUCIE GILL PRICE

*FATHER, I'm tired,
And my feet all bruised.
The night is dark and noisome,
The upward path, stony;
And often, as I grope along,
Stumblingly,
I cannot see thy face.
My cries come back to me
As echoes from the mountains bleak.*

*And yet, oh, God!
I would not murmur nor complain;
For, though the gloom
Envelops me,
I have the consciousness
Of progress made.
My strength increases
Day by day.
From difficulties overcome
My courage grows anon:
And though I cannot always feel thy touch,
I know thy hand doth guide—
Thine eye doth note
My purpose and my hope.*

*Only this I ask:
Should the gloom increase—
The path more rugged grow—
Let me not be faint-hearted,
And turn back;
But let me press onward
Toward the goal.
If death comes before 'tis reached,
Let him find me
On the upward trail.*

perennial success. He had 3000 active soul winners in his church going everywhere in London taking the gospel to those who never came to church after it. And so his sermons were but the weekly climax of the private testimony that brings such conviction of sin that the convicted sinner cannot stay away.

In Dr. Mark A. Matthew's church, in Seattle, in a recent year, there were 854 received, 545 of them coming on confession of faith, and the church reaching in that year a membership of 7,000. The reason is because this church is working by the Divine program. Every one who comes into that church promises to do definite work for the lost, and thousands of the members are systematically working for souls in the thirty-two districts into which the city has been divided for that work.

Frozen at the Mouth

But in most of the churches this work is not being done. This is why so many pastors are failing to do any large work. And behind all this lies the fact that to most Christians the gospel is not what the word means—"good news." If it were, they could not possibly be kept still about it. It is difficult enough to keep bad news, but it is impossible to keep a piece of good news. But the vast majority of Christians are like the rivers that flow into the Arctic Ocean—frozen at the mouth. The reason is because the gospel is not good news to them. And the reason for this is because they are living in almost continuous defeat and so have no good news to tell of a salvation that saves daily from all the power of the enemy. Instead of walking by faith and living in victory, their life is all effort, and struggle and failure and defeat, and they have no good news to tell.

Back of this is the sin of refusal to surrender all. And nothing will stop testimony to Christ like sin in our lives. Charles M. Alexander, the great song leader, said, "Anybody who is not doing personal work has sin in his life. I don't care who you are—preacher, teacher, mother, father—if you are not leading definite people to a definite Saviour at a definite time, or trying hard to do so, you have sin in your life." So when we can keep still about Christ, we know what is the matter with us.

As a Burning Fire

But when we yield all we have and are to him in utter abandonment, and then trust him to live in us the life and do through us the service he requires of us, we will be like Jeremiah when he said, "I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and could not stay." No more can we keep still when the gospel becomes good news to us.

Some Tendencies of Modern Evangelism

By ARTHUR WILLEY, Director of Evangelism for Northern California

A MAN sees largely what he desires to see. The writer has tried to note as an interested observer some tendencies of modern evangelism, rather than his personal ideas of what ought to be. He also has in mind, national and not local intrad-denominational characteristics.

First: There seems to be a tendency away from the large spectacular, tabernacle type of meetings and a steady growth toward established departments of evangelism fostered and supported by the great denominational agencies. These departments are coordinated with the missionary and educational work. In general, they have employed not professional evangelists but evangelistic pastors. Thus sane evangelism is given a larger place and greater emphasis than ever before.

Favorable Results

This work is but beginning. A denominationalism is responsible to God for the evangelization of its own constituency. That task can only be done imperfectly by others. Results must be conserved and be leakage stopped. The best solution is the denominational effort, which is almost self-supporting. Already some of the following favorable results may be noted: (a) The churches are safeguarded as to their character and orthodoxy of the evangelists. No mission society will endorse or finance a man morally uncertain or one whose theology is contradictory to the denomination. This is an important result. (b) The churches are safeguarded from various religious tangents. Many of these tangents, such as divine healing, complete sanctification, radical millennialism, tongues, and so on, have more or less of the truth and gospel for a foundation. But granting that all of these teachings are gospel, to my mind it is much smaller in not to preach these divisive issues than to magnify the same and thereby split God's churches to pieces. Woe! unto him that destroys God's temple and tears to pieces the body of Christ. (c) The next result of denominational evangelism is the securing of harmony and cooperation in all outward movements. Local programs and plans are emphasized and not ignored. The urge union effort cannot by nature fit into the New World Movement of Baptists. These great mission programs are vital and essential. So safeguarding our own real enterprises, our denomination has established its own department of evangelism.

Educational Evangelism

Second: Is a tendency away from an intellectual antagonism and toward educational evangelism. Much of the learning of our higher institutions, both religious and state was openly opposed to the old type of evangelism. They substituted for the new birth a mental attitude. To them was not an immediate work of the spirit but an intellectual growth and development. This antagonism is passing. The warding of the highest degrees cannot be substituted for that spiritual attainment.

"Son of God"

So we have educational evangelism. The departmental work of our Sunday schools and young people's societies is fitted for evangelistic purposes. Workers' training classes, personal workers' classes, and mission classes are but links in the great educational plans to win souls both at home and abroad. Educational evangelism regards the church calendar. Easter is more and more being emphasized as a time of decisions for the Christ. This special opportunity of annually winning many souls to the Master should not be lost.

Our efforts should not be confined to Easter. Rally Day, or about Thanksgiving affords another valuable opportunity, that ought to be utilized to the full. The time is coming when two semi-annual decision days in our Bible schools will be the minimum. Some are now having them quarterly, while in large schools a monthly decision day is being advocated.

Third: Is the tendency away from emotional, high-pressure methods towards a safe and sane evangelism. Throughout the world there has been a decided reaction against extreme and emotional methods. The basis of appeal has moved upward from fear to love. The message of the future must exalt Christ rather than de-throne Satan. If we do the former, he will do the latter.

This tendency is constructive. It naturally follows that by changing the point of emphasis—from the emotion to the will, from fear to love, from argumentation to supplication, from a derogatory denunciation of the devil to the glorious salvation of a seeking Savior, will decrease the amount of emotionalism. The type of message determines the reaction of the hearers, and the type is changing.

Fourth: The next tendency I desire to mention is away from the seasonal revival and toward a state of a perpetual revival. The periodic season of soul-saving is being recognized as the abnormal. The natural, healthy state is a constant ingathering of precious souls. It was so at Jerusalem and in other New Testament churches. Occasionally it is so now.

To accomplish this ideal many plans are being used: Gospel teams, the Lowell plan, groups of special visitors, two-by-two lay-teams, and so on. This is the beginning of a new era of lay evangelism.

Fifth: The last tendency is away from the sociological salvation of society toward the individual application of the blood of Christ.

That the church has a definite social duty, few will deny. This duty it long neglected. Consequently, the pendulum swung to the other extreme. Many began to preach and teach that sociology was the world's panacea. They thought not of the individual needing a Savior but of society.

The pendulum is moving back. Not to the neglect of social duties but to the fact that the individual is the center rather than the community. That men are won to Christ not in the mass but one by one. That each individual "must be born again," not of the "will of man or flesh but of the will of God."

X-Raying the Foreign-Born

By MARION LATHROP

(Miss Lathrop is Christian Americanization secretary of the New England District for the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society.)

FROM day to day as I have gone about my work in New American homes there have come many little homely sidelights on human nature as revealed by the stranger newly come to our shores.

The desire to please manifests itself in the foreign home in the offer of a glass of wine, and if it is refused, leaving both parties a little embarrassed, the foreign hostess is willing to send out and buy a bottle of Moxie, or even offer you plain water. The Moxie, she'll tell you, is not as good as it used to be—not so much alcohol; the water, she'll declare, is not good for her—it makes her sick. Or, maybe, she'll send her boy to the store to buy English walnuts for her visitors, then empty them on the kitchen table, and expect you to help yourself and crack them too, if you're not a weakling!

Then there is the intimacy of family life, and the interest, or maybe it is overlordship, which the husband has in his wife's work. How many American men can bring out fancy-work from its hiding place to show to the Italian man? Too often they don't know that their wives have any. Not so with the Italian man. And there is the intimacy of community life. How quickly news spreads from home to home, and with what frequency the mothers know each other as Concetta or Angelina; one of my volunteers grasped that fact very quickly, and said, "My name is Louisa. I call you Maria; you call me Louisa."

How our foreign friends like the democratic spirit which places them on a level with their guests! For an American friend and a foreign woman to find that each is thirty-five years of age, and each has been married fifteen years, is enough to bind the friendly compact, even though one has three children and the other eight!

What a variety of service we can give: showing the mother how to make a pie; teaching her not to keep the milk bottle in a hot kitchen, guiding her in crocheting a hat of the latest style; listening to her laments because her oldest boy went away to become a wrestler (such a dangerous business); furnishing her with better reading material than a cheap "Romanz"; and teaching her that eighteen months' old babies must not be given meat, pickles and rich pastry.

Lastly, the gratitude. Sometimes perplexity and suspicion are in the heart, and gratitude needs time to triumph. But very often the caller will be told, "Thank you for coming," or "I'm much obliged." Perhaps the mother will say that she will return the call some day, but when the message is finally interpreted via the child, it sounds like this "My mother says she'll come to see you and bring the gang."

If new volunteers in the work only experience these joys in learning human nature at first hand, I am confident of their perseverance and success.

Bigger and Better Sunday Schools

Know the facts. Make a survey of your school. Let the need of the religious training of youth touch your own heart.

By ALBERT H. GAGE

THE teacher is the key worker in any Sunday school. If the teachers are regular, consecrated and trained for their task the school is certain to increase in attendance and in efficiency. If the teachers are irregular in attendance, lacking in consecration and untrained for their task a poor school is certain to result. The problem of getting and training Sunday school teachers and workers is therefore a vital one.

There are certain general truths that need to be remembered. (1) There are all the officers, teachers and helpers needed in the average Sunday school already present in the local church or community. Any time that a church goes outside its own constituency for teachers it injures itself.

(2) It is the business of the local church to discover and train its own workers. If any church suffers for lack of teachers it has no one to blame but itself. Any church can find these workers if it wants to.

(3) The local church must do leadership training if it wants trained teachers and leaders. Unless a local church takes seriously its task of leadership training it will always suffer because of the lack of trained leadership. If a local church takes seriously its task of leadership training it will find many strong agencies such as community training classes, denominational institutes and special courses in summer assemblies, to help in the task.

How Find Workers?

Jesus gave a method for securing workers which, if a church will follow, will give all the workers and teachers needed.

"And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people.

"But when he saw the people he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd. Then said he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous but the laborers are few: pray ye the God of the harvest that he thrust forth laborers into his harvest."

This was Jesus' method. He made a survey of the country. He knew the facts. He was moved with compassion. He presented the facts in terms which the disciples could understand and he set them to pray definitely for the needed workers.

The Teacher Question Solved

There is no better method than this one used by Jesus. It will solve the teacher question anywhere. Know the facts. Make a survey of your school. Let the need of the religious training of youth touch your own heart. Present these needs in terms that the people of the church can understand. Set God's people praying for the workers who are needed. It will work. If any pastor and superintendent will actually know the teachers and workers who are needed, if they are deeply concerned themselves and if they will present the call for helpers to the people of the church at the various services of the church and then get the church to pray for teachers, all teachers who are needed will be found. These who come in this way realize the sacredness of their calling. They will be faithful in their teaching and will study hard to fit themselves for large things.

If your school needs teachers try Jesus' method. Never say that you cannot get teachers. The very minute a person says "Can't" he puts himself in the position where God cannot use him to secure teachers. If any pastor or superintendent will actually try Jesus' method for six weeks at every service where members of the church meet for worship or service, he will get all the teachers and helpers he needs. Try it. Believe.

Do not overlook the later high-school and college young people. Our young people need something to do. They are eager for definite service. They are willing to take training. They make good.

Result of an Experiment

A few years ago when the Sunday school of the St. James Methodist Episcopal church, of which Dr. A. H. Andrews was superintendent, was having trouble to get teachers, he tried an experiment which was new, at least to him. Acting upon the well known but not always recognized principle that what a person thinks about doing, especially with a little encouragement, he is likely to undertake, he asked the teachers of the young people's classes to keep the subject of teaching in the minds of their scholars. The teachers were not to ask or even to appear to be interested in their scholars becoming teachers, but were to discuss the problems of teaching, the application of the lessons they were studying to the lives of children of different ages, especially to their own lives as they could think back and remember how they looked at things in the different periods of their lives. Incidentally they were to suggest that such Christian service as teaching was not a sacrifice but an investment; an investment which paid well in knowledge gained, in one's own mental development and in the satisfaction of seeing good accomplished.

The plan was presented at a Sunday school board meeting and later was kept in the minds of the teachers by occasional personal conversations on the subject. The result was that within a few months

AND Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven. And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God! Mark 10. 23, 24.

We marvel at men who, heavily handicapped by adversity, succeed in achieving victorious lives. The Master marvels at men who, heavily handicapped by prosperity, were able to rise above it.—Harry Emerson Fosdick.

they had more young people wanting to teach than could be used. In most instances the scholar would privately ask the teacher's advice about his becoming a teacher but sometimes they would come directly to the superintendent and ask for a class. In one class of about a dozen young ladies with a very efficient teacher, every member of the class incidentally, and usually without the knowledge of the other members, asked to be given a class just as soon as there was a vacancy. In some instances a decided interest was shown in preparation for the work.

What Training Is Needed for Teachers?

Any successful teacher in a Sunday school needs training along five lines.

(1) A teacher must know the scholar he would teach. There are certain laws of human behavior and growth that every teacher should know. The whole of a boy comes to Sunday school. Unless a teacher knows that boy as an individual, and knows the characteristics of the period through which the lad is passing he cannot teach. He who would teach beginners must know the physical, social, mental and religious characteristics of that period. So also for the primaries, the juniors, the intermediates, the young people and the adults.

(2) A teacher must know the Bible. The more he knows the better can he teach any particular lesson. He must know the Bible through a personal experience of its truths.

(3) A teacher must know how to teach. There are certain laws or methods of teaching. These can be known. Any one who would teach should study carefully these methods so as to know how to bring the living truths of the Bible into the life of the pupil.

(4) A teacher must live the truths he would teach. This is the reason why it is essential that a Sunday-school teacher be a true Christian. Some one has said, "We teach a little by what we say, more by what we do and most by what we are." A Sunday-school teacher must be a living example of Jesus and his wonderful way of living.

(5) A teacher should have an opportunity for practice under observation before taking a class. That was Jesus' method. He taught his disciples. Then he sent them out two by two. Then they came back and reported to him. In every normal college this principle is clearly recognized. Students in training as teachers are given opportunities to teach under observation. How many mistakes would be avoided if our Sunday schools would use this method a little more!

How To Train Teachers

If the necessary teachers can be secured and if a school knows the training which should be given, how can this training be given? Here are some concrete suggestions:

(1) A monthly workers' conference. Each local Sunday school should have a regular monthly workers' conference. No school can really succeed without this regular meeting of the officers and teachers to plan cooperatively and to work unitedly for the best interests of the whole school. Without this regular meeting, the Sunday school runs the risk either of autocracy or inefficiency. The only way to secure cooperation is for all the Sunday-school workers to have a voice in the planning and a part in the carrying out of the common work.

The workers' conference should meet on a fixed date of each month at the church. A good program for such a conference is as follows: 6:30 Fellowship supper at the church; 7:30 Reports from departments and general business. (This may be preceded by departmental conferences for half an hour); 8:15 Special order of the evening; 9:30 Adjournment.

Adjourn promptly. More workers' conferences have been killed by prolonged discussions than by any other cause.

In the Bigger, Better Baptist Sunday-school Campaign of the Northern Baptists the following objectives have been suggested for the monthly workers' conference. If any school does not want to follow these objectives let it adopt others. It is certainly evident that to any group of Sunday-school officers which will appoint certain of its own number to consider these various objectives and if the whole group discusses and works out these various objectives, considerable information and training will result during the year.

(2) A teacher-training class in the church itself. Many churches could wisely use a part of their prayer meetings for a class in trained leadership. It would increase the attendance of the mid-week service and it would develop definite objectives of prayer. The new standard teacher-training course is the best. Get the teacher-training books from your own denominational publishing house.

(3) Community training classes. Many communities are organizing community training classes. These should be encouraged and a good number from every church should be enrolled in every community where there is a community training class.

(4) Workers' Library. Every Sunday-school should have a Sunday-school library of selected books which could be put into the hands of the teachers and workers in the school.

(5) Prospective teachers. The best time to train workers is two years before they are needed. Every church should, therefore, organize a class of young people, meeting at the Sunday-school hour, and taking the regular new standard teachers' training course. The best course for teacher-training in any Sunday school is the new standard teacher-training course. This can be secured from our denominational house. The outline is the same for all denominations. Each denomination secures its own writers, publishes its own books and gives credits for work.

(6) Conventions and conferences. Secure representatives from your school for some of the excellent denominational and interdenominational conventions and conferences for Sunday-school workers. Occasionally arrange for some of your officers and teachers to visit some other school for observation.

Trained teachers and officers are a necessity in the modern Sunday school. Well trained and consecrated teachers will hold new pupils. It is the business of every local church to find and train its own workers.

Prayer

By JOHN RANDOLPH STIDMAN

THE efficacy of prayer is perhaps one of the most perplexing problems of the Christian religion. A devout man or woman will exclaim earnestly, "I believe in prayer! My prayers have been answered!" They will then relate some instance when prayer for help in great trouble has brought deliverance. Yet how strangely reluctant are they to recall the many, many times they asked God for something and it was withheld. There must be some good reason for it but they have not the courage to meet the issue.

A son, a daughter, a father, a mother lies dying. We cast ourselves upon bended knee and cry in anguish of soul to One who alone can help us. We plead for this life and promise to do this and that in return for the favor. The name of God lies upon our lips with reverence and veneration. Emotion fills our breasts and tears stream down our cheeks. We speak to him from the depths of the soul for we want something now.

Did we kneel with the same eagerness and undivided attention yesterday when some good fortune attended us? Did we thank him for the soft, refreshing rain which fell upon our gardens? Did we lift up a grateful heart when the golden sun burst forth after a storm had brought desolation to others and left us untouched? Did we pray like this at the beginnings and the endings of other days? Is it not a fact that so many of us pray to God only when we want some blessing bestowed? We ask for fame, wealth, power, pleasure—so many material things, so few spiritual. The Master said, it is true, "Ask and ye shall receive. Knock and it shall be opened unto you." But he also said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and all these things shall be added unto you."

There is something of the "yellow dog" attitude in the man or woman who prays only when there is self-seeking in mind, who turns to God in sorrow and ignores him in joy, who trembles at his power and omnipotence in the watches of the night and completely forgets him in the full light of day.

When a loved one dies or some awful calamity befalls us, we say, "Well, God knows best." Very well then, if that is true what is the use of asking him for every little thing, trivial or important in a material sense?

It is an insult to his intelligence for man to keep harping upon the trite, commonplace, petty environments of his own little sphere and expect God to be interested to the extent of allowing them to interfere with his designs and intentions. What puny brains have we, after all, and how weak our reasonings!

There lives a man who at an early age

An Exception

AN AGED woman, crossing a busy street, became bewildered. In turning back and forth, she slipped and fell to her knees.

A motor car stopped with a jerk, almost touching her. And the driver yelled: "Stupid! Beat it for the side-walk. The next time, you'll get run over, and serve you—well right."

The big traffic cop, who had seen and heard, lifted the old lady to her feet and then stepped to the car. With his left hand he took the driver's nose and gave it one of the choicest of twisters; and with the other hand he made the sound of clashing cymbals upon brazen cheeks.

Policemen must never, never, never, never, punish offenders without warrant of law.

But there are highly despicable and honorable exceptions.

—Christian Statesman.

was told that he could get anything* he asked for by prayer. He was taught the story of the Gospel by a good mother and was raised to respect the dignity of the church and to love its ministrations. He never forgot his prayers; morning, noon and night and he prayed for everything that he wanted. Sometimes he got what he asked for, but more often he did not. He began to think lightly of the power of prayer.

A younger brother was suddenly stricken with an illness. He was sent to one of the famous hospitals of the country and after a careful examination by the doctors his case was pronounced tuberculosis. An atmosphere of horror descended upon the entire family. The elder brother went into his room one evening, knelt at his bed and prayed. Not only did he ask that the boy be delivered of this dread disease, but he pled with God, if it were necessary, to inflict him instead of his brother. Fervently, honestly and sincerely, he offered the sacrifice and as he knelt in the darkness there seemed to be a Presence in the room and he knew that his prayer would be answered. He knew that though he had been saying his prayers all his life, this was the first time that he had really prayed. Three days later, two of the doctors changed their opinions and the boy is today alive, robust and enjoying the full, rich blessings of young manhood.

This prayer was answered because it was a prayer. It was born of faith and hope and love, the sweet incomparable virtues which the Master exemplified and exalted in his administration. Should we not then, pray for these only, for if we possess them, we have come already to the kingdom of heaven, and all the other things which make for true happiness and contentment, shall be added unto us.

The Lord Mayor of Lipova

By FREDERICK E. TAYLOR

L IPOVA is a little village in Czechoslovakia. The railroad does not go there and it has no hotel. So Dr. Carter Helm Jones and I, on Saturday, had come to Prostějov a much larger place with a good hotel and here we stayed over night. On Sunday morning with our interpreter we took an automobile and after spending nearly two hours enroute, part of which time was spent in changing tires owing to a blowout, we found ourselves in a charming little village high up on the hills overlooking some of the most beautiful scenery in Czechoslovakia.

The day spent in Lipova will never be forgotten. The kindness of the pastor, Joseph Duorok, the manifest desire on the part of every one in the village to do everything possible to make the visit of the Americans a pleasant one, the deep devotion of the people and the joy with which they entered into the services, will for years be a fragrant memory. I shall never forget the story of the Lord Mayor of that little place. It is like another chapter out of the Acts of the Apostles.

Twenty years ago he was a boy in Brno. Of course like almost all the children of his day he was reared in a Catholic home. One day he heard Mr. Kralick preaching in Brno. He listened to the message, became interested and after a few days gave his heart to Christ. From that day he remained true to his convictions and never swerved from his faith in his Savior.

Through Hell

Then he moved to Lipova. There was not a Protestant in the place. Every child there had been born in a Catholic home. Everybody attended the Catholic services if they went anywhere. But the young man remained steadfast to his Lord and refused to have anything to do with the state church. He said to me as he told the story, "I went through hell for ten years." One day, after ten years of steadfast living and earnest prayer for help, a Baptist pastor made a visit to this young man's home. He poured out his soul to him, urged him and persuaded him to start Christian work there. Then God began to pour out his spirit on that effort and this young man began to see the reward of ten years of faithful witnessing.

On the day that Dr. Jones and I were there the work was a little over a year old. In that time sixty people of that village had accepted Christ, had been baptized and were organized into a church. Sixty more were ready for baptism. Of course there was no baptism in which to immerse these converts. Moreover there was no stream of water near which they could use. So all of the first group had been to Brno, a day's journey and for them an expensive one, and there in the Baptist church had been baptized. When we arrived there were sixty more ready for baptism and plans were being made for these to go to Brno soon and be baptized.

That Sunday we held meetings in the schoolhouse where the church had been worshipping and after evangelistic sermons by Dr. Jones and myself, we had the great joy of seeing sixty-one more persons publicly confess Christ and say they wanted to be baptized and unite with the church. They knew perfectly well that to take such a step meant persecution, ostracism and hardship. They had seen the trials which these others had had to endure. But calmly, and yet in some instances with tears coming down their faces, sixty-one of these village folk gave themselves to Jesus Christ.

The days of persecution are not over. In this particular village the people have suffered greatly for their faith. As soon as the Baptist work began the Catholics refused to hire out their horses to any one who was not a Catholic—and as they owned all of the horses in the village it looked as though the Baptists could not till their farms that season. They did everything they could to induce these people to rent their horses and failed. Then they showed the spirit of heroism. These men and the women harnessed themselves to the plows and all that spring and summer took the places of animals and tilled the fields. God blessed their witness and the church grew. Then the school authorities ordered them out of the building where they were holding their meetings. So this little group decided to build a church of their own. Out of their meager earnings they gave royally. The men volunteered for service. The building was planned and a site secured on the highest place in the community.

When construction began and horses were needed to haul the lumber and

"No One Comes To Tell Us"

FROM a little wayside railway station near Nellore, South India, comes the story. Miss Geneva Brunner writes:

"On the way home from taking a Telugu examination, I had to change trains at midnight. I was sitting all alone in the ladies' waiting room when a little Brahmin widow walked in. I knew she was a widow from her coarse pink sari with which she tried to cover her poor shaven head. Thinking this was a good chance to practice the Telugu I had been using at the examination, I began the usual questions about her family. To be friendly I offered her a custard apple, putting it on the seat, for I supposed she would not take it from my hand. To my surprise she took it and thanked me with a smile. Then I asked her if she had ever heard of Christ. 'Yes, I have heard but I do not know well. My village is very small and no one comes to tell us,' she said.

"So I told her as best I could in her own language the story of Jesus and his life on earth. I wanted to give her the 'Written Word' also, as she said she could read. All I had with me was a copy of the Gospel by Luke which I had been studying, and which was worn and marked. I took it out of my bag, explained why it was soiled, and gave it to her. This she took from my hand (a most unusual thing for a Brahmin) assuring me she would read it. With a winning smile, she said, 'This has been a very good day for me because I have met you.' Just then my train came.

"I still pray for her and the seed sown in her heart. Will you pray with me for her and for her sisters in India who live in the out-of-the-way places where no one goes to tell them about Jesus?"

stones up the long hill to the site the Catholics again refused to hire their horses. So these valiant people said, "We will be pack horses for God," and they loaded the wagons and harnessed themselves to them and hauled the stones and lumber to the building site. When I stood that afternoon on the ground where that church is being built I felt that I was on holy ground.

An "Unholy" Place

When the priest heard of all that was going on among the Baptists he refused to hold a confirmation service in the schoolhouse where the Baptists had been holding their meetings. Instead of entering that "unholy" place he took the class to a saloon and there had his confirmation services. Afterwards he said to the people: "I don't understand you—I came here and told you to stop drinking and be good people and it was like throwing peas at a brick wall. You never paid any attention to what I said, and now this Baptist comes along and the whole village is transformed—what is the matter with you?"

That evening as we said goodbye to the scores of people who had surrounded us all day long our eyes were as moist as theirs. We knew we would never see them again in this world, but our hearts were full of praise for the privilege of spending a Sabbath day with such a heroic people and we came away thanking God for what our eyes had seen of the power of the gospel in modern times. Ten years of faithful living and heroic witnessing—then the windows of heaven opened and a whole community was transformed.

What a victory would be ours in this great work to which God has called us if this year every pastor and every church in our Northern Baptist Convention could catch the spirit of that little band of God's people in Lipova. With such a spirit the tasks to which the New World Movement summons us would be easy of accomplishment. We, too, could transform communities at home and abroad and thus help bring the world nearer its acknowledgment of Jesus Christ.

The Bethel Neighborhood Center, is the heart of a Russian settlement of 3500 population in Kansas City, Kan. now has a child's clinic, kindergarten, day nursery, classes in domestic science and other enlarging activities. The Kansas Baptist Convention and the Woman's Home Mission Society have cooperated in installing the heating plant, remodeling the building and providing the better equipment.

Realizing the need of a kindergarten for their employees, the officers of the Iro and Steel Works in Morioka, Japan brought up the question as to whether it should be Buddhist or Christian. The decision was for a Christian kindergarten. Perhaps the fact that the wife of the manager was from a Christian school had some influence. The officers have offered to give 500 tsubo of land prepared for the erection of a building, and to help in procuring building materials at a low price, if the Baptist Foreign Society would put up such a building and undertake the care of a kindergarten. This would naturally become the Christian Center for this great industrial plant.

The John the Baptist of Revival Campaigns

By WM. S. DIXON

SOME time ago, I was asked to write this article for a friend in New York City who was getting up some information regarding the work of the singing evangelist. Having fought the call into this work for ten whole years, I have felt constrained to offer this article to this paper for reprint, with the hope and prayer that it might be helpful to other young people who might be going through the same experience, wondering just what their life work is to be, and where the Lord would have them invest their lives for his glory. Going about the field in evangelism for the past nine years has shown me that many young people are having the same human experience that I had before entering definite Christian work as life work. They are casting about for just the place where they can use their talents and if the work of this line of God's field of service was brought before them, from some one who has been through several years of it, they might be led of the Spirit of God to offer their lives as an investment for him as a singing evangelist, carrying the gospel in song to needy hearts and lost souls.

The Messenger

I look upon this work as having the same relation to the preached Word as John the Baptist had to Christ, namely the messenger to prepare the way for the message from God. Christ was that "spoken Word" from the Father, manifested in the flesh. John the Baptist prepared the hearts of the people to be ready for the message from God. If the singing evangelist will look upon his work in the same relation to that of the preacher he will be prayerful about his own work and feel the keen sense of responsibility to make good and prepare the hearts of the hearers so that the message of God may be given immediately following by the spoken messenger, namely the preacher.

Other Duties

Actual routine work in detail, consists of leading congregations in the song service, directing chorus in special numbers, solo work by the singing evangelist, and so on. The man who is attending to the music only is missing a great opportunity, for there are many important parts of the work which the singing evangelist can do in addition to that of the music, important as that is. Other parts of his work could be among the boys and girls and the young people. Personally, I do much with the boys and girls; also, I speak each Sunday evening before the young people's meetings on life-work topics (inspiration), endeavoring to give these young people a vision of a surrendered life and urging them to get into the place of God's will for them. The Booster Chorus of the boys and girls each week is a big drawing card of the campaign; it also acts as a means of drawing their parents into the service. Then the singing evangelist can organize, direct and lead the morning cottage prayer meetings of the campaign. I find peaking at different shop and factory meetings during the noon hour also very profitable. The singing evangelist who can preach occasionally, as the opportunity comes, does a real service as a layman. I have found much joy in so doing.

The chief joys and satisfactions of the work are many. In the first place, a man is not selling his life for dollars and cents, but is investing it in lives of others for eternity. The singing evangelist has a great opportunity in witnessing, both by his consecrated life and by his lips, for Christ and the higher life, so that both may become attractive to others and especially the young people. Then many souls are touched by the gospel in song that are not moved by the sermon; for it puts the same message, perhaps, through the medium of music and thus plays upon the heartstrings of the hearers.

Problems and difficulties enter this work as well as all other lines of work, whether they be religious or secular, but the worker must remember that God is more than equal for all of them. One main difficulty is that of getting the members of the chorus faithfully to consecrate themselves to the work, during the whole of the campaign, another is to get the audience to sing the songs heartily.

Tact Needed

One difficulty that faces the singing evangelist is to be so tactful that he will not cause hard feelings among the singers in choosing special solos and so on, for there are many jealousies among the singers of the choir.

The most conspicuous use to society of the singing evangelist might be emphasized by recalling his real work, that of the music of the campaign, for all in his audience are lovers of music, whether they can sing or not; so he has a real opportunity through this channel of reaching every one with a strong gospel message. If he accepts this fact, he will find plenty of opportunity to be of use to humanity. There is a need in the heart of every man that only the gospel can supply, and as he realizes this he will be successful, or rather, I should say, faithful to his calling. Many a soul has been turned to find peace in Christ by the singing in song which has reached his heart.

The Needed Preparation

Essential preparation should be carefully made, for there are men in this field of work now who are not properly trained, and are therefore not doing the best that they are capable of or that the work requires. There are some men who think that because they have a good singing voice themselves, they can jump into the field and become a singing evangelist. But the man who will make good in this line of work should have more than that. He should be a trained worker along gospel lines, and be able to emphasize the gospel in his work and message. The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, has such a course which gives specialized training to the singing evangelist, giving well-rounded equipment for his work. I have found many ways in which my training has enabled me to make good in the field for the past nine years. Many men have dropped out of the work because they were not properly trained.

Qualities of personality essential or advantageous are many, also. I should emphasize consecration to God, first, and to his work, next. The world hates a counterfeit, and will not be long in detecting it in the singing evangelist. Many men have put to shame their calling by compromising actions in the field, such as would be unbecoming in a Christian gentleman, much less in a special worker for God and his kingdom. So I cannot emphasize this point too strongly, that the singing evangelist should be spiritual, in every part of his work. He should have his work on his heart. He should be kind, tactful and always courteous, and a gentleman under every circumstance. He should be a man who makes friends readily and be ready to adjust himself to every kind of condition and circumstance. He should be a student of psychology, being able to read and understand conditions as he finds them in his audience and in the individual he touches. And last, but not least, he should be a man of prayer about his work, his solos, the selection of his songs and in fact about every part of his work.

Iowa Baptist Convention

Marshalltown, Iowa, October 25-29

By A. W. TANDY

Eighty years ago the Baptist convention was organized at Iowa City. Many changes have been made in this country since that time. When the convention was organized, there were two associations, fourteen churches with 356 members. The number of ministers is unknown. They reported ten baptisms for the year. Nothing was given for benevolences. The present year reports show twenty-one associations, 369 churches, 357 ministers, 47,631 members and 2500 baptisms and $191,663.90 for benevolences. At that time the value of church property in Iowa was practically nothing. Today it is $3,546,741. At that time there was no Baptist educational institution. Since that time, there have been five educational institutions that have come into being, flourished, done their work and now are absorbed in the great University of Des Moines.

It would seem that these Baptists have done a little. Some changes have come. Some for the better and some for the worse. Those old saints who formed this convention would, no doubt, have felt strange in the group of 500 delegates assembled in Marshalltown. It is a long way from the ox-cart to the automobile and yet the Baptists have come this way and are today in better position than ever to go on to new conquests for Christ. The saints at Marshalltown, under the direction of Pastor Kinsman, made great plans to receive the delegates. Hearty and gracious was the welcome, hospitable their church house and every home. The city of Marshalltown opened wide its gates to these descendants of Roger Williams.

The gathering of pastors on Wednesday was auspicious. They came together in such a fine spirit that the tone for the whole convention was fixed. The writer of these lines has attended many gatherings of Iowa Baptist pastors, but never has he seen a finer group than the gathering this year. Their program had for its object, the better fitting and functioning of

Why Should We Be Interested in Denominational Journals?

At the meeting of the Administrative Committee of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention held at New York, Sept. 13, 1922, it was voted "That the General Board of Promotion, through its representatives, conduct during the month of December, an intensive campaign of subscription promotion in behalf of THE BAPTIST and Missions."

It was this action on the part of the Board of Promotion that instigated the editor of THE BAPTIST to send out a letter to representative persons throughout the Northern field, asking them: "Why should the denomination be interested in the wide circulation of these denominational journals?"

In reply come such as these:

To Help Us Keep Step

"I approve of THE BAPTIST and take it in my home, because I like to keep informed as to our denominational progress and to know what is going on in our quarter of the kingdom. The denomination, I think, should be interested in it for exactly the same reason.

"We are banded together for a common purpose. We need to keep informed as to what others similarly interested as ourselves are doing. I believe that our denominational program only grips us as we keep ourselves posted and I know of no better way to keep posted than to read THE BAPTIST."

ALBERT L. SCOTT,
Pres. Board of Promotion.

Permanent Results Based on Information

"1. These are our trade journals. Any successful man in trade or profession keeps abreast of his work thru the trade journal. We ought not to do less.

"2. Permanent results are based on information. Without knowing what our denomination is doing and what our money is accomplishing we cannot expect permanently to create adequate spirit or intelligent leadership.

3. Our people need to be familiar with the types of work in different places; the personnel of our leadership; the comradeship that exists between different branches of the Baptist fold. No other papers give news Baptistically except Baptist papers."

A. W. BEAVEN,
Pastor Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y.

Why Not As Wise?

"There is no single agency of greater importance to the Kingdom of God than the denominational journal that informs and inspires. A great deal of the strength of Christian Science in recent years has been due to their unusual emphasis on the "gospel of the printed word." Baptists are far behind them in the use of literature as a means of carrying the news of the kingdom to the churches. The day is probably far distant when our churches in general could be persuaded to send THE BAPTIST and Missions to every family and put the bill into the current expense budget of the church. But I do not see why this is not only defensible but commendable. Rotary is doing it. Every Rotarian gets the magazine of that splendid organization simply by reason of the fact that he is a Rotarian. In the last five years the National Education Association has made tremendous strides because it has been bold enough to circulate its own house organ in a similar way. Why are not the children of light as wise? The Baptist denomination is engaged in a tremendously bigger business than either Rotary or N. E. A.

CLIFTON D. GRAY, President Bates College.

Our Family Letters

"I like to think of our great denomination as a large family—the Baptist family. Missions and THE BAPTIST are our family letters, coming each week and month, keeping us close in touch with each other. Some of our members can tell us the needs of the world, some make us familiar with the questions of the day, some send notes of joy, some minor strains of sorrow, but altogether their messages bring us courage. As we read we realize that we belong to an important, wonderful "family" one that is doing great things in the world. We are happy to be a part and to do our part. Read Missions and THE BAPTIST and you will know.

MRS. W. P. TOPPING,
Pres. Woman's Mission Society of Illinois.

An Informed Membership An Active Membership

"Why does every large industrial organization have a house organ? Why does every social or civic undertaking publish an organ to distribute among its constituency? Why do clubs, lodges and fraternal bodies generally issue publications to their membership, frequently in part consideration of membership dues? In each instance the answer is the same. An informed membership is bound to be an intelligent, interested and active constituency. All of us are bound to grow provincial if we do not keep in touch with the great world outside of our own little circle of personal contact. On the other hand, knowledge of what others are doing in a similar enterprise is bound to be inspiring as well as encouraging. Added to this, such a publication as THE BAPTIST brings a vast fund of educational information. The section devoted to "Religious Education" alone is well worth the price of the paper. The editorial discussions and the various other departments are of public interest and constructive cultural value."

PLINY W. MARSH,
Presiding Judge Recorder's Court of the City of Detroit.

After all is said and done, any denominational campaign succeeds or fails in the local church. A campaign will not work itself. You as a member of the church in your community will help determine the measure of success in your town. The pastor will do his part but he cannot make the campaign a success without the cooperation of his membership. Why not be as wise as the organizations of which President Gray and Judge Marsh speak? At any rate let us not forget that an informed church membership is active not only in the interests far away but also in those at your door. "The light that shines farthest shines brightest at home."

Religious Education

The Central Day School of Religion

The Central Day School of Religion is a school for the religious instruction and training of boys and girls of school age, meeting shortly after the close of the public school sessions on Wednesday afternoon of each week, from November to May inclusive.

The school will be conducted by four downtown churches in Wooster, Mass. The First Baptist, First Presbyterian, Old South Congregational and Trinity Methodist Churches are cooperating closely in both planning and supporting the school. No charge will be made for tuition. A fee of 50 cents, however, will be requested on enrolment, to cover part of the cost of notebook and handwork supplies or of textbooks.

Classes and Courses

The sessions are held in four churches and in the Y. M. C. A. beginning Nov. 1, and will last from one hour to one hour and a quarter. Pupils will be classified according to their standing in the public school.

The primary class, including grades one and two, will use the course, "A Primary Book in Religion," by Colson.

The junior class, including grades three and four, the course, "A Travel Book for Juniors," by Hanson.

The intermediate class, including grades five and six, will use the course, "An Introduction to the Bible for Children," by Chamberlin.

The high-school junior class, including grades seven and eight, the course, "Hebrew Life and Times," by Hunting. These classes meet at 4:30 at different places.

The high-school girls class, including grades nine to twelve, meets at 2 o'clock, using the course, "The Story of Our Bible," by Hunting.

The high-school boys class, including grades nine to twelve, meets at the same hour but in another room, and uses the same course.

The work of each class will be varied and interesting. Worship and song, story and dramatization, handwork and class objects will feature practically every hour. Report cards and annual certificates of promotion will help to stimulate high grade work.

The Parents' Part

Parents and friends are cordially invited to visit the school and observe its work. The teachers will also covet your interest and your cooperation in the matter of the pupils' attendance and homework. Regularity, punctuality and application on the part of each pupil will more than repay one for any inconvenience involved.

Why a Week-day School of Religion?

What is the fundamental reason for a week-day school of religion? In the first place the religious illiteracy of the American people is alarming. In Massachusetts alone, according to recent surveys, there are more than 600,000 children of school age who receive no religious instruction. Interdenominational church schools, meeting on week-days have had excellent success in enlisting boys and girls from the community who do not attend any Sunday school.

Furthermore, the average child attending Sunday school receives only twenty or thirty hours of religious instruction in an entire year, and even that instruction is not uniformly efficient. The Central Day School of Religion doubles the time available, employs only well trained religious teachers, and secures the best possible curriculum and teaching conditions. In a word it dignifies the Christian religion in the mind of youth.

Finally, the school aims consciously to help make a better world—the kingdom of God on earth. As human relations become more complex, there is greater need for powerful religious motive, and clearer understanding of Jesus' relation to our present world. Therefore the school will endeavor, in a three-fold way,—through worship, study and service,—actually to lead our youth into the Christian life.

President Harding

President Harding says: "I strongly feel that every good parent cares for his child's body, that the child may have a normal and healthy life and growth; cares for the child's mind, that the child may take his proper place in a world of thinking people; and such a parent must also train his child's character religiously that the world may become morally fit. Unless this is done, trained bodies and trained minds may simply add to the destructive forces of the world."

International Sunday School Lesson for December 3

JESUS SENDING OUT MISSIONARIES

Lesson: Luke 9:1 to 10:24

Golden Text: Luke 10:2

Introductory

Between the account of the healing of the demoniac man of the Gerasenes and the printed verses of today's lesson are recorded the restoration to life of the daughter of Jairus, the healing of an afflicted woman, the sending forth of the twelve, the confusion of Herod as to Jesus' identity, the feeding of the multitude, Peter's testimony of Jesus as the Christ, the foretelling of the passion, the transfiguration, the curing of the afflicted boy, the dispute concerning rank. In today's lesson comes the sending forth of the seventy; Jesus knowing that his time with his people was short wished to have others trained to carry on his work after his bodily presence was removed.

The Lesson

"Now after these things (as referred to in the introduction) the Lord appointed seventy others, and sent them two by two before his face, into every city and place, whither he himself was about to come." Then, as now, the plea was that there was an abundant harvest ready for the gathering but there was a dearth of reapers. These seventy were appointed for a special work—to go before Jesus to prepare the fields which he would soon visit. They were sent out two by two for the mutual help they might give each other. "I send you forth as lambs among wolves"—no light task was this the Master was laying upon the chosen ones. They were to carry no purse, no luggage, and were to salute no man—the latter injunction probably because the work was pressing and no time was to be wasted over the lengthy Oriental salute. The peace salutation was to be given upon entering a house and if a son of peace dwelt there, the missionaries were to remain in such a house, eating and drinking such as was given them. They were not to make special demands for their welfare, but were to eat such things as were set before them, they were to heal the sick and to deliver their message, "The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." But if a city was unfriendly the seventy were to leave it, casting off its dust from their feet, nevertheless pronouncing the message, "The kingdom of God is come nigh." Verses 12 to 15 record the fate of such cities as did not heed the warning of God's prophets. The return of the seventy was joyful and triumphant, with the report that even the demons had been subject to them in the name of Jesus.

Leading Thoughts

1. "The faith that lifts and motivates life is not simply our faith in the divine, but the faith of the divine in us."—Fosdick.
2. "As the Father hath sent me, I send you," said Jesus.
3. Jesus saw the immediate need of missionaries in the field and he acted at once practically and definitely.
4. It would have been hard for the seventy to fail knowing that Jesus had faith in them.

BETTER SPEAKING

Prov. 10:10-21, 31,32.

(CONSECRATION MEETING)

"The tongue of the righteous is as choice silver."

We have discussed "Better Praying," "Better Recreation," "Better Giving," "Better Work," "Better Thinking" and now, "Better Speaking."

Many of our church organizations are afflicted with those individuals who love to talk. How many times have we longed for some sort of automatic machinery for arranging terminal facilities for the dear brother or sister, who when called upon for "sentence prayers" or testimony, will, launch out to sea, flounder around for several minutes, and finally come into harbor with a great gusto and flow of language that wakes up the sleepers and startles the few who have been able to survive the attacks of insomnia while the brother was on his sea voyage.

Better speaking involves a number of things:

1. The right sort of life. When Christ comes into the life, he changes things. The life that was ego-centric, now becomes Christo-centric. A lot of the old selfish ambitions and desires have to give place to higher and better motives. It is a new life. This life must be the source of "better speaking."

2. The right sort of thinking. "As a man thinketh . . . so is he." The individual who gives himself to unclean thoughts, will bye and bye, begin to speak unclean words. Words are only the verbal expressions of what we are on the inside. People often judge us by what we say, for this, they say, reveals what we are thinking.

3. Something to say. How tired we get of just mere prattle. "Silence is golden" when we have nothing to say that is worth while. This is not to advocate going around with a long face and never to speak unless some great and profound thought can be uttered. But the world would be infinitely better off if people would talk only when they really have something to say.

4. The time to say it. Did you ever meet that individual who reminds you of a bull in a china-shop? He is always in the wrong place and saying things at the wrong time. He is foolish when every one else is serious. He talks when there should be silence. He breaks in on conversations that do not concern him. He introduces inappropriate subjects. He never seems to have a sense of proportions. Young people should learn the fine art of saying things at the right time.

5. A way to say it. I know a denominational worker who holds a good many conferences. At the beginning of the conference, he slides down in his chair until you would think him to be sitting on the back of his head. The attitude of the "slouch" is almost unpardonable. The very posture and attitude of the speaker go a long way with the folks who have to listen.

Every young people's society should have a critic who would take the speakers in hand when they make such mistakes as noted above. Bad habits fasten themselves on us very quickly, and linger with us many years. The B. Y. P. U. offers an unusual opportunity for the overcoming of these defects in public speaking. Let's make the most of the opportunity by helpfully criticizing each other and assisting each other in building robust bodies and charming personalities.

Are You Going to Boston?

The thirty-second anniversary convention of all the Baptist young people of the United States and Canada will be held in Boston, July 4-8, 1923. Extensive preparations are being made for a great convention.

The convention key-note will be, "The Attractive Christ." Christ will be presented in all his attractiveness to the young people of our day. Every society should send at least one delegate.

Program Acceptances

Dr. F. W. Padelford, secretary of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention will speak on "The Attractiveness of Christ's Educational Ideals."

Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, N. Y., will deliver one of the evening addresses, subject not yet assigned.

Dr. James A. Francis, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Los Angeles, tentatively accepts our invitation to deliver one or more addresses.

Dr. Russell H. Conwell, pastor of the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, will give his lecture "Acres of Diamonds" on Wednesday evening, July 4.

Iowa Associational B. Y. P. U.

By HELEN M. AULD, Secretary.

Once more Iowa Associational B. Y. P. U. has written into its history the story of an inspiring service together. This year it was held with the First Church, Burlington.

Promptly at 4:15, Saturday afternoon, Sept. 16, under the leadership of our president, Arthur L. Petry, we began our program, which was full of real enthusiasm from the start, with the singing of "Whosoever, surely meaneth me." After prayer a short time was given for yells and songs, which all enjoyed.

It was with a deep sense of pleasure that we welcomed our new Sunday school director, Rev. V. N. Witter, to our association. In his message, he told us that the future, not only of our Baptist cause, but of Christianity, civilization and the world depends upon young people, bringing before us some startling figures in regard to the young people's work, as well as the plan of reorganization of our state work. So impressed with his message and so heartily were our young people in favor of the new plan, that it was moved and carried to adopt the plan as presented, and the nominating committee was instructed to select officers in accordance with the general plan.

From the figures furnished by the ten societies reporting out of the thirteen in the association, we found $253.37 was given to missions; $150 to local work; thirty-five titheers; twenty-seven in college; sixteen life-service volunteers; forty-five teaching in Sunday school and 126 representatives at the various denominational gatherings throughout the year.

Preceding the evening service, the girls of the Burlington B. Y. P. U. presented the pageant entitled, "The Critics," which carried with it such a beautiful message, followed by a profitable "Tithe Testimony," and an interesting discussion of the "One-tenth Man," which brought forth many helpful thoughts regarding the question of tithing. At this session also, "Marks of Excellence for Better B. Y. P. U. Work," suggested by the officers, and somewhat similar to the standard of excellence, was heartily adopted, which, if prayerfully followed, we are sure, will mean increased spirituality in all our unions.

Very near and dear to the hearts of all our young folks is Rev. John Firth, the old pioneer missionary located at North Lakhimpur, Assam, whose letter expressing what rejoicing there would be in his hear if our next spring rally could be held at North Lakhimpur, was read at this time. Mr. Petry suggested that when we were ready to make the journey to let him know and we would then start off on our joyful mission.

After singing "Stand Up for Jesus" came what might be termed the climax of our program, when we heard the message from one of Iowa's recently ordained ministers, Rev. J. Shade Franklin, upon the subject, "Our Tithe in Time." Mr. Franklin is president of Iowa's Life Service League and is now a senior in Des Moines University. He said that morimportant than following out the command to give of our money is the command to carry the gospel message to our fellow creatures and that as young people we should consider seriously the responsibility before us. Everywhere we look we see the need for our own effort, for work which we can do, which may be bringing foreign family into relationship with Christ, something our money cannot do. We must devote our energy and talents to carrying forward the work Jesus Christ has given us, for the needs of the church today will take more than our money and good wishes. In each and every need, we can feel a call to service. Each one of us has a different task, a different responsibility in the world today and by searching the Scriptures we find the one true method for planning our lives. If we only put our trust in God, he will give us the ability and power and show us how to perform the tasks he has set before us. God's call comes through the great crying need of the human family. No matter to what task God has called us, we have our part, but those to whom God brings a special message in the great needs of the world must think long and carefully before refusing to accept the responsibility.

We wish this splendid message of deep conviction, coming from one of our own life service volunteers, could have been heard by all of our young people. Mr. Franklin is one of Iowa's strong Christian young people and we bespeak for him a long and successful ministry, for a more earnest, devoted worker in the master's vineyard would be hard to find. Greetings from our national secretary, Mr. White, were truly appreciated. The evening's service closed with prayerfully singing "Where He Leads Me, I Will Follow."

Sunday evening at 6:50 under the leadership of Mr. Petry, we put on a demonstration of the wrong kind of a Y. P. U. service. At the beginning, no one was present, but the president and stranger. Straggling in, came the rest of the folks, who laughed and talked the whole time. Later came the leader, who didn't even know what the topic was. So it went through the entire service. Then was shown the right kind of a Y. P. U. service, conducted in all seriousness. It was a fitting close to our part of the association program and carried its message home. (This sketch was prepared by our president and we shall be glad to send it to any one who may care to use it.)

Just before closing, the invitation of the president of the Keokuk B. Y. P. U., Mr. Harold Finley, for the spring rally to meet with the Keokuk Church was heartily accepted. Keokuk is already making plans and we want any Baptist passing through our city during the last week of April, or any other time, to feel welcome to worship with us.

Keokuk, Iowa.

Ohio Summer Assembly

My dear Dr. White:

I am enclosing the report of the Ohio Y. P. U. which was presented at our annual meeting. Thought perhaps it might be of interest to you. Had Rev. W. R. Sloman present the campaign for new subscriptions for THE BAPTIST. He did it in a real book-agent fashion, telling the total number of pages in the book for the year. Then he told of the different chapters in the book.

The life-service meeting on Sunday afternoon was very fine. Dr. Bates, formerly of Detroit but now of Toledo, led the consecration service. About forty new recruits were enlisted which brings Ohio's numbers to over 400.

The new officers for the ensuing year are: President, Miss Edith Place, Cambridge; vice-president, Rev. W. R. Sloman, Dayton; secretary, Miss Ruth Calvin, Hubbard; treasurer, Mrs. Clara Lloyd, Granville; transportation manager, Rev. Charles J. Bowen; booster, Rev. George Bates, Toledo.

The associations having the largest attendance were awarded banners; Cleveland Association won first honor and Miami Association won second. The award for largest attendance in a local union was won by Lakewood Church and second by Geneva Church. These also received banners.

Mr. Bates has set Ohio's number at Boston for 100. Michigan challenged Ohio in setting a number and pledged to beat us by fifty. Michigan will surely have to go some with Bates on our side. He is already planning for Boston tea parties and Boston bean suppers to boost for a large attendance.

Enjoyed the St. Paul Convention immensely. Never saw a convention where the details worked out so perfectly. We were proud of our president.

Twin City Post-Convention Conference

My dear Mr. White:

The writer thinks you might be interested in the post-convention conference which was conducted under the auspices of the executive committee of the Twin City convention organization. This conference was attended by pastors and leaders of organized young people's work of our Twin City Baptist churches, and those young people who made life-work decisions at the recent young people's convention, or who had made similar decisions at previous or other conventions. We made no attempt to promote this conference on any general basis. We concentrated our fire on the young people who are members of the Life Service League. Dr. Carl Case helped us tremendously in putting this conference on a high plane spiritually.

You will be interested in the scheme used in planning this conference. The special group life callings conference following the supper program were especially inspiring. The attendance at the group conferences was quite evenly distributed. The writer was especially impressed by the conference conducted by Dr. John Earl on "Ministry." One by-product of this conference was steps toward the organization of a ministerial club for those young men of the Twin City churches who are planning to enter the ministry. This club will meet at stated times together with the Twin City pastors for practical help and encouragement. A foreign missionary conference was unusually well attended.

About 135 people were in attendance at the conference, most of these being members of the Life Service League. The conference was planned by the convention executive committee, the definite responsibilities for the conduct of the same being left with the following members of the committee: George Earl, A. F. Holmer, Fannie Brent, Richard Holland and Carl Anderson.

I take the liberty of sending this letter to you in the thought that this might be suggestive to other young people's organizations in following up the results of the convention. Sincerely yours,

A. F. HOLMER.

From Across The Sea

Bratislava, Sept. 21, 1922.

Dr. James Asa White.

My dear sir and brother:

I was very glad to receive your letter and also literature that you sent me. I am very thankful for your interest about the work among our Slovak people and Bohemian.

There is some good news for you and all young people in America. Last week we held a conference at Brno. There were over seventy delegates. Young people united together for the work of Christ. Rev. A. Knoblock is president, Rev. A. Strajon corresponding and financial secretary, Rev. M. Sharik vice-president, and Mr. J. Karafiat, treasurer. Please take us in your arms, we are going to work with you all for the cause of Christ in these last days of great opportunity. We are not very strong, neither in Christian experiences nor in financial way. We need your help in every way. So please remember your brethren in Czecho-Slovakia. Speak to young people about the work. I shall send you some facts regarding the work here. Dr. Jones and Dr. Taylor will tell you also a great deal more than I could write.

We are planning to have a small tabernacle for next summer, so we can go from one place to another. Money is needed for this work, and we are still in critical condition as to financial affairs.

With my best wishes for you and the work in America, I am, most cordially yours,

A. STRAJON, Gen. Secy.

Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery in the Christian Herald for Oct. 28 on "Church Work Woman's Opportunity," writes, "Woman is needed to help direct the new revolution that is taking place in religious education, in administrative positions and especially as writers and artists. She can serve in the departments of church publicity and in secretarial positions in the local church, the state and national organizations. Such service brings comradeship, corrects narrowness and pettiness of interests and furnishes a life career more than worth while."

Reward

By BLANCHE BANE KUDER

ALL day I did the little things,
The little things that do not show;
I brought the kindling for the fire,
I set the candles in a row,
I filled a bowl with marigolds,
The shallow bowl you love the best—
And made the house a pleasant place
Where weariness might take its rest.

The hours sped on. My eager feet
Could not keep pace with my desire,
So much to do, so little time!
I would not let my body tire.
Yet, when the coming of the night
Blotted the garden from my sight,
And on the narrow graveled walks
Between the guarding flower stalks
I heard your step, I was not through
With services I meant for you!

You came into the quiet room
That glowed enchanted with the bloom
Of yellow flame. I saw your face
Illumined by the fire-lit space
Slowly grow still and comforted.

"It's good to be at home," you said.

Ironing

By MAY WILLIAMS WARD

I HAVE ironed my husband's shirts, oh, very smoothly;
I wish I could as easily erase
His frowning, worried look of inattention—
I cannot read the new lines in his face.

Mary lets me iron her crepes and laces;
I wonder if she thinks that mother's hands
Would tear the fine-meshed fabric of her love-dreams?
I wish she knew that mother understands.

Jack likes the finest nainsook, trim, athletic,
Next his skin. Most finical of men,
How can he bear to waste his time on Gladys?

I wish he were a little boy again.

Oh, well! My task today is just the ironing;
But while I iron, I can not help but pray,
"Dear Lord, please let me smooth my loved ones' pathways;
Please do not let them drift too far away!"

A Prayer for All Working Women

O GOD, we pray thee for our sisters who are leaving the ancient shelter of the home to earn their wage in the store and shop amid the press of modern life. Grant them strength of body to bear the strain of unrelenting toil, and may no present pressure unfit them for the holy duties of home and motherhood which the future may lay upon them. Give them grace to cherish under the new surroundings the old sweetness and gentleness of womanhood, and in the rough mingling of life to keep the purity of their hearts and lives untarnished. Save them from the terrors of utter want.
Teach them to stand by their sisters loyally, that by united action they may better their common lot. And to us all do thou grant wisdom and firm determination that we may not suffer the women of our nation to be drained of strength and hope for the enrichment of a few, lest our homes grow poor in the wifely sweetness and motherly love which have been the saving strength and glory of our country. If it must be so that our women toil like men, help us still to reverence in them the mothers of the future. If they yearn for love and the sovereign freedom of their own home, give them in due time the fulfilment of their sweet desires. By Mary, the beloved, who bore the world's redemption in her bosom; by the memory of our own dear mothers who kissed our souls awake; by the little daughters who must soon go out in that world which we are now fashioning for others, we beseech thee that we may deal aright by all women.

"Prayers of the Social Awakening."

Our Own

I F I had known in the morning
How wearily all the day
The words unkind
Would trouble my mind
I said when you went away,
I had been more careful, darling,
Nor given you needless pain;
But we vex our own
With look and tone
We may never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening
You may give me the kiss of peace,
Yet it might be
That never for me
The pain of the heart should cease.
How many go forth in the morning
That never come home at night,
And hearts have broken
For harsh words spoken
That sorrow can never set right.

We have careful thoughts for the stranger
And smiles for the some time guests.
But off for "our own"
The bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best.
Ah, lips with the curve impatient;
Ah, brow with the look of scorn;
'Twere a cruel fate
Were the night too late
To undo the work of the morn.

The Seamstress

I AM sewing out my sorrow,
Like a thread, wearing it thin;
It will be old and frayed tomorrow.
Needle, turn out; needle, turn in.

Sorrow's thread is a long thread.
Needle, one stitch; needle, two.
And sorrow's thread is a strong thread,
But I will wear it through.

Then not only will sorrow
Be old and thin and frayed;
But I shall have, tomorrow,
Something sorrow has made.

The Young Reserves

Mind Your Ps and Qs

AS far as minding their Ps and Qs went, you may be sure that Pee Wong and Pee Ming minded them—they had to! For the sad truth of the matter was that their father had just eaten their teak-wood cabinet (the one they had brought over from China), he had even eaten their red lacquer rice bowls and all their wadded silk garments, and one by one he had also eaten all their little embroidered slippers and their green jade necklaces and their kingfisher bracelets. Not that he actually chewed and swallowed such hard indigestible objects, but he kept selling these things so that he might continue to be that most selfish of all mortals, an opium-eater, one who craves nothing but opium and yet more opium; until, when everything else was sold, it was no wonder that their mother warned Pee Wong and Pee Ming that the next thing anybody knew, their father would be selling them. Goodness knows, there were plenty of Chinamen in San Francisco wicked enough to buy such nice little yellow maidens for slave girls—and she would paint rather terrible pictures of what it meant to be a slave: some one who could be slapped on the ears whenever anything went wrong—some one who could be forced to carry impossible heavy things all day long—or—oh! worse yet were the horrible things she really could not bring herself to mention in so many words. It was these unmentionable things that caused uncomfortable shivers to ripple up and down the backbones of Pee Wong and Pee Ming, and made them mind their Ps and Qs harder than ever.

Perhaps you are wondering what Ps and Qs may be: so I shall have to explain it is merely a way of impressing you with certain facts about Pee Wong and Pee Ming—for one thing, that they looked as much alike as two peas in a pod. Their dear slant eyes were set at the very same bias in their respective yellow faces, their quaint little knobs of noses were absolutely similar, and their prim rosebud mouths were identical. It was almost absurd; and one very much doubts whether even Mrs. Pee could tell them apart. But, of course, they knew themselves apart, so there could never be a really serious mix up! And as for Qs, if you only spell it p-u-e-u-e-s (queues) it will remind you what great pains they took in braiding their glossy, black hair into delightfully long pigtails, even braiding in some red string, since red is the Chinese color for good luck, and it might help them mind their difficult Ps and Qs better. For things were getting really serious now, since nothing was left in the house to sell, and their father grumbled constantly about filling the empty stomachs of two such useless little persons.

It was on the seventh day of his repeating these cross remarks that Mrs. Pee went for the last time to the Joss House to pray to the Joss about the trouble in store for her poor daughters. A Joss House is a Chinese temple, and a Joss is an idol—this particular patron idol of Mrs. Pee's was a little wooden fellow with painted red cheeks and staring green eyes and a very black mustache painted to droop in angry circles way down on his chest. To Mrs. Pee he was the only god in all America capable of helping her, so she gave a ten-cent piece to the Chinese priest who had charge of the temple.

"What?" said he, looking at it, "this trifling sum of money is hardly worth giving, silly woman!"

"That is true," she sighed, "it is miserably next-to-nothing, excellency; but it is absolutely all I have, and I hoped that you would deign to use it in waking up the honorable Joss so he will listen to me."

It must be admitted that the priest was decidedly grumpy as he slipped the little coin up his silk sleeve: "Oh, well," he snorted, "if it's all you've got!"

And he picked up a small bamboo stick and struck a large brass gong several times until the air was filled with the metallic boom! boom! boom! of it. Then he handed Mrs. Pee some joss sticks which she lighted; after which she knelt before the little idol and bowed three times, bumping her forehead reverently upon the floor as she prayed: "Very venerable and glorious being, condescend to protect my two insignificant daughters! O keep them from being sold as slave girls, most worshipped and all-powerful Joss!"

Over and over she prayed this, lighting new joss sticks each time and continuing to bump her poor forehead against the floor. As for the idol, he sat there with the usual bored expression on his motionless wooden face, his painted eyes never once blinked—not even when the frantic mother wept and wailed forlornly.

"But dear me," you cry, "are there temples like that in America? And priests? And idols?"

Indeed there are, although thousands of good Christian people, who have never discovered America yet, sit calmly in their pews on Sunday morning and pray most earnestly:

"Our Father, who art in heaven
Hallowed be thy name,
Thy kingdom come,
Thy will be done
On earth. . ."

But I know our Father in heaven must often sigh at our slowness in doing his will on earth and helping his kingdom to come right around the corner here in our own America where Mrs. Pee is crying out her very heart.

But some of us have discovered America, as you know by this time, and it was owing to our Chinese Baptist mission that Pee Wong and Pee Ming were able to mind their Ps and Qs successfully a week later on a morning when their father had announced at breakfast that that very day he planned to sell them to a certain man for ten dollars apiece. "It's dirt cheap for you," he groaned, "but I'm tired of feeding your big, hungry stomachs."

"No, no, master," cried Mrs. Pee, "the gods will not permit this selling; I have prayed to the Joss many times about this, and given all my money, so I think he will protect them—"

"Nonsense!" leered the head of the Pees, "what should an inner-apartment-female like you know about America? There isn't a god anywhere strong enough to keep me from selling my own useless brats if I want to, you silly pig of a woman!"

An hour later Mrs. Pee quietly smuggled the little girls out of the door and they were creeping along the narrow streets of Chinatown toward a friend's house, where they could hide in safety, when suddenly they saw their father slouching in a doorway ahead of them.

"Hurry! Hurry!" sobbed Pee Ming, dashing down a side street.

"Wait for me! Wait for me!" wailed Pee Wong, tagging along after her as fast as she could.

It was in turning a corner suddenly that they bumped straight into our missionary, who caught them in her arms to keep them from falling, and exclaimed: "Tag, you're it! Whatever makes you dash around corners like that, my dears?"

Breathlessly they told her their sad tale, how that very day their father was planning to sell them for opium money. . .

"But that's altogether against the law," the pleasant lady said sternly, "I will notify the police, my dears, and you mustn't cry another drop—just come to the mission with me; you'll be perfectly safe, and I'll go and bring your mother to you, too."

Of all surprises that mission was the crowning joy! Never had they dreamed of playing games on the roof of any building, especially on the very day they feared they might be sold. Yet here they were playing follow the leader in the merriest possible fashion with dozens of other Chinese children. No wonder that when their mother called for them they were full of news:

"Mother," cried Pee Ming, "that red-white-and-blue-thing-with-stars is the flag of this land called America, and when somebody holds it up in the air we must all stand with our arms poked out toward it and say long American words at it—"

"I know some of those words," interrupted Pee Wong, proudly, "listen, mother, they sound like this: 'I pledge allegiance—'"

"And mother," Pee Ming broke in excitedly, "there's a God in America who made the whole world, and China, too. He's not any little wooden joss that you can see, mother; these little Chinese children here have been telling us."

You can see for yourself that the mission seemed entirely too good to be true. But it was true! And the police lost no time in warning Mr. Pee that he was not free to sell his own daughters even if he wanted to, and that he would surely

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

State Convention

The largest convention in our history gathered less than five miles from the heart of the city, may be regarded as furnishing legitimate grist for a Boston Letter. The most golden October weather from beginning to end was a big factor in its success. The accessibility of West Somerville was another factor; and the known vitality of the West Somerville Church was another. All through the convention the weather and the church vied with each other in keeping things up to the highest level.

The meeting-house was always full. Indeed, not being a spacious auditorium, it was chockfull, and was fringed by celebrated "wall-flowers" most of the time. That, by the way, is not a disadvantage. So many churches are too big for their congregations nowadays; it was good to behold one that was not big enough, and to note the enthusiastic interest kindled by proximity and touching elbows. Pastor Swaffield of the entertaining church was a live and hearty host, and was untiring in promoting a warm and hospitable atmosphere.

The Program

It was well constructed, and covered the entire gamut of Baptist activities in state and nation. We had evangelism, missions, prohibition, ministry, new Americans, young people, and never out of mind in any session was the great Baptist program for the world. From the state we had such spellbinders as Prof. H. K. Rowe, Samuel M. Lindsay, H. A. Heath, F. W. Padelford, J. C. Massee, Mrs. G. W. Coleman, William T. Sheppard, Gertrude Hartley, C. L. Pierce, F. W. French, Clarence B. Mitchell, E. B. Dolan, F. F. Peterson, W. E. Waterbury, Albert W. Jefferson and C. N. Arbuckle. From the nation we had President F. E. Taylor, E. T. Tomlinson, Helen B. Montgomery, H. M. Fillebrown, Harry S. Myers, Mrs. Charles S. Brooks; and from the world we had Joseph Taylor and J. H. Rushbrooke.

The Talks

The "long talks" were given by Professor Rowe, S. M. Lindsay, H. A. Heath, F. W. Padelford, F. E. Taylor, E. T. Tomlinson, J. C. Massee, Mrs. Montgomery, Miss Hartley, H. S. Myers, Mrs. Brooks, J. H. Rushbrooke and C. N. Arbuckle. There were many talks that were the more pungent because they had to be short to hit the bull's eye. That glowing center was made all through the three days in talks long and short.

Some of the best sessions were filled with snappy, illuminating addresses that pictured for us the state forces at work on all sorts of fields, and among racial varieties with which our cities and towns abound. Also in those in which all the phases of training for leadership in religious education were set forth. Of course the great sessions on ministerial pensions and Christian stewardship under Dr. Tomlinson and Harry S. Myers were electric. The magic word "money" always stirs up the microbes in our brains, and gives us a varying pocket-book consciousness.

The Outstanding Impressions

Everybody spoke of this "record convention," in weather, in attendance, hospitality, practical inspiration and illuminating leadership. "Eloquence" seemed to be nailed to the wall. Speakers in earnest natural fashion told us about things, pouring in the facts, and the listeners supplied the eloquence.

Another thing impressed everybody: that our state leadership was very able and was ably functioning everywhere. It is on to its job, knows exactly what is its objective, and is reaching it. From President Curtis and Chief Secretary Heath down through all the departments there is a strong, intelligent pull, and a mighty pull together. It is immensely gratifying to have this confidence. It gives atmosphere to all of our Baptist endeavor in Massachusetts.

Pittsfield

The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the First Church, Pittsfield, brings to view the shining record of a noble church. Happy were they to be led in their celebration by so radiant a leader as Pastor Maurice A. Levy. All around Boston we know him and know how bright and sweet things are where he is. But think of that roster of pastors who within our recollection have blessed that church—C. H. Spalding, O. P. Gifford, G. W. Gile, Edward Holyoke, Orville Coates, H. S. Johnson, G. G. Johnson, F. W. Lockwood, C. P. Macgregor, and M. A. Levy. They did well to celebrate. But the real celebration will come when the great new home is built and the old church is housed befitting its history and worthy of the proud Berkshire city.

Polishing the Illustrious

Boston is gradually refurbishing up her statuary. When the smudge of the years is rubbed off, it seems like a new triumph of the sculptors. The Robert Gould Shaw memorial, just fronting the State House, is something to see in the clear October air. Its recovered glory makes us feel that we had faltered in our appreciation of that Saint Gaudens masterpiece.

Benjamin Franklin and Josiah Quincy have just passed under the brush, and look down upon us from their pedestals in front of the City Hall, like shining moderns. Probably "Fighting Joe Hooker," Nathaniel P. Banks, Charles Devens, Rufus Choate, and Sam Adams will be taking their turn. Adams' recent celebration would put into eclipse even an enlivened effigy. You can hardly plan for statues as you can for a parkway. They come in their own succession, or, as a new estimate corrects the perspective of an old hero, and a passion flames forth to do him justice. Usually the last statue gets the choice position, and some earlier worthy may get a worse one.

This is illustrated in the new statue of Anne Hutchinson by Cyrus Dallin just hidden in front of the remote left wing of the State House, and the heroic horse-back statue of General Hooker standing perhaps in the best position for a statue in the commonwealth. You would almost think the redoubtable soldier was about to gallop down Park Street from his slightly pedestal. Had the estimate of Charles Francis Adams II prevailed there would have been no statue of Hooker anywhere. But really, should not Anne, the spiritual chieftain in the heroic age, have had the preeminence?

General Banks stands almost in seclusion towards the rear of the State House. It was prescient to pose him as a statesman. As a general he was chiefly valuable to the Confederate Army. So frequently did he supply them with needed ammunition and supplies that they facetiously dubbed him "Quarter-master General, C. S. A."

A Thriller

Rev. Kenneth C. MacArthur gave the ministers one of the experiences of a lifetime on the thirtieth. He spoke on "Eugenics and Religion." For amazing fullness and bristling interest it went beyond anything we have had for long. He made a fire on the subject that set us all aglow. Now and then we fall back on home talent and "Blue Monday" gets painted red.

Our Schools

The Divinity School of the University of Chicago

Work has opened up with us in a highly satisfactory way. Our registration is larger than it has been for several years, and has been exceeded only once in the history of the Divinity School. Including the registration of the Chicago Theological Seminary we have 192 pursuing studies with us at the present time. A noticeable feature in the attendance this year is the large number of young men, who have come in from the colleges. Of these a great proportion are candidates for the ministry. It is years, indeed, since the proportion of ministerial students was as large as it is at the present time.

Another gratifying feature is the presence on our campus of twenty-five foreign missionaries on furlough. One of these is from the Philippine Islands, three from Egypt, two from Burma, seven from China, and twelve from India. No class of students is more heartily welcome to the campus than these foreign missionaries. Not alone are they serious students but they add an element of maturity and cosmopolitanism to our student body life.

Our chapels have been well sustained. On Tuesdays a special series of lectures is being given by members of the staff on problems connected with the ministry and effective scholastic work on our campus. Visiting university preachers continue to add greatly to the interest and profit of these chapel services.

Steps have been taken to put the Divinity School into contact with a large number of the churches of the middle west. Members of our staff are being invited by the churches to preach or deliver special addresses. Dean Mathews has already visited a number of points in Wisconsin and Chicago—Fond du Lac, Oshkosh, Waupun; Tabernacle and Irving Park, Chicago, and Calvary, Minneapolis. During the month of November several of our professors will be continuously engaged in this field of work.

Most of our students are earnestly at work in some type of religious activity. Many of them are preaching in student pastorates and others are engaged in various types of educational and recreational church work. As usual our problem is to secure remunerative work for many who have to make their way through college. However, we have never had more opportunities for this type of service than this autumn.

The Institute on the Bible and Religion conducted on Thursday evenings in Harper Hall is having a successful season. About seventy-five are enrolled in the various classes. The courses embrace "The Life of Jesus," by Dean Mathews; "The Early Old Testament History and Literature," by Professor Luckenbill; "Museum Antiquities," by Professor Allen; "How to Tell Bible Stories," by Miss Chamberlin, and "The Church in American Life," by the writer. These courses are intended for all who are interested in the study of the Bible and religion.—P. G. MODE.

Religious Life of Linfield College

Linfield College has well entered upon one of the most successful years of its history, the student body being within four of the largest enrolments which we have ever had. During the year of our maximum enrolment 265 students matriculated, eighty of whom were fully accredited college students, the others being either special students or in the preparatory or music departments. The present student body numbers 265 students, of whom 225 are fully accredited college students; 213 of these are members of Baptist churches, thirty-six others are identified with various evangelical denominations, leaving but sixteen in the student body who are not professed Christians. For a college of our size we feel that, with the prevalence of Christian students here shown, the influence radiating therefrom will lead others to Jesus Christ.

The evangelistic band of Linfield College is a source of inspiration and help to the weak churches which receive its ministrations at every week-end. Our young men and young women, going out from the college on Friday, and holding live services by Sunday night, not only help these churches, but themselves are helped in their service in leading men to Christ.

Objectives

The religious objectives of the student body can best be seen by referring to a reception recently held in the home of President Riley, given in honor of the departure for their work of Rev. and Mrs. Samuel Boyden, our missionaries to the "robber tribes" of India. President Riley invited the young men and women, who have definitely determined to go into the ministerial or missionary work either at home or abroad, to meet Mr. and Mrs. Boyden. Forty-nine young people of this type responded to the invitation and spent a pleasant evening with them. In addition to these forty-nine, Rev. and Mrs. Charles Rutherford, of India, Mrs. E. E. Burkett, of China, and Mrs. Manley, of India, all former graduates of the institution, were present.

Our future missionaries and ministers are now in training. They will preach and will teach in a large degree that which is being preached to and taught to them. For sixty years our college has been functioning with the sole purpose of enriching lives for added service in the kingdom of Jesus Christ. This year over 50 per cent of its enrolment of 265 students are student volunteers for service.

Being desirous to help relieve the famine situation in the east, the young men and women of our dining club voluntarily surrendered their dessert for two weeks, and a check for $42 as the result of this personal sacrifice has been sent for that cause. In addition to the above personal sacrifice groups from the student body have made canvasses of various parts of the town for the relief of this famine-stricken area.—J. C. AUSTIN.

Hillsdale, Michigan

There are now more than fifty students in college who cannot be accommodated daily in the chapel services because of the lack of seats. For some time the prudential committee and the authorities of the college have been working on this problem, measuring the chapel and trying to see if it would be possible to put enough additional seats in to accommodate our student body. This could not be done without considerable alteration and a rather large item of expense.

The only other alternative possible has been the using of the college church, located so near the campus as to be almost a part of it, as our chapel. Acting upon the authority of the prudential committee, overtures were made by the college to the church and accepted by them which permit us from now on to conduct our chapel services in that place.

It will be also helpful to have the fine pipe organ available. The music department of the college has consented under the new arrangement to provide a choir, and on Wednesdays and Fridays and Saturdays there will be a choir number in connection with the chapel program, under the direction of Miss Eleanor Kelly, head of the music department. On Tuesdays and Thursdays there will be opportunities for solo work under the direction of Professor George Bancroft Dana. It is earnestly hoped that within a reasonable time some friend of the college may take the opportunity to place upon the campus a beautiful chapel. Until that time the church, because of its nearness to the campus, offers the only solution to this problem.

Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association

Statement Submitted to Minnesota State Convention, October, 1922

Many in attendance at this convention are more familiar with the name "Mounds Park Sanitarium" than with the new name which appears at the head of this report. Most of you are familiar with the beginnings of the work of this association sixteen years ago when a troupe of Swedish Baptists of the Twin Cities organized the Mounds Park Sanitarium Association and erected their first building on a site on Earl Street at Indian Mounds, St. Paul. During these years the sanitarium has been growing steadily in the size and quality of its service. Some years ago the demands of the work which the association was called upon to do began emphasizing the need for additional hospital equipment so located as to serve effectively not only the people of Minneapolis and St. Paul but out-of-town people visiting either of these two cities. Naturally the board of directors of the association regarded the great growing Midway district as the section most likely furnishing the site required for this new enlarged equipment. With this in mind two purchases were made of the only two community hospitals in the Midway district, namely, the old Cobb Hospital, at Cleveland and Iglehart Avenues, and the Midway Hospital, Snelling Avenue near University. About two years ago a seven-acre tract of land on University Avenue, three blocks from Snelling, was purchased. These grounds are the most strategically located hospital grounds anywhere in the two cities—equally accessible to all railroad stations, and on University Avenue, the main arterial highway of the Twin Cities. The association is now looking forward to the securing of funds necessary to provide for a general hospital on this new site. You will note the change in name which was adopted by the association about a year ago, the organization now being called the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association. The board of directors was enlarged to include thirty members. At the meeting of this board held last May, the officers were authorized to engage a general superintendent, whose functions would be to coordinate the services of the existing hospitals owned by the association as well as to lead in the Midway development project mentioned above. Mr. A. F. Holmer of Minneapolis was invited to assume the responsibilities of this work.

The Directors

The members of the board of directors of the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association are: Dr. Robert Earl, chairman. Dr. George Earl, president, Dr. G. A. Hagstrom, sec. and treas., C. P. Dahlby, Mr. Chas. Skooglund, Olof Swenson, Rev. John A. Swanson, John Hawkins, Rev. Edgar A. Vallant, Chas. E. Carlson, Rev. J. G. Briggs, Rev. John Earl, Rev. Arvid Edstam, Mr. Henry Marks, Rev. J. J. Runyan, Rev. C. J. Stoeckmann, St. Paul; Dr. Frank Peterson, Rev. Eric A. Carlson, Rev. R. A. Arlander, Rev. O. Breding, Mr. A. F. Holmer, Rev. Wm. B. Riley, Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, Minneapolis; Rev. C. H. Bolvig, Mankato; Rev. Olof Hedeon, Chicago; Rev. Wm. Kuhn, Forest Park, Ill.; Rev. N. K. Larson, White Hall, Wis.; Rev. S. P. Shaw, Sioux Falls, S. D.; Rev. P. E. Stockton, Grand Forks, N. D.

Since the organization of the Mounds Park Sanitarium Association there has been no organized effort to secure donations from friends of the institution for the support of its work. Consequently hardly any donations have been received for the furtherance of our work. It is very natural, as we look ahead to the development of our hospital program, that being a Baptist institution carrying the name of "Baptist" and controlled by Baptists, and, furthermore, being the only Baptist hospital organization of its kind northwest of Chicago, we should turn to Baptist constituency for financial support in the development of this larger work. We have always been reluctant to go out in any organized way to seek donations for our work. We have realized the large demands that have been made upon our people by many urgent denominational needs. We are not unmindful, however, of the fact that there are many people in our Baptist constituency who are vitally interested in the kind of service rendered by hospitals and who for one reason or another will not contribute to any other type of denominational service. It is unfortunate that money that could be secured from such sources is not now being used to put the great Baptist denomination on the map so far as hospital work is concerned. It should be borne in mind by this convention that all of the leading Protestant denominations, not to mention the Catholics, have adopted vigorous programs of hospitalization. We should also state in this connection that the business men of the Midway community are vitally interested in seeing a Baptist hospital established in their district. They are so interested that their leading commercial organization has already appointed a strong executive committee to sponsor a popular campaign among the people of the Midway district to help push this new Midway project. This should be of encouragement to us as Baptists as we take hold of this new opportunity for practical Christian service.

Free Service

It has always been the policy of the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association to render as much free hospital service to worthy individuals as it is possible to render. Since the erection of the Mounds Park Sanitarium sixteen years ago $40,000 of free hospital service has been granted. The cost of rendering this service has been met out of the current income of the hospital, no donations having been received for this purpose. Even last year when hospitals, like other business enterprises, suffered severely we donated free service amounting to approximately $5,000. We are convinced as a hospital organization that it is hardly fair that we ask those patients who pay their way to take care of other patients who are not in position to pay for the service rendered. Free hospital service is a responsibility which should be shared by our whole Baptist constituency and not by patients who are paying for themselves while at the hospital. We are convinced that we must soon establish a "free bed fund" out of the earnings of which worthy individuals can be given the services they need.

Expenses Are Higher

In this connection it should also be remembered that in the future it is going to cost more to operate hospitals than was the case when the Mounds Park Sanitarium was organized. During the past five years the American College of Surgeons has made great strides toward standardizing hospital service throughout the nation. The standardization requirements laid down by the college, among other things, demands the following: (1) A full-time salaried pathologist in charge of laboratory work. (2) A full-time paid statistician who is to keep elaborate, minute, scientific records of each case. (3) More instructors and additional supervision of the Nurses' Training School. In addition to this the state laws are requiring, as was not the case some years ago, limits to the number of hours nurses and help are to work. As is recognized by us all, the cost of supplies, medicine, food, etc., amounts to considerably more than it did some years ago. All of this has reduced the margin that we used to have for free service purposes. It is no wonder then that we turn to the friends of our work for their financial backing as we look ahead to the larger service of the future.

Every first-class hospital has a nurses' training school. Last spring eighteen graduates received their diplomas from the Nurses' Training School of the Mounds Park Sanitarium. This was the thirteenth class to graduate, there now being 137 graduates of our Baptist hospital in nursing service. At the present time there are sixty-seven student nurses in training in the three hospitals. In this school we are trying not only to give the highest grade scientific training for the nursing profession but we are trying along with it to maintain a very definite vital Christian environment. We do this through a definite program of organized devotional life and Bible study. We mention this because there may be some present who know of young women in Baptist churches of Minnesota who ought to be interested in a life calling such as this. We are always pleased to consider applications from young women of Baptist churches seeking to enter training for this work.

We are not unmindful, as a hospital organization, of the vital financial problems confronting our people as a national movement this year. We are not thinking so much about our own particular project as to exclude from our thoughts the great and vital needs of our missionary and evangelistic work throughout the world. Our only desire is that the service to be rendered by the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association shall fit into the greater world wide program of the Baptist denomination to which we are all committed.

A. F. HOLMER, Gen. Supt.,
Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association.

A Visit to the Far West

By SAMUEL G. NEIL

No Baptist can visit the Pacific Coast states without discovering marvellous illustrations and definite proof of the real worth and wisdom of home mission work, and Bible and religious education work. I have just returned from a trip of from nine to ten thousand miles, about 1500 of it by automobile. We visited the states of California, Oregon, and Washington.

I had the opportunity to see the real needs of Los Angeles, so far as Baptist work is concerned. Nearly two days of driving in an automobile took us into many parts of the city. New sections are developing; new towns and communities are rapidly springing up and are in need of the privileges of the gospel. In addition to this the Mexican, Japanese, Chinese, the lumbermen and fruit pickers and other classes of exceptional populations must be cared for, congregations organized, and meeting houses erected. Our greatest exceptional population is Mexican, due to the proximity of Mexico and to the unusual demand for manual laborers.

The state convention, The City Mission Society, The Home Mission Society, and Publication Society, are endeavoring to meet the need for churches, theological seminaries, Bibles, clinics, community houses, vacation camps for boys and girls, night schools, daily vacation Bible schools, and so on.

On Sunday, Sept. 24, in company with Rev. J. B. Fox, of the City Mission Society, and Rev. E. R. Brown, superintendent of our Spanish work for the Home Mission Society, and the Rev.

George L. White, joint secretary of our Home and Publication Societies, we visited nine mission points covering ninety-two miles by automobile in doing so. We visited the Italian Church, the Bochetti International Mission, the Russian Church, the Community Church and Spanish Theological Seminary, the Garrett Street Mexican Mission, the First Mexican Church, Second Colored Church, the Maravilla Mexican Mission and the First Mexican Church at San Pedro.

Without exception we found the work to be in first-class condition. It was an illustration of how to plant and prosecute home mission work in the way of numerical and spiritual results. The return on the original investment, even when reduced to a financial basis, reads like a story from the "gold coast" in the days of the "forty-niners."

Fortunate in Leaders

Southern California Baptists have been fortunate in their state convention leadership. Dr. W. F. Harper, gifted in pulpit-power and wise administration, has been greatly blessed in his work. Rev. J. B. Fox, secretary of the City Mission Society, with his intimate knowledge of men and conditions, has been enabled to lay well the foundation of present and future Baptist work in and around Los Angeles.

On our way from Los Angeles to San Francisco, we paid a visit to Rev. and Mrs. E. R. Hermiston of Chapel Car "Grace" now located at San Joaquin. A crowd of people that taxed the seating capacity of the Chapel Car to its utmost, greeted us at its evening service.

Some parts of the West are yet virgin home mission soil, and we must sow the good seed that we may rear Christian people and Christian institutions. Patriotism, no less than religion, calls upon us to safeguard the present and future of the West by keeping at the work and strengthening the weak places in our common Christian civilization.

San Joaquin

San Joaquin is a new town situated in the very heart of a great reclamation project. The whole countryside is being populated by farmers and fruit-growers from various sections of the East, Middle West, and Southwest. A church has already been organized. A fine big corner lot in the heart of the town has been secured and Mr. and Mrs. Hermiston expect to build a meeting house that will be almost the exact duplicate of the splendid church building which they recently erected in Chowchilla, Cal.

The long continuity of the sane, wise, and consecrated leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Hermiston has meant much for our Baptist work in the Pacific Coast states.

San Francisco

On a beautiful Sabbath morning, I had the honor to preach at the First Church. The audience was large, the music excellent, and the communion service impressive. The work of First Church under the right kind of pastoral leadership has a great future. It was a great joy to greet the veteran pastor, Dr. T. Edwin Brown, former pastor of the Memorial Church in Philadelphia.

Dr. C. W. Brinstad, the indefatigable state convention secretary, is placing the indelible imprint of his strong personality upon all the work of northern California Baptists. Northern California Baptists are very fortunate in their leadership.

Portland, Oregon

While at Portland, Oregon, I preached in the White Temple. I found an excellent building and a crowded congregation. The fascinating pulpit ability, leadership, and spiritual vision of Dr. Thomas J. Villers has strengthened the work along all lines. I had the opportunity of addressing the Ministers' Conference on "The Spiritual Laws of Evangelism," and later addressed between forty and fifty pastors and laymen as they sat together around the luncheon table.

Baptist work in Oregon shows marked advance. Last year over $95,000 was raised for mission work, two-thirds of which was spent for work outside of Oregon. A new era of church building is on. Last year new churches were erected at Fairview, Cherry Grove, Oregon City. New churches will soon be erected at Medford, Riddle, Astoria, Bend, Hillsboro, Broadbent, McMinnville, Gresham, and Eugene. In the city of Portland, new churches will shortly be erected at Sellwood, Arleta, Grace, Montavilla, and the Mount Olivet Negro Baptist Church. For the first time in its history, Linfield (McMinnville College) is out of debt. It has received during the year from Mrs. F. E. R. Linfield of Spokane, Washington, gifts in property estimated at more than $250,000. President L. W. Riley is making his influence felt throughout the Northwest. Dr. O. C. Wright is the state secretary. His poise, tact, brotherliness, and his persistence toward an objective has enabled him to achieve great things. He is greatly honored for his constructive work. At the recent meeting of the state convention a report to adopt a quota of $10,000 to be raised this year as Oregon's part of the $100,000,000 collection of the Northern Baptist Convention, was approved.

Puget Sound Association

South Tacoma was the meeting place of the Puget Sound Association. It was a well attended and well conducted meeting. The program had been prepared with care and all the arrangements were carried out on time. The Bible and field secretary of the Publication Society made two addresses to splendid audiences. The pastors and churches in the West Washington Convention have been quick to catch the vision of the new needs as set forth by the state convention secretary, Dr. J. F. Watson, and have risen to them with courage and confidence. Dr. Watson brings to the work his strong personality and a widened vision of large possibilities for the kingdom.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

CONNECTICUT

REV. EDGAR R. HYDE, FOR NEARLY thirteen years pastor of First Church, Middletown, the seat of Wesleyan University, has received and accepted the call to the First Church, Racine, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Hyde made a large place for themselves in Connecticut and they will make a strong addition to the Baptist forces of Wisconsin. Mr. Hyde expects to enter upon the duties of his new field, Dec. 1.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF NEW HAVEN, REV. A. R. FOSHAY, pastor, has met with a great loss in the death of Mrs. D. C. Macintosh, the wife of Prof. D. C. Macintosh of Yale Divinity School. Dr. Macintosh has the sympathy of every one in his time of his bereavement.

AT FIRST CHURCH, WATERBURY, REV. D. J. GAINES is laying great emphasis upon the "Church Family Night." The church meets for lunch on Friday evening at 6:45; the devotional message is brought by himself or some visiting brother. Then follows the social hour, when by a well-regulated program, the people have an opportunity to meet each other and become acquainted.

REV. F. W. THOLEN, PASTOR OF THE Taftford Church, is being blessed in his work. Nov. 5 he baptized five young people. Others are expected to come into the fellowship of the church through baptism.

FIRST CHURCH, HARTFORD, DR. H. J. WHITE, pastor, featured an autumnal social recently, with a table decorated for every month in the year. The pastor and Mrs.

George M. Armor appeared at the August table, dressed in summer apparel, singing, "In the Good Old Summertime." Mr. Leroy Bennett and Mrs. Dwight Chapman caused a laugh, when they approached the April table in raincoats and umbrellas. J. C. Crossley sang, "April Showers." The church choir sang Christmas carols at the December table. More than 300 people were present.

MAINE

BREWER: The work of this church is opening well this fall, for Pastor Welch and his people are indefatigable workers. Not only did they go over the top in New World subscriptions, but they keep the subscriptions paid up. Every department of the church is efficient. A school of missions has just been started, announcing as its purpose "To enroll a large number of our church and constituency for an intensive study of missions." Seven teachers are using the study books provided for the different classes, and over 100 are enrolled. The present session extends from Nov. 5-Dec. 17.

SWAN'S ISLAND, WHICH is a few miles from Mt. Desert, has a federated church, with Rev. H. H. Hathaway as pastor. To his help, three weeks ago, came Rev. Harry Taylor and his daughter Ruth, as state evangelists. The meetings held were of great interest and increasing power. On the very last night twenty persons came forward and prayed for themselves in manifest desire and purpose to enter the Christian life. On Nov. 5, nine men and six women were baptised in the ocean by pastor Hathaway, "in the presence of hundreds of people, all of whom were strangely moved by the spectacle of their neighbors going down into the sea on a November day." Membership of the church has been more than doubled. On Sunday, Nov. 12, the evangelists began services in Warren, Maine.

REV. CHARLES COFFIN TILLEY, pastor of the First Church, Jefferson, and one of the ablest and most honored of the Maine ministers, died in the New England Baptist Hospital, Boston, on Nov. 5.

A TRUE "MOTHER IN ISRAEL," passes with the death of the widow of Rev. N. D. Curtis, and the mother of Missionary Arthur Curtis, of the Telugu Mission, Mrs. Professor Hugh R. Hatch, and Miss Gertrude A. Curtis of the Fairfield schools. A life of rare sanctity and sweetness, fruitful in many and distant fields of the Lord's work, and continued to past 90 years of age, has come to its "desired end."

BY AN EXPLOSION IN AN adjoining garage, the meeting house of the Burnham church was set on fire and totally destroyed, Nov. 7. This was the only church building in the village.

NEW JERSEY

Woman's Mission Society

The third annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of New Jersey met in the Clinton Avenue Church, Trenton, Oct. 23. Mrs. David A. MacMurray, the president, welcomed the delegates. Mrs. W. H. Mount reported for the Continuation Fund. $15,000, from ninety-one churches was secured last year. The women of New Jersey are asked for $100,000 this year. Fifty-two churches from seven associations reported White Cross work done the past year, amounting in value to $4410.90. Mrs. Higgins, chairman of the Nominating Committee, made the following report: President, Mrs. David T. MacMurray; 1st vice-pres., Mrs. John W. Lyell; 2d vice-pres., Mrs. Archer B. Bass; rec. sec'y., Mrs. Joseph Riker; cor. sec'y., Miss Katherine M. King; treas., Mrs. M. V. Freas; members at large, Mrs. R. H. Rivenburg, Mrs. Willard H. Smith, Mrs. W. H. Bawden.

It was voted to receive the report. There being no other nominations it was voted to instruct the secretary to cast a single ballot.

The C. W. C. showed a 25 per cent increase in new organizations and members. The C. W. C. raised more than three times the quota for the Continuation Fund. The W. W. G. showed sixteen new chapters, making a total membership of 2100 in 119 chapters in ninety-five churches.

The report of the enrolment committee showed that 205 delegates were present. As an expression of love and appreciation a rising vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. W. H. Smith, who resigned as state director to become home vice-president of the Atlantic District. Seven of our missionaries told briefly of the encouraging features of their work. Dr. Campbell, of the Judson Health Center, said she and her assistants were doing the only health work on the lower west side of New York City in the midst of a population of 35,000. Dr. Catherine L. Mabie, of Africa, declared that thousands were pouring into our churches in the Congo country.

At the banquet held in the Clinton Avenue Church, at 6 p. m., about 200 women were seated.

NEW YORK

Baptist Older Boy's Conference

A rare opportunity presents itself to the Baptist churches of the Empire State to send from one to six of their choice young men between the ages of 16 and 24 to the mid-winter training conference at Cook Academy, Montour Falls, under the direction of the State Convention. The conference will begin on the evening of Dec. 26 and continue for five days. Boys from other states will be welcome.

The courses of instruction will include Bible study, the four-fold life, the organized young men's class, class activities and recreational leadership. These courses are the same as those given at the International Older Boys' Camp Conference at Lake Geneva, Wis., and Lake Winnetka, N. H. The best instructors of the state have been secured to teach these courses.

There will be no registration fee; the board and room will cost $1.50 per day or $7.50 for the entire conference.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING of the Baptist Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens and the Women's Auxiliary will be held at the Strong Place Baptist Church and Christian Center, 54 Strong Place, Brooklyn, on Thursday evening, Nov. 23. This will be observed as the official opening of the Strong Place Christian Center.

THE ANNUAL BAPTIST SOCIAL UNION-City Mission dinner will be held at the Hotel Astor, Broadway and 44th Street on Thursday evening, Dec. 7—reception 5:30 p.m., dinner 6:30 p.m., adjourning at 10:15 p.m. The theme of the evening will be "Training in Leadership." George Barton Cutten, president of Colgate University will be the guest and speaker. There will also be a special presentation of the theme by Charles Hatch Sears, executive secretary of the New York City Baptist Mission Society. This is the annual joint meeting of the New York City Baptist Mission Society and the Baptist Social Union. Young people are specially invited. Guest tickets are $1.75 each. Table seating ten persons may be reserved through Stanley B. Hazzard, Room 1038, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH anniversary of the formation of the First Church of Wolfboro was celebrated Oct. 15-22. The exercises began with a historical sermon by the pastor dealing with the beginning of the Free Baptist denomination. The name Free Baptist had not been adopted when Benjamin Randall formed the Wolfboro Church. Three brief papers described the young people's work of the church. Rev. J. K. Miller, missionary pastor of the state convention, gave an illustrated lecture, "The Romance of Religion in Rural New Hampshire." The views of New Hampshire scenery, churches and Baptist leaders added greatly to its interest. Thursday, Oct. 19, was Anniversary Day, and the members of the church and invited guests sat down to an excellent supper, after which letters from the three surviving ex-pastors were read, also a greeting from Mrs. Mary Newton Keith, widow of Rev. Allen C. Keith, whose long and successful pastorate is still a fragrant memory. A fraternal greeting from the Chocorua Church, prepared by Dr. O. P. Eaches, was helpful. A Roll Call of the church followed. On Sunday morning, Oct. 22, Rev. F. M. Buker delivered the anniversary sermon. Mr. Buker took the place of convention secretary Rev. D. S. Jenks who was away on a vacation recuperating from an illness. It was inspirational and was enjoyed by a large congregation. The history of the church by the clerk, Miss Nettie M. Cate and the story of the Sunday school by Supt. Perley E. Young deserve mention. A union service was participated in by the Congregationalist, Christian, and Advent churches. Rev. Frank D. Long of the Advent church spoke briefly and was followed by Dr. Fred P. Haggard, now pastor of the Wolfboro Congregational Church. Rev. F. M. Buker then gave a helpful address on Christian Stewardship.

OHIO

THE FIRST CHURCH of NILES recently closed a series of special meetings in which the pastor, Rev. R. J. Murphy, was assisted by Evangelist W. H. Houghton of Norristown, Pa. Already twenty-seven persons have been baptised. This is the second campaign in the Niles Church in which Mr. Houghton has assisted.

MICHIGAN

EVANGELIST H. P. HOSKINS is engaged in special meetings with the Lake Odessa Church and will go to the Birkett Memorial, Detroit, for his next meeting.

THE CHURCH at the "Soo" has shown unusual activity this fall. During September a vigorous rally campaign was carried on and also a financial canvass made. The whole budget was practically subscribed in one evening. The young people are interested and have greatly enjoyed the hearty cooperation of the older members in their various social gatherings.

NEBRASKA

REV. CLAUDE NEAL is closing the most successful of the three years spent with the church at Polk. There is a steady growth in all departments. The church is thoroughly organized for the study of stewardship throughout the month of November.

MINNESOTA

AT THE REQUEST OF BRETHREN at ISANTI, a council of twenty-two delegates representing ten churches met at the Swedish Free Mission Church Nov. 3, to consider the matter of an organization of a Baptist church. Dr. G. A. Hagstrom was moderator and Rev. C. E. Bergfalk, secretary of the council. The action was unanimous in favor of the organization of the church and Rev. F. L. Russell, pastor of the Free Mission Church was given a certificate of ordination and will become the pastor of the new church.

ILLINOIS

REV. J. BRAINERD BROWN has closed his work with the Petersburg Church and is now on his new field at Barry.

THE JUDSON CHURCH, OAK PARK, Rev. J. C. Dent, pastor, has just celebrated its first anniversary. A pamphlet setting forth the aims and history of the church together with a list of the members and officers was issued in celebration of the event.

COME TO THE MEETING IN THE FOURTH Presbyterian Church, Chicago, 2:30 p. m., Nov. 19, that you may become intelligent yourself and may be able to interest those of your own church and community in this greatest adventure ever undertaken by women for women.

THE FIRST YEAR OF THE PASTORATE of Rev. G. W. Claxon at the Streeter Church closed Nov. 1. The community has suffered severe industrial depression. In the face of this local condition old debts have been paid and extensive improvements made. Twenty-three persons have been added to the membership. A definite program of work has been outlined for the coming year.

REPORTS AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Sterling Church indicated wholesome progress. The church is carrying out the suggestions of the denomination in its program of activity. A stereopticon has been purchased so that it can avail its selves of the informing missionary lectures and other material which it has not been able to use heretofore. The church slogan is "A place where the Bible is taught," and pastor A. W. Fleischman is making the motto true to fact.

THE FIRST CHURCH, FREEPORT, has projected a pretentious musical program. Five distinct musical organizations have been built up under the direction of the music committee of which Chas. M. Crowell is chairman. There is a senior choir of forty voices, a male choir and also a young women's and a Sunday-school choir. The pastor says, "We believe to maintain a high standard of gospel music we must train our own children and young people in hymn and anthem music."

EVERY PEW IN THE AUDITORIUM of the University Church at the University of Illinois was filled on Sunday, Oct. 29, at which time took place the dedication of the new pipe-organ for which the students had so long looked and worked. The organ is of the Moller make with ten sets of pipes, full electric action, and detachable console. The cost is $3,700 of which $2,700 was paid in cash and the remaining $1,000 to be carried in deferred payments. The student choir, under the leadership of J. L. Williamson, of Jacksonville and with L. L. Winn, of Richmond, Ill., at the organ, rendered special music. The pastor spoke upon the significance of the organ in the work of the church. The work of the year is starting off well, there being 800 students in the university, 400 of whom are Baptists.

ON SUNDAY, NOV. 5, AT THE morning service, the Austin First Church with much enthusiasm, extended a unanimous call to Rev. John H. Carstens, to become its pastor. He is to have charge of the Sunday, and some other, services until Jan. 1, at which time he will assume the full work of the pastorate. It is a great joy to the church to have secured Mr. Carstens as pastor, after having been for nine months without a leader. Owing to Dr. Thomas' splendid work as pastor

WISCONSIN

FIRST CHURCH OF LA CROSSE, has passed through six of the best months of its history. In his report to the advisory board of the church the chairman of the trustees said that he had known the church over twenty years; and that in every way the church was doing better than at any other time—each month a balance in the treasury of all societies; new members being added to the church; Sunday school growing; religious education being emphasized so that, without the privilege of week-day schools of religion, the children are receiving now 125 hours of religious instruction; the missionary interests of the church developing. The church is now, as a whole, children and adults, studying missions in books, and in the stereopticon lectures each week. The people sent a large bundle for "Rush a Ship to Russia." They are now preparing to send to Raymond Chapel, Chicago. An intensive evangelistic program is going forward all the time under the supervision of the pastor, W. S. Stewart, and the deacons. Tithing and stewardship are being pushed.

KANSAS

REV. L. D. LAMKIN LED IN A TWO weeks' revival meeting with the South Lawrence Church, Wichita, ending Oct. 29. A number were received into the fellowship of the church. The meetings were decided uplift to the church and community. Dr. Lamkin replied to some remarks made by a local preacher with reference to the Ku Klux Klan which drew a throng of people. Dr. Lamkin is laboring with a sad heart occasioned by the death recently of his wife at Dallas, Tex. Mrs. Lamkin had been ill for several years and her home-going was not unexpected.

OREGON

EVANGELISTIC FIRES ARE BEGINNING to burn in several of our churches. State evangelist Milo G. Bentley recently conducted a meeting at Lacombe. Rev. S. L. Oyce, pastor, which resulted in seventeen baptisms, and five others by letter and experience. Evangelist Bentley is now assisting Pastor C. M. Cline at Grants Pass, and will conduct several meetings at Outcations in the vicinity of Grants Pass. Rev. S. J. Reid, superintendent of evangelism is in a splendid meeting at The Dalles. Rev. J. L. Bogue, pastor. A number have already been received for membership and the meetings are continuing with increased interest.

A COMMITTEE APPOINTED by the Ministers' Conference of Portland, consisting of Rev. W. L. Riley, pastor of the Highland Church, Rev. E. O. Leonard, and secretary O. C. Wright is arranging for a aggressive plan of evangelism in Portland and vicinity. These meetings will be in large part conducted by the local pastors, including the assistance of Drs. Hanson and Villers and Reid, who have already consented to conduct the closing week of meetings which the other pastors by interchange of assistance may have already promoted over a period of one or two weeks. The Highland Church is completing this week the first meeting of this series, Rev. J. F. Huckleberry, pastor of Grace Church, assisting Pastor Riley, and Dr. W. B. Hinson preaching the closing third week. Pastor Riley will immediately begin a meeting in the Grace Church assisting Pastor Huckleberry for two weeks, the third week of the meetings to be conducted by Dr. Villers of the White Temple. Through this plan of interchange of help the Portland churches anticipate a winter of excellent work in evangelism. The Arleta Church, Rev. Owen T. Day, pastor, has had the assistance of Rev. August Hunderup in a three weeks' enlistment meeting which

FOR THE UNPRIVILEGED PEOPLES OF AMERICA

In the United States, 50,000 Indians have not been visited by missionaries of Jesus Christ. Therefore, we must continue the work of building up Bacone College. Young men and women, representing 23 Indian tribes, depend on this mission school in Oklahoma for their Christian training and education.

The negroes in the southern states must be evangelized. The work of The American Baptist Home Mission Society more than doubled when it undertook this task with the establishment of schools for their general education and the training of Christian leadership. New teachers must be trained to relieve white missionaries, burdened with teaching nearly every hour of the day.

Foreign speaking students are now being trained at the International Baptist Seminary in East Orange, New Jersey, for evangelism among their own racial groups in America and Europe. The Spanish American department of this seminary is meeting a long felt need on the Pacific coast. Urgent calls for a better trained ministry are being answered by the Society in Cuba, Porto Rico, Jamaica and Haiti.

The Education Department of The American Baptist Home Mission Society is a safe administrator of funds for those who desire to advance Christian Education in the Mission Fields of North America.

has resulted in very much good to the church and community.

THE ARLETA CHURCH IS COMPLETING excavations for the first unit of its new building to cost in the neighborhood of $75,000. The first unit will cost approximately $45,000. This is one of the most vigorous of the suburban churches, and with their new equipment will doubtless make one of the most rapid growths of any church in the West.

THE COMMUNITY CHURCH OF ALOHA is the youngest church in the state, Rev. J. Maguire, pastor. Recently a canvass of the community was made under the leadership of Rev. G. L. Hall, resulting in subscription of an amount above $3500 toward a building to cost approximately $5000. On a recent Monday ten of the Portland pastors motored to this suburban community, donned their overalls, and demonstrated to the satisfaction of the onlookers that they could build church houses as well as preach the gospel. The ladies of the Aloha Church served a sumptuous chicken dinner, and the building was so far advanced that an impromptu table was placed upon the floor of the auditorium and the first chicken dinner in the new building was enjoyed by the participants.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE NEW CHINESE CHRISTIAN CENTER at Locke, was dedicated Oct. 8. The dedication services covered three days, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, with speakers from Sacramento, Rio Vista and San Francisco present. The building is a frame structure consisting of an auditorium, class-rooms and apartments upstairs for the workers. The land was donated by Mr. Locke, and the $10,000 which the plant is to cost was given by the state convention and the two home mission societies. Mr. and Mrs. Ong Yip and Miss Mary Maxwell, the workers who have labored faithfully for several years on this field, will appreciate this equipment more than anyone else, perhaps.

THE CHURCH AT FORT BRAGG has a fine men's organization under the name of the Fellowship Club. They are now organizing the Fellowship Bible Class and will review an up-to-date missionary book each quarter.

REV. J. B. FROST RECENTLY accepted a call to the Red Bluff church.

REV. JAMES S. WEST RESIGNED HIS church in Detroit, Mich., to accept the call of the First Church of San Francisco, where he began his work Nov. 5. Mr. West is not a stranger to the Coast, having formerly been pastor at Tacoma, Wash., and also at Bakersfield, Cal. The San Francisco First Church has been without a pastor for nearly six years but has enjoyed the services of most excellent supplies. Dr. Arthur S. Phelps has been the stated preacher for the last two years. The church is united and is looking forward with great interest to the settlement of the new pastor. This makes the seventh new pastor to settle in the Baptist churches in the Bay Cities since Sept. 1, all pulpits being filled with permanent pastors with the exception of Alameda.

THE MANTECA CHURCH HAS CALLED REV. A. P. BROWN of Alameda and Mr. Brown began his work there Nov. 1.

REV. SANDFORD FLEMING, recently from Australia, is the new pastor at Twenty-first Avenue Church, San Francisco. A reception was given in his honor on Oct. 13.

FRESNO FIRST CHURCH is rejoicing over the arrival of its new pastor, Dr. Thomas Frizelle, who was formerly with the Publication Society in Philadelphia, having been director of summer assemblies.

the pastor in all phases of his ministry. Pastors Catlin of Council Bluffs, Smith of Red Oak, Tandy of Mason City, McDonald of Waterloo and Parker of Cedar Rapids filled the day with good things. And while the pastors were gathered together in their meeting, the women, under the inspiring direction of Mrs. Frank Johnson, had a most helpful session. The convention itself had in it little of the spectacular, no fights, no big problems, no big movement, no great crisis and no new program. However, reports indicate a healthy condition in most of the churches. The baptisms for the year will about equal the baptisms of last year and the payments on pledges to the New World Movement are little short of last year, but statistics do not always tell the tale as it should be told.

There is a finer spirit of work among the Iowa Baptists. There is not so much the mood of do or die, but the determination to do the best in all that comes. Our churches are not making desperate efforts to save what appears to be a desperate situation, but are trying to do sane and constructive work for the Master. They are not permitting the fads and isms and side issues that in many states are causing friction to interfere with their fellowship, but are trying, as conscientious Baptist people, to serve the Lord.

Evangelism, education, stewardship were the notes sounded most solemnly and sincerely under the general topic of "Personal Responsibility." Dr. Stilwell brought his fine message on evangelism in a masterly fashion. Dr. Million read before the Baptists of Iowa their educational heritage and educational opportunity and Baptist responsibility for it reinforcing the opinion of many people that he is the man sent of God for such a time as this. Victor N. Witter brought us the new plans and new inspiration in the educational work of the individual church.

The key-note of personal responsibility was sounded in an address by W. B. Hutchinson, of Burlington, on that subject. This address was built around the thought that opportunity plus ability makes responsibility. Out of this, he developed the thought that God has given us ability and great opportunity and therefore, great responsibility. The great message that closed the service and continued the thought, was given by Robert T. Craig, of Des Moines, Sunday night when he called the Baptists of Iowa to renewed consecration for their holy task. This message was responded to by many, who reconsecrated their lives, and by others who gave their lives to definite Christian service. Between these two great messages, there came many other addresses of high order. Keen disappointment was felt that it would not be the privilege of this convention to hear Dr. David J. Evans, of Kansas City, Mo., but a new pleasure and great profit was given on Thursday evening in hearing, for the first time, Dr. Perry J. Stackhouse, of Chicago, who brought a message of good cheer to churchmen in which he showed the never-ending need of a Christian church. In the same evening, the convention was called nearer to its task by a thoughtful address on the "Responsibility of Iowa Baptists to the state program" by A. S. Cross, of Osage. Dr. Lerrig brought good messages through Saturday and Sunday. The annual sermon by A. C. Droz, of Pella, was a splendid challenge to heed the calls that God send to his people now. The B. Y. P. U. session Sunday afternoon was a great consecration meeting in which its key-note was set at the opening exercises led by Miss Fern Ervin, of Des Moines, a student at the university. And, in passing, it might be said that the University students brought into this meeting, wonderful inspiration, not only to the young, but to the old who saw, in concrete form, what the college is doing for the youth of our land. As usual Mr. Carmen and Mr. Litter were in the lead with good things and Dr. Lerrigo's address was a persuasive invitation to American youth to be consecrated living.

The proceedings of this convention throughout were harmonious. President Williams presided with easy grace and kept his program moving all the time. The reports of committees were singularly unanimous and were of such nature that they usually commanded the unanimous vote of the convention. It was not quite clear to the Baptists what should be done in the Near East, but they went on record as being in favor of America doing what could be done for the relief of suffering and for the protection of these Christian people.

It has been the usual custom of Iowa Baptists, to use good judgment and fine taste in the selection of their president. On J. S. Tuttle of Waterloo, Walnut Street Church, was the unanimous choice. The election of J. S. Tuttle to the presidency of the Iowa Baptist Convention marks the emergence into larger denominational affairs of one of the very finest types of laymen that any state can produce. A scholar, a gentleman, a Christian who works at his job in his own church. For many years the teacher of one of the largest Bible classes for men in the nation, he is eminently fitted for his position. Many of his friends have hoped to see him do more in denominational affairs, but up to this time, he has felt that he had time and strength only for what he could do at home. He will be a wise leader for Iowa Baptists. A new organization was formed called the Baptist Layman's Council which is headed by Mr. J. M. Mercer, of Burlington, and vice-presidents of every association. The purpose of this council will be to better coordinate the efforts of Iowa Baptists. The usual banquets were held and good fellowship prevailed. The ever prosperous church at Muscatine will be the host to the convention next year.

arrested if he made the least attempt to dispose of them. So he grumbled and growled, until a certain December evening when there was a Christmas entertainment in our mission. How I wish you could have been there beside Mr. Pee to watch the cry of Bethlehem enacted by little Chinese shepherds squatting on a green sateen hillside with little Chinese angels announcing the birth of the Savior to them, while a very Chinese Mary sat demurely holding a small Chinese baby in her arms.

As for Mr. Pee, he sat there with eyes only for Pee Ming and Pee Wong, two little Chinese angels whose special duty it was to enter saying: "Behold, we bring you glad tidings of good things which shall come to all people, for unto you is born this day a Savior who is Christ the Lord." Nothing had ever been said which went directly to Mr. Pee's poor, tired, wicked heart: "I guess my girls make fine angels," he whispered proudly to Mrs. Pee.

But little he dreamed that this startling new pride in them would turn his little daughters into real guardian angels, keeping him away from opium dens forever. It almost seems as if this little poem was written about him:

"God's angels, dear, have six great wings
Of silver and of gold,
Two round their heads and two round their hearts
And two round their feet they fold.
But the angel of a man I know
Has just two hands, so small—
Yet they're more strong than six gold wings
To save him from a fall."

Are Baptists Playing the Game?

Twenty-seven millions of children and young people in our United States are not enrolled in any Sunday school. They are all under twenty-five years of age and they do not belong to Catholic families.

Question: What are the Baptists doing to change these terrible conditions which menace the nation and the church?

Answer: "The Bigger and Better Baptist Sunday School Advance," originated by the Baptist Publication Society, and now being carried on by more than a thousand Baptist schools.

Question: Is it practical? Is it working?

Answer: Let these Baptist pastors reply:

"Our school is enrolled in the Bigger and Better Baptist Sunday School Advance. Interest and attendance are increasing. We have an objective. It is inspiring. It enlists workers."—Rev. J. O. Staples.

"It is increasing our enrolment, attendance, enthusiasm, efficiency, and enlarging our field."—Rev. J. T. Parker.

"As a result of this movement, a better organization of our school has come to pass."—Rev. William J. Coulston.

"Our people are enthusiastic about it. It is just what many Sunday schools lack, a working plan."—Dr. H. R. Best.

"We enrolled early in the 'Sunday School Advance.' The best thing about it is that it works and gets results and the results are of the sort that endure. Our school is taking on new life and increased enthusiasm; the good influence of the movement is being felt in all departments of the church. Because of its constructive nature it is infinitely better for any Sunday school than a contest."—Dr. R. E. Williamson.

These five men are outstanding pastors in Iowa. They speak from experience.

All schools in Northern Baptist Convention territory ought to enroll at their state headquarters as speedily as possible.

The provisional totals of each province, state, and district of India, according to the census taken March 18, 1921, which were published April 5, ensuing, were within a net difference for the whole of India of 132,654 persons, in the final figures now published, an excess in the former of only .04 per cent. This summary shows a total population of 318,942,480, of whom 163,995,554 are males and 154,946,926 are females. The actual increase is 3,786,084, or only 1.2 per cent, due chiefly, as we suppose, to the inroads of disease and death and the effects of the European war. The population by religions is classified as follows: Hindus, 216,734,586; Moslems, 68,735,233; Buddhists, 11,571,268; Christian, 4,754,079, of whom 2,457,065 are males and 2,297,014 are females; Jains, 1,178,596; Zoroastrians, 101,778; Jews, 21,778; Animists, 9,774,611; minor religions and those not returned, 17,989.—The Indian Witness.

The Book of Noble Dogs, by Estelle Ross. Illustrated. New York: The Century Co. $2.00.

Stories of celebrated dogs of history, literature and mythology—those who have hobnobbed with kings and been the friends of famous men. A book which every dog lover will take pleasure in reading.

A PRACTICAL BOOK

The Community Church

By Albert C. Zumbrunnen

Church leaders everywhere who are interested in the increasing importance of the community church in religious work will find much information and many valuable suggestions in this new volume. It describes fully the rise, types, and activities of community churches, and suggests their relation to the problem of securing denominational unity. It is illustrated with photographs and plans of existing and projected churches of this type.

"The first fact-book in the field, giving one just the information needed about the 'how' of community churches."—HENRY F. COPE, General Secretary, The Religious Education Association.

The House of the Lord's Prayer, by Amos R. Wells. Philadelphia: Westminster Press.

What Amos Wells writes is always good, because he has an ever-fresh viewpoint. In this 70-page booklet he treats the Lord's prayer as one of the "many mansions," and thereby makes the prayer yet more precious.

India Inklings, The Story of a Blot, by Margaret T. Applegarth. New York: Doran Co. $1.50 net.

From an upset bottle of India ink came "India Inklings" in Miss Applegarth's own breezy, sympathetic style. They are stories for little folks of life and mission work in India. Those acquainted with Miss Applegarth from the reading of our Chimney Corner need no further recommendation of the volume.

The Meaning of the Cross, by Edward Grubb, M. A. New York: Geo. H. Doran Company. $1.50.

In a book of 157 pages Mr. Grubb traces the doctrine of the Atonement in the Old Testament, in the New Testament and in the literature of the early, the medieval and the modern times, and he arrives in his last chapter at his own position which, he says, tends "toward a true doctrine." That position is that in Christ and his Cross God and man meet in a perfect unity; God gives himself to man and man gives himself to God. In his views of the Bible the author is a liberal. He says of it, "being man's record, it is full of imperfection." One may find some difficulty in ascertaining how he reaches his ultimate conclusion from his premises and processes of reasoning.

The Quest of Industrial Peace, by W. M. Clow. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.75.

Professor Clow, who occupies the chair of pastoral theology and Christian ethics at the United Free Church College, Glasgow, and first became known to American readers through his devotional studies in the life and inner experience of Jesus, has grappled with "the elements of the ever-recurrent industrial strife" in an effort to find a means of ending that strife. The work is constructive and cumulative in method, and includes a historical survey of the foremost indictments of capitalism and an appraisal of each. Professor Clow concludes that communism, the cooperative movement, Marxian socialism, and nationalization, are all futile devices for securing industrial peace. He appeals to the teaching of Jesus and Paul for a justification of private ownership and also to prove the moral responsibility involved in the possession of wealth. Professor Clow proposes as his solution "an industrial covenant" inspired by the ethics of Christ, and based on certain postulates: The covenant is limited to wage-earning industry and excludes the political and religious relations of the parties involved; the method of capitalism is accepted as being proved the only efficient and economically sound method; a relationship of cooperation must be adopted; reward must be proportionate to function fulfilled.

Professor Clow has written with candor and fairness on a difficult theme. He is perhaps a bit too optimistic, and fails to appreciate sufficiently the persistent factor of man's selfishness. His proposed industrial covenant, if adopted and observed, would solve the industrial problem; but its prerequisite is an attitude of disinterestedness by all parties concerned, which is—well, let us say, "a consummation devoutly to be hoped for."

"It Is to Laugh"

Teacher: "What distinguished foreigner helped the Americans during their fight for independence?"

Small boy who attends Sunday school: "God."

Floorwalker: "Look here, sir, that young lady who's just left the shop complained that you didn't show her common civility."

New Assistant: "But I showed her everything in my department, sir."

The continental traveler deposited a enormous bag beside the table in the restaurant car. The conductor promptly rebuked him. "Don't you know you can bring your luggage in here. You'll have to put that bag in the van."

"Luggage," sneered the traveler. "This isn't luggage. That's my purse. I'm going to Austria."

When an Irish barrister was pleading one day a donkey brayed loudly outside the building.

The judge said: "One at a time, if you please."

After counsel had resumed his seat at the judge was summing up, the same interruption occurred: "I beg your lordship's pardon. I am anxious not to let a word of what you say, but there is such an echo in the court."

WILLIAM LESTER

THE VALUE OF CHORAL SINGING

I sometimes wonder just what would happen if the society factions who finance at temporary toy we style "grand opera" would take the same interest in choral singing as exemplified in the work of such organization as the Chicago Apollo Club. We hear so much rant about the great art demonstrated in the opera format, half-baked amateurs visibly enthused by the divine intellects, voices and temperaments of the divas and the prominent tenors—(little is said of the temperaments played, however, and the slipshod quality in which the whole business is run!)—it is enough of such heresy; we must believe what the carefully arranged newspapers and professional sheets tell us of the great acting ability of this one, the comparative vocal virtuosity of that one, and so on, ad infinitum—unless the press department of the opera star falls down on his job, or unless the "great artist" is to do the requisite amount of advertising.

Some Artists

In the course of my own professional career I have played for many opera stars. Some are artists—such men as Clement, the great French tenor; Arthur Middleton, the great American bass; such brainy men as Eleonore di Cisneros, Helen Stanley, Mme. Nordica, Alice Nielson. But many of them have been inartistic pretenders, their only asset—the ability to make a tremendous noise accompanied by tons of inward agitation. The amount of sheer brain power exhibited by such concert-singers as Werrenrath, John McCormick, May Peterson, Florence Hinkle, Charles Hackett, could supply musician-ship and true artistry to equip an entire opera troupe. The finesse of ensemble played by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under such a conductor as Frederick Stock is something so far beyond what is demanded in the opera house that there is no ground for comparison.

Musical Status Not Elevated by Opera Houses

In all probability I shall be promptly assailed of ignorance and prejudice for my rash statements—however, I firmly believe that the musical status of this nation is not going to be elevated by our opera houses, I consider them a more or less negative influence! Rather must we foster the art of choral singing—the co-operative singing effort in which we all share our talents. The amount of money each season on the Chicago Opera Company, if applied to the fostering of all choruses under expert directors, well-laid plans for a series of joint performances in addition to the local concert—such a program, sincerely carried out, would do more to make this community "musical" than a century of fort-tongue opera, catering to a special important chiefly as a society parade. I mention Chicago because the conditions here are what they are in all other cities, towns and villages of the country. Communities can boast such an organization as the Apollo Club, working fully under such a giant leader as Nelson Wild. But the condition and problems to be faced by such an organization as this are true reflections of those to be met by all such, whether in a city or in the smallest town.

Opposed Values

I would like to stress a point which I consider fundamental. This is the opposed ethical value of the oratorio and of the opera metier. I am well aware that it is considered very "old-fashioned" and narrow even to suggest such a thing, that I am stamping myself as being of that puritanical era called "Victorian" when I dare to suggest that ideal and spiritual aims have anything to do with the art-value of a musical work. Waiving that aside, no one can deny that the greatest masterworks known to music have come from composers imbued with ethical principles closely akin to, if not always identical with, the fundamental beliefs of true religion. I am not claiming that these composers were always impelled by theological motives, but a careful study of the personal aims and beliefs of such men as Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Franck, Beethoven, Elgar—to enumerate but a few—will force us to realize that these masters were and are idealists, expressing in their several ways the essence of true religion. Can we say the same for opera? The librettos, with few exceptions, are records of lust and incest; immorality is the functioning motive of almost all of them. To my notion nothing would so quickly overcome the present craze for this form as hearing them done in an understandable language. The undeniable attraction of much of the music has now full sway because the greater part of the audiences do not know what all the pother is about—the alluring stage pictures coupled with the sensuous tunes have to suffice. Read the prevalent translations of "Rigoletto," of "Louise," "Il Trovatore," "Pagliacci," "Carmen," "The Ring"—they are of the literary value and moral urge of a cheap French novel. Can they in any way be compared to the texts of the "Matthew Passion," "Elijah," "The Messiah," "The Dream of Gerontius," "The Beatitudes," and so on?

Interpretations of Great Ideals

The great master-peaks of choral literature are musical interpretations of the greatest ideals of the human intellect and emotions, and as such merit the active support of the church element in our American life. Every year the opera company in this city loses hundreds of thousands of dollars—and has little difficulty in finding men and women to meet the deficit. The Apollo Club, one of the greatest ranking choral bodies of the world, is hard put each year to assure itself of another season's vitality. A few thousand dollars—one-tenth of the annual deficits of the opera company, would make the difference between assurance and this continuous uncertainty of survival. What does the opera do for the younger generation of American singers? Very little! Nothing to be compared with the encouragement and support offered by such organizations as the Apollo Club.

Some months ago "THE BAPTIST" felt called upon to publish a denunciation of Robert Keable's book "Simon Called Peter." That we were justified in our position is indicated by the sordid parts the book has come to play in the Hall murder case in New Jersey and in the fact that Judge Stone of Boston imposed a fine of $100 upon Mrs. Edith G. Law of Arlington who had been accused of circulating obscene literature. Mrs. Law conducts a circulating library and loaned this particular book to a large number of persons.

There are fifteen churches in and around Oneonta, N. Y. that have kept accurate records of the numbers of tithers and the amount of money contributed by tithers and non-tithers. These fifteen churches have 916 members who are tithers. Last year these tithers averaged $59.48 each for religious work and benevolence. There are 2963 members that are non-tithers. These averaged $18.91 each. Calvary church, Binghamton, averaged $77.48 for the tithers and $22.48 for the non-tithers. The lowest average for the tithers is $43.96 and the highest for non-tithers in these fifteen churches is $28.79. The highest for tithers is $95.14 and the lowest for non-tithers is $10.62.

The sixth annual session of the First Church, Redlands, Cal., began with a total attendance of 362. Missionaries Roach of Burma and Tilden of Assam are among the teachers. At the beginning of the school the pastor, Rev. S. F. Langford, said, "Not because we want to beat last year's average attendance of 335; not because we want to beat the rest of the churches in the United States; but because we need this school to inform us of the kingdom of God. The school of missions is no longer an experiment, it is a necessity to our church. Last year a large percentage of our membership came to the school; nothing less than 100 per cent ought to satisfy us."

The recent visit to Chicago of Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke of London, stirred the hearts of all who were privileged to hear him. Dr. Rushbrooke spoke four times—at Evanston Church Sunday morning, and at Austin in the evening. Splendid congregations greeted him on both occasions and nearby churches were well represented at both services. His address before the Ministers' Conference Monday morning awakened great enthusiasm for Baptist work in Europe. At this meeting he gave the ministers unbiased first-hand information about political affairs in Russia. His final address was at a luncheon given in his honor for pastors and laymen, at the Hamilton Club. Two things will remain vivid in the memory of those present—Russia's dire distress, and the unprecedented Baptist opportunity in Eastern Europe. The Baptist commissioner for Europe, Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, is the man for the hour.

"The administrative committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America records its strong conviction that the recent rise of organizations whose members are masked, oath-bound and unknown, and whose activities have the effect of arousing religious prejudice and racial antipathies, is fraught with grave consequences to the church and to society at large. Any organization whose activities tend to set class against class or race against race is consistent neither

FROM MAINE TO CALIFORNIA

Changes in denominational plans in recent years have brought tremendously increased responsibilities to State organizations.

Promotional and Collecting Agencies

By mutual agreement the State Conventions have enlarged their promotional activities. They cultivate earnestly all benevolences; serve as single collecting agencies; receive and forward from the churches their missionary, philanthropic and in large measure educational offerings. These added duties are discharged with fine fidelity to all interests.

A Constructive Missionary Force

Thirty-four State Conventions with varied activities through field-workers, evangelists, associational missionaries, missionary pastors and other helpers constitute a mighty, aggressive and constructive missionary force. From Maine to California their workers preach the gospel in frontier places, organize new churches, revive the discouraged, strengthen the weak and build up the home bases for world missionary conquest. The State Mission Enterprise is a great factor in our denominational advance and is helping to make America Christian.

Facing Financial Straits

Our State Conventions share with others the present financial strain. They accepted their 25% reduction in budgets and now receive only their pro rata share of collections. Practically all of them are borrowing money to meet present emergencies. Like all other missionary interests their needs are increased. They ought to enlarge, but instead they are threatened with retrenchment. Shall we hold them long in suspense, or will the offerings of our churches quickly lift these loads and send the forces strengthened to their tasks?

"Make America Christian"

with the ideals of the churches nor with true patriotism, however vigorous or sincere may be its professions of religion and Americanism." The above is a part of a somewhat lengthy resolution couched in general terms which is evidently intended as a protest against the Ku Klux Klan. If this is the case we wonder why the Klan was not definitely named in the resolution.

The recent dedication by M. Poincaré, the French premier, of the monument at Jocherey, in memory of the first victim of the World War, has brought to light the fact that it was a French Protestant whose memory has thus been perpetuated. This victim of the war, who was killed on Aug. 2, 1914, at 10 a. m., thirty hours before the declaration of war by Germany, was Corporal Peugeot. Corporal Peugeot was a Protestant schoolteacher, a member of a well-known Protestant family in France. The contribution of French Protestantism to the moral and spiritual life of France has been far beyond its numerical strength. The "Friendly Visitors," commissioned by the Federal Council of the Churches this summer, have commented especially upon the vitality and power of the French Protestant churches and have urged the council to continue its efforts to secure funds for assisting these churches which have suffered so heavily from the ravages of war.

"The Book of Remembrance" for 1920 is now off the press and ready for distribution. It is in the same convenient form as last year, but contains several new features, among these being portraits of twelve of our pioneer missionaries, "The Daily Bible Readings," "The Cycle of Prayer," the dates of appointment of the missionaries, and a list of answered prayers from the 1922 book. The new issue is bound in gray, with printing in brown and gold, and will be joyfully welcomed by every one who likes a good-looking book. "The Book of Remembrance" is more than beautiful; however, it is a very practical aid in private devotion and prayer. Every missionary and officer of the societies and boards of the Northern Baptist Convention listed according to birthday dates, with the location and kind of work. Nothing will bring you so close in touch with your representatives on the field as this book and you can make no greater contribution to their work than to pray daily for them, as suggested by "The Book of Remembrance."

Thanksgiving Day

WITH steadfast and unwavering faith, with hard and patient toil,
The Pilgrims wrung their harvest from a strange and sterile soil.
And when the leaves turned red and gold beneath the autumn sun,
They knelt beside the scanty sheaves their laboring hands had won,
And each grave elder, in his turn, with bowed and reverent head,
Gave thanks to bounteous heaven for the miracle of bread.

God grant us grace to look on this, our glorious native land,
As but another princely gift from his almighty hand.
May we prove worthy of his trust and keep its every shore
Protected from the murderous hordes that bear the torch of war,
And be the future bright or dark, God grant we never may Forget the reverent spirit of that first Thanksgiving Day !

—J. J. Montague.

A Great Day—Hooray!

Editors dream—not always pleasant dreams. However the editors of THE BAPTIST and MISSIONS have had day dreams which sent smiles over their faces. They dreamed of a day when the denomination—the Board of Promotion—the societies—the churches—would get back of a great joint campaign for the journals which year in and year out carry the story of conquests in the name of the Lord.

Dream Realized

THE BAPTIST and MISSIONS are the official mediums of communication between the national denominational organizations and the constituency in the churches. It was because of a profound conviction of the value of these two publications to all our denominational interests that the Administrative Committee of the General Board of Promotion in September authorized a special campaign during December to increase their circulation, and urges that the forces of the local church be utilized in an effort to place MISSIONS and THE BAPTIST in at least 20,000 new homes by January 1, 1923.

WHY SUBSCRIBE FOR BOTH?

Because they give so much value for so little money. For example, last year 1,535,508 copies of THE BAPTIST went into the homes of our people. These were 32-page papers, which means 49,136,357 pages carrying news, illustrated articles, and information concerning every phase of work done by Northern Baptists, besides all the matter of general interest.

During the same year 623,972 copies of MISSIONS went into Baptist homes. These were 64-page magazines, or a total of 39,934,272 pages filled with news and illustrated articles from all parts of the world telling of the missionary work and gospel triumphs at home and abroad. These monthly visitors not only were sent to almost every land, but reached more than 50,000 homes in the United States.

Because no other form of publicity can be used by the denomination on such an extensive scale at so small a cost.

Because they provide the best means for denominationally educating the rising generation. Multitudes of young people are coming into our churches. They are to be the leaders of tomorrow. To assume that responsibility intelligently they must be informed and educated concerning the denomination and its work. MISSIONS and THE BAPTIST make this possible.

Because they make it easy for church workers to exchange methods and stimulate each other.

Because they are not competitors but complementary. MISSIONS can never be a denominational newspaper, nor can THE BAPTIST be a magazine featuring exclusively the missionary work of Baptists. Take both, and add a state publication for local interests, and you have a rounded program for a live church membership and a world interest befitting a Baptist who really believes in the Kingdom of God and the reality of the Great Commission.

Don't Be a Nuisance

"Our publications are the best sources of information on our denominational thought and work. Baptists informed act well, while Baptists uninformed and closed to the truth are usually playing havoc with their own work and bothering the work of others."—Prof. Geo. D. Hubbard, Oberlin, Ohio. Don't be a nuisance. Subscribe for your denominational journals. Yes, and you can keep your brother from being a nuisance also.

Killam's Kollum

A Disappointment

This kollum was to have carried some real "dope" this week but our committee wired and said, "No." We are under authority. Brethren, wait in breathless suspense until next week. We hope to have something to say then. Won't that be refreshing?

Sleep, Brother, Sleep

"I am in dire peril. I am in danger of being cut off from the rest of the army, marooned, shanghaied. My subscription to THE BAPTIST, seems to have expired weeks ago. Think of it, Killam, think of it. Why, my dear fellow, what would I ever do. Suppose I had to listen to despondent gossip about the towering local strength of Methodism, the machinations of the Catholics, the raucous insistence "that millions now living will never die." Suppose I had never heard of Mrs. Montgomery or Aitchison, Padelford or Robbins, Raffety or White. Suppose I had no knowledge of my own denomination and the splendid things going forward all over the world under our banner. Suppose I was obliged to interpret the kingdom of God in terms of my own dooryard. Ay, Edgar, that were a fearsome fate. Here is the $2.50. I shall not sleep until I hear from you."—Vernon S. Phillips, Columbus, Ohio.

Cousin George Is Mean

"It has come to my attention that a man claiming to be my cousin, is soliciting loans from persons, strangers to him, on the assumption that their acquaintance with me would induce them to lend a ready ear to his plea for a small loan to relieve temporary and unforeseen financial embarrassment. I shall be grateful if you will warn your readers that such a man is imposing upon the good nature of my friends and that he deserves no consideration because of assumed or actual relationship to me." This letter from Dr. Rush Rhees, president of the University of Rochester explains itself. It was too late for the dignified portion of the paper and so since my committee "requested" me to hold up the legitimate material another week and since we do not want any readers of THE BAPTIST to be imposed upon by President Rhees' "cousin" we are printing the warning right here. Somehow we do not blame the fellow for claiming relationship but it is a bit mean to use that relationship to get coin. These sharpers are sharp. Watch your pocket books.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. Charles E. Goodall has been elected by the New Jersey Baptist Convention as its executive secretary. He stepped into the breach caused by the untimely death of Dr. Thomas P. Holloway and has already proved his fitness for the responsible position to which he has been called.

Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Peters, formerly missionaries in Cuba of the Home Mission Society, are returning to that Island to begin this month a series of evangelistic meetings in the Baptist churches. Invitations have come to them from pastors and missionaries and also from the Friends' Mission. They expect to spend six months in Cuba. Friends in the United States are providing the funds for their expenses on this trip.

On Saturday, Oct. 21, occurred the death of Rev. Henry Brandt of Troy, Ohio. In the morning he complained of feeling unwell; in the afternoon he passed away. It was desired that Rev. R. B. Smith, of Springfield, Ohio, a close friend of Mr. Brandt's, conduct the funeral services, but it was learned that Mr. Smith was very ill. Two weeks later he died. With the death of these two the Dayton Association, the state of Ohio and the denomination has lost two valuable men.

The Asylum Avenue Church, Hartford, Conn. is this month celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. The church was organized Nov. 2, 1872, and has had a prominent place in religious life of the city and state. But five pastors have served the church during its entire history. Rev. F. F. Emerson was the first. Rev. Geo. M. Stone served more than twenty-five years. The other pastors were Rev. G. W. Fennell who died in the midst of his work, Rev. Peter C. Wright and Rev. Frank B. Haggard, the present pastor.

Dr. Loren A. Clevenger widely known as a pastor and evangelist in New England and the Central West died suddenly while engaged in a series of special meetings which he was conducting near Providence, R. I. He had preached at a number of services Sunday, Nov. 12, and died that night. He was in his sixty-ninth year. He had served as pastor in Providence, R. I., Somerville, Mass., Tabernacle, Boston, Calvary, Minnesota, Oshkosh, Wis., Kansas City, Mo., Muncie and Crown Point, Ind. In these pastorates he baptized 997 persons. He has for some years been giving himself to evangelistic work. He leaves a widow, a son and two daughters.

On Nov. 9, in connection with the annual meeting of the Baptist Orphanage and Home, at Pittsburgh, a tablet was unveiled in honor of Rev. Moses B. Sloan, chaplain of the home. Rev. James E. Darby presided. The prayer was offered by Rev. William M. Ryan. The unveiling was done by Mrs. Ada Richards of Chicago, a cousin of Dr. Sloan, and by Miss Flora Margaret Miller of Beaver Falls, a member of the church organized there forty years ago by Dr. Sloan. Dr. F. C. Stifter was on the program as Dr. Sloan's chum in college and comrade in war. The address of the occasion was made by Dr. C. Wallace Petty, pastor of First Church, Pittsburgh. Dr. Sloan has been in Pittsburgh and vicinity for fifty-six years, is a member of the Mt. Lebanon church, and has honorary membership in the Oakland and Beth Eden churches. He has been a member of the Baptist church for seventy-five years, and has not been absent from church service in all that time more than twenty-five Sundays.

The Millinocket Church, Maine, has completed its campaign to complete the payment for rebuilding and furnishing their church edifice. Over $20,000 was recently subscribed on an $18,000 goal. In addition $7,000 has been raised during the year. Dr. F. H. Divine planned the campaign. Pastor Cooper is conducting a series of special meetings with gratifying results.

On a recent Sunday morning just before the time of the morning service, fire was discovered in the roof of the Baptist Temple, Fall River, Mass. The quick work of the fire department held the fire in check so that the damage is confined to the roof and to that caused by water. The loss is fully covered by insurance. The regular services were conducted the same day by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Chesbro, four persons being baptized at the evening service.

At the annual meeting of the Long Island Association, held at the Grace Church Oct. 17-19, the following pastors, having come into the Association since the last meeting, were cordially welcomed into the fellowship of the Association by Dr. A. G. Lawson: A. E. Plue, with the Huntington Church; R. G. Stacey, with the Greenport Church; A. D. Bennett, with the Lynbrook Church; Arthur T. Fowler, with the Hanson Place Church; D. S. McAlpine, with the Port Washington Church; M. H. Wrapper, with the Ebenezer Baylon Church; E. LeRoy Dakin, with the Baptist Temple; Hugh Winton, with the Lefferts Park Church; O. R. Gunnefeldt, with the Swedish Ebenezer Church; Frank Holsworth, with the Tabernacle Church; E. S. Harrison, with the Grace Church; and Erasmo Bernier, with the Spanish-speaking Church.

Give Thanks

FOR the discipline of sorrow,
For the angel of distress,
For the unseen hands that draw us
Into greater blessedness;
For the lips that close in silence
For the strong hands clasped in prayer,
For the strength of heart that suffers.
But sinks not in despair;
For the penitence and patience
That are meek beneath the rod,
And for hope's glad resurrection,
We give thee thanks, O God.

For the hope that right shall triumph,
For the lifting of the race,
For the victories of justice,
For a coming day of grace,
For the lessons taught by failure,
Learned in humbleness and pain,
For the call to lofty duties
That will come to us again,
For the hope that those who trust in God
Shall not be put to shame,
For the faith that lives in all the world
O God, we praise thee name!

A Thanksgiving Day for the Desolate

THE word thanksgiving is filled with the most diverse connotations. Look at some of them:

A little band of pilgrims huddled on a wintry coast of the new continent, severed from friends and civilization, the shadow of starvation and the fear of skulking savages never far distant, yet gathering at the call of their leader after their first hard-won harvest in 1621; then, two years later, when drought threatened to erase the precarious venture of Protestantism from the map of America, the dramatic transformation of their day of fasting and prayer into a day of thanksgiving, their prayers having been almost immediately answered by such copious showers that, in the words of the quaint contemporary narrative, "it was doubtful whether the parched and thirsty ground or our own drooping souls were the more revived." What a Thanksgiving day!

Nearly two and a half centuries later, during the dark autumn days of civil strife in 1864, the president called for a day of thanksgiving, though peace was still a distant hope, the nation was still broken in twain, homes and hearts still beset with memories of sorrow and anticipations of dread.

But see the procession of national thanksgiving days in the years that followed—years of long-continued peace, of mighty expansion of population, of swiftly accumulating wealth such as no other age and no other nation of this age ever even imagined, of developing comfort and culture, of the diffusion of the facilities of human well-being throughout the masses, well-being which the catastrophic world-war scarcely diminished, until the America of 1922, three centuries after that first Thanksgiving Day, numbers its people at more than one hundred millions, and reckons its wealth at three hundred thousand millions of dollars.

And as a festival of the family the word thanksgiving connotes twenty millions of homes dotting the continent as the stars spangle the sky—homes out in the open, ruddy with rural lights, the tables bravely laden with the fruits of the father's toil and the mother's culinary cunning; homes, too, in the city, neighboring with a million other homes, some hived like honey-bees layer upon layer, some in palaces surpassing those of a Caesar or of Louis XIV, some in humblest dwellings, but all happy with the sweet shrillness of children's voices, with the freedom of a day or a lengthened weekend uncommitted for a little from routine tasks, with the big fowl or some humbler substitute making the day and meal memorable, most memorable, however, when the home welcomes sons and daughters and children's children, when the long-absent son comes back and the newest baby makes his début among his admiring kin. How the heart of God The Father must rejoice in the American Thanksgiving Day at its best and happiest!

And on the church's Thanksgiving Day, as it meets to commemorate the mercies of a year and of the multiplying years of God's favor, what an inventory we may make of the multitude and magnitude of those mercies. The steady growth of Christianity in numbers, outstripping even the growth of the population, the upspringing edifices of stateliness and beauty, the equipment of even the humbler edifices of village and rural regions with facilities for worship, teaching and fellowship, the multiplying of missionary gifts and interest until the scale of giving triples that of a decade ago, the extension of Christian principles into vast new spheres of human relationship—these are some of the church's great debits of thanksgiving. We are purposely passing by at this time any counter-considerations, and noting now only our vast wealth of blessing.

But is the day only a day of the prosperous? Is it a day that affronts the spirit and aggravates the misfortune of the desolate? What of oriental lands still smoking from the fierce flames of hatred, rapine and murder? What of homes in Europe where widows, orphans, cripples, and invalids have scarcely known an ample meal for half a decade? What of homes even in our own fortunate land that know a ceaseless sorrow, that listen for a vanished footfall and a voice forever stilled? Can there be a Thanksgiving Day for the Desolate?

Thank God, that is where the Christian thanksgiving finds its glorious distinction. It transforms thanksgiving from a mere self-gratulatory feasting time to a time of humble gratitude to God. Instead of the fool's thought, "Soul, take thine ease; eat, drink, be merry," it whispers "What shall I render unto God?" and "How can I share my blessing?" Nay, it is coming to ask, "How can I help to remove the world's burden of poverty and wretchedness?"

And out of their own sharpest bereavement or heaviest loss or most poignant suffering, Christian hearts throughout all the centuries have been initiated into the secret which transforms their own sorrow into rejoicing; have learned that there may be a Thanksgiving Day for the Desolate.

Can You Answer this Question?

AN EDITOR is supposed to be able to answer any question in ecclesiology. He also has the high privilege of acting as a kind of father confessor, and seeks of course to merit the confidence placed in him.

A pastor in one of our states whose work covers a period of years in a most difficult field asks the following question, "Why do Baptist churches in seeking a pastor go so far afield giving no consideration to men who have really succeeded in their own state?" In order to check up the facts we have taken at random twenty-five churches with more than five hundred members and we find that in settling their last pastor twenty-three of the twenty-five churches called a man from another state.

We imagine some of the answers which will come in response to this question. It will be said that distance lends enchantment. Frequently that is about all it does lend. When the stranger has arrived he soon proves to be just "common dirt," like the other man and it turns out that the prophet is not only without honor in his own country, but his adopted country gives but little more heed. Every man who thus leaves the state where he has done his work successfully robs the state of his experience in its denominational task together with the benefit of his knowledge of local conditions and problems. One of the reasons why our state conventions are weak along administrative lines can be traced to the fact that about as soon as capable men have time to get acquainted with the state problems so that they occupy a place of leadership they are called to some other state.

The growing pastor cannot be blamed for his response to the larger field of service. In order to carry on our investigation further, we have studied the cases of twenty-five men who for reasons best known to themselves have remained for a period of more than fifteen years in a single state. A number of these men are college and seminary graduates. They have all done faithful work in the churches served. Some of these men rank in ability with pastors of our best churches. Not one of these men, however, is in an outstanding pulpit. Most of them seem to be passing over a level plain in their work and some of them are gradually being pushed down by circumstances into smaller and still smaller fields.

In this issue you will find an article entitled "A Cog Wheel Short" which emphasizes a phase of the same problem with which we are dealing. The laymen in our larger churches are in no small measure responsible for the situation described. May we not expect from them a reason for the course so commonly followed of sending outside the state for leadership. Is there another side to the question? If so what is it?

Church Officers

THE local churches of our denomination are faced with a tremendous and most important task—the duty of producing a membership that functions in a Christian way under the world program of their Lord and Master. Many members in our churches are doing a worth-while piece of Christian living and service, but the proportion of the whole of whom that is true is so small that no figures will be given here lest we might seem to be pessimistic and discouraging. We can never hope really to cure this situation until every local church undertakes to produce a group of trained lay officials who know what their particular task is and know how to perform it. We are persuaded that a very large number of our lay officers in the local churches are sick and tired of being elected to positions that mean only an empty honor which becomes a dishonor later on when their church fails to do a really worth-while piece of work for the Master.

A regiment with only a colonel would be an unwieldy mob. Its efficiency and productivity rest upon the majors, captains, lieutenants and the sergeants and corporals who are living daily with the men of the regiment and can think and act from their viewpoint and yet are trained to lead them to do the essential things belonging to the life of the army. A church like an army must have a pastor, but also it must have deacons, deaconesses, departmental executives and other officials. Thank God for our pastors. Many of them are God's noblemen of vision and spiritual power; but alone they are almost helpless in the face of a tremendous task. Let us therefore undertake to train our lay officials so that the pastors will have a group of lay leaders able to direct and develop the rank and file of our church members. Idealism did I hear some one say? No, a common-sense demand that every church official shall allot to God's work a steward's portion of time, energy, talent and personality and that the ministry of our churches shall then use that allotment to the best possible advantage so as to develop a church that produces worth-while local and world results.

Ellis Island Troubles

THE suffering that is entailed by a rigid and indiscriminate execution of our laws curtailing immigration is keen indeed. Ellis Island is the scene of such misery as often touches the hardest hearts. The mistake is doubtless made at the point of embarkation but it is here on this side that the sad penalty is paid. Families are separated sometimes simply because national quotas have been made up and landing privileges exhausted.

We have reason to know of one case of late in which the Y. W. C. A. has petitioned the president to intervene. A young Armenian girl in this country, just completing her education, has been compelled to cancel her studies and prepare to leave at once for the hazards of her old home in the Near East. Her sister, wholly alone without her, has been held at detention quarters in New York, as exceeding the limits of immigration privileges and is to be sent home. Rather than have such a calamity happen the devoted daughter of the same family, now so near the reaching of her cherished goal, has announced her readiness to renounce everything in order to accompany and protect her sister. Surely Christian judgment and wholesome judgment needs to be exercised at Castle Garden.

How terrible indeed it must be as in the case of another woman recently refused entrance because by mere accident born on Turkish soil, to be thrust back into the hands of one's declared enemies. There is call for pity here but something more than pity, lest we of America, the land of the free, be found compounding with evil, and that of the most atrocious sort. There are many who feel that our larger opportunity to befriend Armenia has unfortunately passed, but certainly in individual cases we can help to some extent and our name among the nations as the helper of the poor and downtrodden be kept clear. Common humanity should enter into the problem as well as cold rules and regulations.

So Like Ourselves

THE Living Church in its leading editorial in the issue of Nov. 18 exalts the church's program and incidentally turns the light on some problems which even an episcopal form of church government finds it difficult to solve. The problems are bound up with the human element which bulks large in most of us even though we are churchmen.

"Every parish in this country that is worth the powder required to blow it up, is working energetically at this time on the church's program.

"For, after these past three years of experimentation, nobody now holds aloof from his share in that program except through design or through sheer negative apathy. Those who do so through design are substituting congregationalism for churchmanship. . . .

"This congregationalism within the church is distributed through all our dioceses, is peculiar to no school of thought, is local to no race, color, or previous condition of servitude to a status quo. It is a condition and not a theory. It is a signal breach between theory and practice. It is a denial of the catholic position by Catholics, of the evangelical position by Evangelicals, of any sort of "breadth" by Broad Churchmen, of any sort of "moderation" by Moderates, of any sort of prayer book churchmanship by those who so contentedly describe what they think is their position by that happy term. And if we are blessed with any group or party in the church, not enumerated in the foregoing, we can venture the prediction that among its devotees there are a certain number of sheer congregationalists in practice, be their profession what it may. The one happy side to it all is that we have in the church no party, school of thought, or group that is avowedly limited in its scope to single congregations. 'We are not divided, all one body we,' in our profession of largeness in sympathy. But in practice we are—ourselves."

By congregationalism is meant that infectious disease commonly called "localitis." The pastor or rector becomes infected from some of the "leading" men of the parish. This rector refrains from speaking on the subject of giving to causes outside the parish; he resents questionnaires relating to himself and his church; he receives letters and pamphlets and puts them into the waste basket, complaining the while at the extravagance of the boards; he thinks of course that he should draw on the funds, pension and otherwise, and still feels no responsibilities for building up those funds. He is stricken with a malady which will destroy his usefulness at home and does not know it. The message which we would like to print in full continues:

"Are the laity, then, able to shift the responsibility upon their rectors? They are not. Look at us as we congregate on Sunday mornings—and those of us who fail to congregate are worse than those of us who do. Among us are the man of comfortable income who contributes 25 cents a week to parochial support and nothing to general work; the vestryman who squirms because his rector asks his people really to give to that general work; the man who uses his envelope when he goes to church but never uses those that accumulate when he stays at home; the man who doesn't believe in foreign missions; the man who plays golf all day Sunday; the man who believes we should first rescue the heathen at home—but doesn't do it; the man who doesn't take a church paper; the man who is offended because he wasn't elected on the vestry; the man who is disgruntled because the service is becoming too ritualistic; the woman who is 'mad at' the president of the guild; the woman who wanted to be its president and isn't; the woman who wants to put the rector's surplice or his chasuble on him and adjust his stole or his maniple, and is offended because the rector assures her that he can do it himself; the woman or the young man whose interest in the church is confined to its ritual; the young woman who has designs upon the curate; the people that won't do anything for the church; all those, in short, whose religion is a thing external to themselves. We are a curious lot, we laymen. We expect everything from our rectors and expect to give nothing in return. We criticise relentlessly. We give grudgingly. We do not respond to leadership. We cause discouragement in our clergy. We simply are petty when we ought to be big. God have mercy upon us for our littleness!"

China's Future

BERTRAND Russell, who has been professor of philosophy in the government university at Peking, has written a carefully prepared volume on "The Problem of China." He says that not only in population but in potential strength China is the greatest nation in the world. In material resources he counts it far in advance of our own country and China is rapidly preparing to utilize them. Professor Russell is convinced that China must be saved largely by its own efforts and should not much longer rely on help from abroad. Three things may be regarded as the chief requisites to future progress there. The establishment of an orderly government, industrial development under Chinese control and the spread of popular education. With these developments China will before long take its place among the leading nations of the world and will have a large part in determining the international life of the future.

In this new development of China, both educationally and industrially, growing as it does to a large extent out of missionary influence, Christians cannot but be prayerfully interested. There is indeed some occasion for serious solicitude in view of the emergence of plans and purposes upon the part of young China which are in some cases frankly rationalistic and in others Christian, but in a vague and modified way. To keep these new and for the most part wholesome ambitions true to Christian ideals and standards may well send earnest minded men to their knees.

The Person of Christ: A Series of "Apologetic" Studies

1. The Present State of the Question

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

CHRISTIANITY is wholly unique amongst the religions of the world. In the historic religions there is a definite human founder; a society which enshrines and carries out his ideas, and a set of doctrines which bind together the devotees. In every case the founder belongs to past history. He appeared at a given moment in time to do his work and passed away. His followers revere his memory, but none of them claims that he is now alive, the divine soul and director of the society which he created. The Jew would not dream of claiming this for Abraham or Moses, nor the Moslem for Mohammed, nor the Buddhist for Gautama. Christianity stands quite apart from the other religions of the world by virtue of its dominant faith that its founder is Divine, that he is really alive and operating by means of his Spirit today, that he alone is the Revealer of God and the Redeemer of mankind, that he is the living soul of the church. Christianity rates everything upon the Person of Christ. It is a one-person religion. It has its doctrines, but these depend upon him. It thinks of God as he revealed him. It regards man's sin and man's salvation, not in the light of human evolution but in the light of Christ. "Christianity is Christ."

"My Lord and My God"

The church's central faith in Christ has never varied. It remains today what it was at the beginning. Many creeds have been composed, and many definitions have been offered of the Person of Christ, but in the end the faith of the church always returns to the simple confession "My Lord and my God." We do not salute him as the greatest of men, the "one perfect man the world has ever known"; we fall on our knees and worship him as the supreme Lord of our life, "the word made flesh" the "second man, the Lord from Heaven." "Very God of very God." The church believes that our Lord claimed to be this, and reverently accepts as the absolute truth his word "without me ye can do nothing." This belief in Jesus Christ is both intellectual and inward: of the mind and of the soul. Some there are, mere spectators who remain outside the ring and know nothing of the thrill of Christian experience, who declare that the church worships an idealized historical character. That is what they think they see. But it is the uniform experience of all who have fully surrendered themselves to him that he is a living Saviour, who cleanses the conscience, delivers from the power of sin, and brings complete salvation to the whole life. The Christian life is founded not upon metaphysics nor emotional pictures, but upon an actual living experience of the regenerative force of the life of Christ which flows into faithful and trusting souls.

Dr. Frederic C. Spurr, of the Hamstead Road Baptist Church, Birmingham, England, is one of Britain's best known Baptist preachers, lecturers and authors. He was at Northfield during the past summer and his recent books have had large sale in this country. While Dr. Spurr was here "The Baptist" requested an article which it was impossible for him to furnish on account of the pressure of engagements. Upon his return to his home land he prepared especially for "The Baptist" a series of articles on "The Person of Christ." These have not appeared elsewhere in print and will probably form the basis of a new book by this tireless Christian worker. This series of articles is in line with the policy announced of giving to our readers constructive articles on great Christian doctrines. It is most fitting that we begin this course with these studies on "The Person of Christ."

But Christianity is not only a faith, it is also a propaganda. It is out to conquer the world for Christ. It is not blind to whatever truth there may be in other religions; on the contrary, it increasingly recognizes that truth, but it knows also that this truth is mixed with deadly error which vitiates it. That it can never "arrive" apart from Christ. Christ alone, it unceasingly affirms, can purge the world of error (as of sin) and give completeness to truth which apart from him, must ever remain dwarfed and ineffective. It is when the Gospel becomes propagandist that it encounters opposition. The early church would never have been persecuted had the Christians been content to hug their faith as a personal boon to be enjoyed in private. But the divine "urge" was upon them as it must be upon every true believer, and they went out to conquer for Christ. It was this that brought them into conflict with the authorities and opened the way to prison and to death. The proclamation of the Divinity of our Lord has always excited the opposition of man. First of all—and nearest in time to Christ—came the Jewish assault. Then followed the Gnostic attack in the second and third centuries. Then the attack of the Vandals. Later came the Mohammedan opposition—the most serious that history has known—and finally the modern Rationalistic attack, which dates from the eighteenth century and which now approaches its climax. The form of these assaults has varied. Sometimes they have been brutal; sometimes exceedingly polite and brilliantly conducted. But the fact remains that the opposition has endured for nearly 2,000 years, which in itself is a magnificent advertisement of the vitality of the Christian belief. Men do not strike the dead, nor spend their strength in destroying things which are obviously impotent.

Befogged

But there are many others who without actual opposition are perplexed today concerning the Person of Christ. They read fragmentary reprints in the newspapers which attribute to avowed Christian leaders a scepticism which appalls and unsettles them. They have been given to understand that "scientific criticism" of the Bible has finally made impossible belief in the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ. Hence they are befogged. On the one hand, they hear an age-long proclamation of the Christian faith which makes everything of the divine Person of Christ. On the other, they hear many modern voices which dissolve the ancient faith into undefined vapour. What are they to believe? It will be the purpose of these papers frankly to face the question of the Person of our Lord and to pursue a line of inquiry the result of which will be—it is confidently hoped—to give new courage to believing men and women, and to recover some who have become enveloped in the fog of doubt—that together these may kneel anew before the Redeemer and repeat from the heart the ancient confession "My Lord and my God."

A Prophecy Fulfilled

Four decades ago, Dr. Dale, then in the plenitude of his splendid powers, predicted that the day would soon arrive when the greatest battle of the Christian church would have to be fought, and that this battle would gather not around the documents of the Bible, but around the Divine Person of our Lord Jesus Christ. The event has proved the correctness of Dr. Dale's insight. We are at the present moment in the heat of that battle. It has been gathering force for nearly a century ever since the days of the Tübingen outburst. A decade ago Dr. Schweitzer issued a work which in English bears the title "The Quest of the Historical Jesus." It is the story of the growing Rationalistic attack upon the Person of Christ. The Dean of St. Pauls, described the book as "blasphemous," but Dr. Schweitzer rendered to the world at least one service by its publication: he showed to what amazing lengths of folly and utter contradiction Rationalism has gone in its attack upon the central faith of the Gospel. He brought together in one volume all the theories indulged in by Rationalism during the last two hundred years to account for our Lord in what is claimed to be a "rational" manner. And it is only when the story of the whole effort is thus placed before us, that we clearly perceive how utterly unscientific and unhistoric is the Rationalistic method. For nearly every man who has essayed to account for Christ on "naturalistic" grounds seems to have distinguished himself in one way only: he has invented a theory in opposition to that of his fellow Rationalists—that is all. And so the spectacle is offered of a number of men who set out today One whom they deem to be their common enemy, and end by slaughtering each other. What kind of a Christ has Rationalism succeeded in offering to the world? The truth is that each school has its own theory and the resultant is amazing. To one school he is a pure myth: to others he is a mere figure of history—a Jew of his time—whose brief thirty years hold all of his career. To another he is a shadowy phantom which we perceive as in a mist. To another, he never existed at all. To yet another the story of his life is merely the few pages of the work of a religious novelist. Now with such a jumble of results all reached in the name of the "scientific method" we have the right to say that the obscurity with which his sacred figure has been surrounded is certainly not due to him, but to Rationalistic unscientific method of treating history. A method which results in such a medley of contradictions stands self-condemned. Not one of the Rationalistic theories, or all of them together, account in the least degree for him who is the life of the church, and in spite of his foes, the Master of the World. If he were not so central in human life, why all this trouble to dispossess him? How is it that Christ alone of all the teachers is subject to this incessant attack? The same critics who labor assiduously to dislodge Christ Jesus from each soul!

Thou who art Truth, each mind controll
Open our eyes and make us see
The path which leads to heaven and thee.

—John Hay.

his throne leave severely alone Buddha, Confucius and Mohammed. Why is Jesus singled out for their weapons? Is it that he of all is dreaded and that his kingdom which must be supreme or nothing is hated by men who believe in the "superman" of force and who cannot therefore endure the Gospel of love and that of obedience to our sole Divine Master? We may not always judge, but it is significant that Dr. Schweitzer, in the work already cited, makes the startling admission that many of the so-called "lives" of Christ produced in his country (Germany) have been written from hatred. How can hatred ever arrive at the truth concerning the perfect Law and Life—the Lover and Redeemer of our souls? Hatred blinds and perverts. And with this qualification men sit down to write the life of him who is eternal love! Is it surprising that they fail to understand it? Only love understands love. And even where there is no hatred, but simply a critical spirit, there can be no understanding of Christ. The proud still are sent empty away: the humble and meek alone are admitted to the Great Secret. The self-sufficient think they do not need him: they are chastised for their pride by an inability to understand him. But where the sinner seeks for redemption and weakness for Divine Strength, there Christ appears to save and bless. To the one class Christ will ever appear enveloped in a mist: to the other he is the Light of Life.

The Test Question

"What think ye of Christ?" It is the test question for us all. He is either a temporal being whose life like that of the rest of men was fatally circumscribed within the limits of a transitory human existence, or he is the Eternal Son—the Christ of God whose existence preceded Bethlehem and outlived Calvary. If the former, then he was simply a man who established a religious system from which, in due time, death severed him, and over which he has at present no power save that of a mythical and shadowy "influence." Being a man, this system is human and subject to all the fluctuations and emendations of human productions. His ethic may therefore be surpassed as humanity develops and finally Christianity may cease to be, or his connection with it will be no more than that of one who long ago imitated a human religion which his followers have so altered that it is no longer his. But if he is what the church has ever affirmed him to be, the Divine WORD, the one authentic Revelation of the Father, then human life lies in a special relation to him. He becomes, not only its Saviour, but its Judge. Humanity is true or false as it follows or rejects him and its fate is determined according to its choice or rejection. It makes all the difference imaginable whether or not Jesus is the last word of God to man. Thousands have practically decided that he is not, hence they resort to spirits that peep and mutter or invent new religions, or become Epicureans, eating and drinking today with naught but death to follow tomorrow, or fall to the law of the jungle and revert to the beast. The world by common consent is in a desperate plight today. It owes its misery to the fact that it has rejected Christ as its King and Redeemer. Not until it crowns him as Lord of all will it become its true self.

The primary need, therefore, of the age is to reaffirm the truth, with all its implications for human life, of the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ—the world's only true Master.

Bible Revivals in Australia

Thousands of boys and girls confess Christ—A remarkable distribution of God's Word—The coming Revival

By GEORGE T. B. DAVIS

DURING the past year remarkable Bible revival campaigns have been held in Melbourne, Sydney, and other cities in Australia. Tens of thousands of copies of God's Word have been distributed, and tens of thousands of boys and girls and young people have professed faith in Christ.

The longest and largest of the campaigns held in Australia thus far was in Melbourne. The movement extended over twelve weeks, during which 32,000 Testaments were given away to those who enlisted in the Pocket Testament League, while over 12,000 enrolled under the banner of Christ.

Prayer was the secret of the success of the work. The Archbishop of Melbourne, Dr. Harrington Lees, and the heads of the other churches, signed a call to prayer for the campaign, which was sent throughout the state.

Boys and Girls Reached

The chief fields of operation were the schools of Melbourne; the state schools, high schools and colleges. With the hearty cooperation of the ministers the schools were entered, sometimes several in the course of one day, and the Spirit of God swept over the hearts of the boys and girls of the city like a breeze from heaven.

One of the most far-reaching events of the campaign was the visit to Scotch College. This is the largest school of the kind in the British Empire, having an enrolment of over 1300 lads and young men. In the two visits to the two sections of the college 934 were enlisted in the league and almost 500 recorded their acceptance of Christ as their Savior. The chaplain, Rev. F. Chisholm, declared "scenes were enacted which probably are unparalleled in the long record of its seventy-five years."

The head master of a state school in Melbourne told a friend that a week or so after the books had been distributed the comic papers had disappeared, and the boys and girls were reading their Testaments instead.

One day Mr. W. F. Woodcraft, of the Y. M. C. A. and Evangelization Society of Australasia, accompanied the writer to five schools, one of them being Scotch College. After seeing the way in which the students enlisted in the league and openly confessed Christ, and feeling the spiritual atmosphere of the meetings, he said: "For twenty-five years I have been engaged in arranging missions of all sorts here in Australia; but I consider that day's experience in the schools as the greatest single day of evangelism I have ever witnessed." Mr. Woodcraft worked indefatigably for the success of the movement from the beginning to the end of the effort.

One of the shrewdest business men in Australia gave over 1,000 pounds for the campaign, and declared with delight that he had never made a better investment. Another business man, past middle age, who has been in the Sunday school and Sunday school work all his life, said: "I have never before seen such a wonderful influence pervade the young people."

Hon. W. H. Edgar, M. L. C., who was chairman of the committee that financed the distribution of the Testaments, said to a friend at the conclusion of the movement: "I feel the revival for which we have been praying has come, but in a different way than we had expected. It will mean a new era in church life and a new spiritual uplift for the community." Mr. Edgar now has a vision of giving every Protestant child in Victoria an opportunity to receive a Testament and enlist in the league.

Simultaneously Mr. William Winn, of Sydney, who invited me to Australia, and his brother, Mr. Isaac Winn, are energetically continuing the work of spreading the Word in New South Wales. Mr. William Winn writes: "So far I have either given away, have in stock, or on the way from London, over 100,000, and expect to need many more thousands."

The final campaign of the past year was held in Broken Hill. It is the hot-bed of socialism in Australia. That and gambling are the two passions of the big mining center in the desert. But nothing is too hard for the Lord, and here too prevailing prayer opened the windows of heaven.

It was a delight and an astonishment to find the children of socialists enrolling in the league and professing faith in Christ with the same readiness as the youth of other cities. And, praise God, the children of Broken Hill became missionaries in their own homes! I heard of only one Testament being torn up by an angry father. A letter just received tells of a children's prayer meeting that was started just at the close of the mission through the pleading of a little girl. The first night nineteen were present. A month later the attendance had increased to seventy-six.

Beautiful stories were told of the devotion and enthusiasm of the children of Broken Hill. Some boys built a booth in their backyard. That evening the mother and father peeped in and saw eight boys sitting round in a circle. They read a chapter, verse about, sang the mission choruses, three of them led in prayer, and they closed with the Lord's Prayer. Five little girls met at one of their homes and held a prayer meeting, while their mothers were at the races.

The Melbourne Council have now arranged a three months' Bible revival campaign to cover the state of Victoria. Plans are being made for me to make a rapid tour of fifteen to twenty of the largest cities and towns in the state, visiting the schools, distributing Testaments and preaching Christ.

The victories of the past twelve months have been all the Lord's doing, in answer to believing prayer, and to him we give all the praise and honor and glory. Just after we reached Sydney a year ago, my mother was taken seriously ill. But in answer to prayer the Lord raised her up to fairly good health. Her companion, Miss Beebe, has been kept in splendid health and strength and has labored fervently in prayer for the work.

I am convinced we are on the eve of a great world-wide revival. We were all disappointed that the revival did not immediately follow the world-war. Year after year has passed and the longed-for world awakening has tarried. But, praise God, it is coming!

Praying Bands

One of the most significant signs of the times is the springing up of little prayer groups in homes and churches. It was the formation of these prayer associations, or praying bands, that helped to promote and spread the great revival in Scotland 200 years ago.

D. L. Moody strongly advocated the formation of praying bands. He once said: "The best way is for the pastor (or some member) to say he wants to see all who desire a revival. Don't let any one else come. Then get down on your knees and pour out your hearts, asking God to revive yourselves. Don't be in a hurry to pray for your friends. Hold the people to themselves! You never see an anxious church without souls being saved. Don't wait for the whole church to move. Get two or three, and soon there will be six or seven. Form a praying band. Pray for the work, and the blessing will come. That plan never failed."

The revival is coming, and I feel sure its manifestations will be most marked and significant where there are the largest number of the prayer circles. Will not hundreds of those who read these lines assist in forming such prayer circles to pray through for a revival in your own hearts and homes and churches, and in your community and throughout the world; and will you not also pray for us and our work? I will be glad to receive the names of those who will form such a revival prayer circle, or who are already in one, and will hope to send them occasional reports of our work. Please address me at 376 Swanston Street, Melbourne.

A Cog Wheel Short

By G. C. CRIPPEN

SOME people think we already have too many wheels in our denominational machine. Others think we could profitably add several more. I am of the opinion that we need at least one more, and that we need it badly. I have in mind a cog wheel to connect the great wheel of local churches with the great wheel of ministerial supply. As it is now these two primary wheels of our denominational machine have no well-ordered connection, and as a result there is an appalling amount of inefficiency. Consider, if you please, a few concrete cases by way of illustration.

A certain minister had been with a church for a number of years. The church finally became convinced that there should be a change and asked the pastor to look for another field. You know how that is done. The pastor, a man in the prime of life, tried to find another church. For six months he sought in vain. At last the church requested him to resign. This he did; and now, four months after his resignation went into effect, is still looking for a church. Yes, and the church that requested his resignation is still without a pastor.

Here's another. A good man, recognizing the call of duty and feeling that it would be better for him to resign than to ask for a leave of absence, gave up a promising field and served as chaplain during the late war. When the armistice was signed and he was discharged from service in the army, he naturally turned to the pastorate again. I don't know just how long it was before he found a church, but I do know that it was so long he ran short of funds and was compelled to take his family to his wife's home for a while. And by the way, that is a typical example of what happened to scores of self-sacrificing chaplains.

Into Business Temporarily

I know of another case similar to the one just mentioned except that the minister served in the Y. M. C. A. and when he came back, not being able to locate with a church, went into business "temporarily." He is there yet. Please don't criticize him too severely. Remember he had a family to support. This man had made a good record as a pastor and would doubtless be a valuable man in the work today if he had been put in touch with the right church when he returned.

One successful pastor was forced to give up his work on account of poor health. After a few years of change and rest he was fit and willing to take another church, but was compelled to spend months of valuable time finding one that would even consider him.

But why take the time and space to multiply cases? No doubt you know of a few such experiences. If you are a pastor, you may have had such an experience yourself. If you haven't, pray fervently that you never will. It means lost time, often financial hardship, and discouragement, yes, and once in a while the loss of a man who with the right kind of assistance at a critical hour might have given many years to the work of the ministry.

Thus far I have considered the subject almost entirely from the angle of the minister without a job; but what of the churches and their name is legion, that spend months and months without a pastor? Many of them accomplish almost nothing in the way of aggressive or constructive work in the interim between pastorates. Without local leadership they mark time or come to a dead halt until a man is found. And the pathos of the situation is that while churches are means of finding that pastor a new field and that church a new minister at once. As it is, many weary months of waiting for something to "turn up" are endured by a long-suffering people or a half-hearted pastor.

But I am sure that at this point some one will ask the question, Do not the seminaries and state superintendents perform the function you have in mind? Yes, in part. But their service is limited by their interest, acquaintance and facilities. The theological seminaries are interested in their alumni. Many ministers are not graduates of seminaries. State officers are primarily interested in the churches and men in their own states. Both theological schools and state offices have limited facilities for handling correspondence, and necessarily have a limited acquaintance with churches and ministers. They cannot possibly do the work as it ought to be done.

A Bureau Needed

What we ought to have in the Northern Baptist Convention is a bureau of some kind—call it what you will—with a broad-minded, fatherly, sympathetic ex-pastor with organizing and administrative ability at its head. He should be given adequate office help and equipment. He should have a complete record of all ministers in good standing in the convention. Such a bureau should be centrally located, and the person in charge should be able to visit pastorless churches when necessary. This official would not be a bishop with arbitrary power to appoint pastors to churches, but an advisor, a kind of unfailing source of information and wisdom on ministerial supply and pastorless churches. All pastors should be urged to keep him informed as to their movements and encouraged to consult him regarding any change in pastorates. They should feel perfectly free to ask his assistance in securing a new field. The churches of the convention should also keep him informed as to pastoral changes, and feel at liberty to call on him for assistance in settling a new minister. Churches might still go to their favorite seminaries for help. The bureau would have a lot of facts, however, that would assist even these churches.

Such an office as I have tried to describe would serve the denomination in many other ways than these suggested. The minister is the key to the local church. This office would be able to furnish accurate mailing lists for authorized promotion campaigns. It should furnish the list of ministers for the Year Book. Properly indexed and kept up to date its list would be a source of information for many purposes in connection with our denominational program.

The "How" and "Who"

And now the reader will ask two staggering questions: How would you finance such a bureau? Who would select the person to administer it? Frankly, I don't know; but if it ought to be, the "how" and the "who" could be satisfactorily determined. We have solved greater problems than those in the last five years. The thing of immediate importance is the discovery of some practical way to correlate the two great wheels of our denomination. I suggest the central office or bureau cog wheel.

THANK God for friends your life has known,
For every dear departed day;
The blessed past is safe alone—
God gives but does not take away;
He only safely keeps above
For us the treasures that we love.
—PHOEBE CARY.

searching in the dark for ministers, ministers are searching in the dark for churches. Why is there not some way of bringing the two together without the loss of so much time?

Here is another aspect of the situation. Have you ever considered the loss in efficiency when a church and minister are forced to work together after it has been decided by one or both that the pastoral relationship should be terminated? What a blessing it would be for both parties concerned and for the interests of the kingdom if there were some

Thankfulness

By WALTER S. PERCY

FILL up the measure of earth's fruitfulness
With thanks for nature's bounty; for although
It heap its treasury and overflow,
It still leaves beggar emptiness unless
Unto the gift of gratitude it grow.

Not what kind heaven sends in benison
Golden with harvests, can the garner fill With grace's perfect plentitude until
The hand which gathers votive is upon
The largesse to acknowledge Love's goodwill.

The heart is fullest which not all receives Ungivingly, but yields the tribute due
The Giver of its blessing, prompted to Lift thanks for what a Higher Goodness gives
And by ascription blessedness receive.

Fill up the measure of thanksgiving then;
It runneth over only as earth's praise
Is offered on the altar of God's grace,
Heaping its first fruits with the lauds of men
As incense in Jehovah's presence-place!

Receipts for the First Six Months

By J. Y. AITCHISON, General Director

THE accompanying table shows a comparison between the receipts for the first six months of the last fiscal year (1921-1922) and the first six months of the current year, (1922-1923).

A glance at these figures will disclose the fact that churches and individuals paid during the first half of last year $2,109,992.51 and during the same period this year $1,836,458.19, or $273,534.32 less. In other words, churches and individuals have paid this year 87.04 per cent of the amount paid last year.

The percentage of receipts month by month this year as compared with last year is as follows:

May, 56.23 per cent; June, 77.35 per cent; July, 68 per cent; Aug., 138.36 per cent; Sept., 74.78 per cent; Oct., 96.90 per cent.

Our organization needed during this period $5,000,000. We have received but 36.73 per cent of this amount and are therefore short $3,163,541.81. The interest on this item alone for the remaining six months at 6 per cent would be $94,906.25.

On account of the 25 per cent reduction in all budgets this year our work has been materially reduced. For example, the foreign mission societies have had to retain at home eight missionary families who, if funds had been available, would have returned to their work. They are planning to send out only ten new missionary families as compared with twenty-two sent last year. Because of the cut, therefore, twenty missionary families are withheld from the field. The amount of the interest the denomination will have to pay because the churches did not pay each month one-twelfth of the amount needed for the year would more than supply the funds required to send these twenty missionary families to the field.

Churches and friends are asked to ponder these facts. Shall we not put forth immediate efforts to secure larger collections? Many churches have appointed committees to canvass the entire membership with a view to a. Informing the members of the church as to the present financial needs.

b. Securing prompt payment on pledges previously made.

c. Securing adequate contributions from those who made pledges on a one year basis and also from new members.

A Day at Mather

By CONSTANCE JACKSON

WE ARE inordinately curious about "how the other half lives." Tales of Oriental splendor intrigue us, we listen entranced to the lecturer who has just returned from China, Japan, or India. Distance casts a spell of enchantment over the most ordinary details of everyday routine in these places. On the other hand we are anxious to probe into the life of the so-called lower classes. We visit the Bowery, wonder and marvel at tenement life on the lower East Side, and lead our friends on a tour of inspection down the crooked streets of Chinatown.

Because human nature is interested in its fellowman and how he spends his time, it may be entertaining to catch a glimpse of life in a Southern school among a group of little Negro girls with their kinky black curls and their flashing smiles. This particular school is Mather, at Beaufort, on the coast of South Carolina. Here colored girls over twelve years of age are trained to Christian womanhood amidst an appreciation of its highest ideals. For the benefit of those who contend that the Negro is not given enough industrial training it might be well to add that instruction is offered in cooking, poultry raising, agriculture, basketry, weaving, sewing, dressmaking, millinery, truck gardening, laundrying and housekeeping. All this is in addition, of course, to the actual grade instruction. In these days of the high cost of everything it may astonish many to learn that the price for board at this school is $7.75 for four weeks!

The six o'clock bell has rung at Mather. There is motion everywhere. Clocks have way of keeping up, and Mather girls are expected to keep pace, not to follow. When all are ready, there is time for opening beds, raising windows and quiet prayer. At the 6:55 bell the girls line up in their respective halls, recite Bible verses, form a double line on the walk outside and pass to breakfast.

The dining-room is ready. Short devotions precede the meal, which consists of cornbread, hominy and gravy. From 7:30 to 8:30 there is interesting commotion. Teachers' and girls' rooms are put in order, dining-rooms are made attractive, schoolrooms are swept and dusted and the kitchen work pushed to completion. The iron sink for pots and pans and the white enamel sink for dishes both shine and speak well for the energy of their caretakers. Girls are scheduled for these lines of work for from a month to six weeks at a time.

Eight-thirty bell! Motion and locomotion prompt or no promotion for Mather girls! A half hour in chapel is next in order. Current events, glee club, mission study, household management, and dining-room etiquette are taken up on the different mornings from Tuesday to Saturday. Monday is laundry day—washing in the morning, ironing in the afternoon.

The bell at nine calls for brief devotions. These periods occur three mornings in chapel, two mornings in the schoolrooms. Recitations follow from 9:30 to 12, and 1:15 to 3:30 or 4, according to grade. Study periods come from five to six and seven to nine in the evening. During the afternoon there are industrial classes: "the fruit of the loom" in one room, "the fruit of the wheat" in the other! It is to be feared that the goodies appeal to the girls more than the needle, save in the case of the seniors who are working on their pretty white graduation gowns.

Saturday afternoons come the bucket brigades, reinforced by brushes, brooms and dustpans. The cleaning of the whole institution is finished by baths and clean clothes for the happy workers. Sunday ushers in the dearest day of all. Church services in town in the morning, an afternoon Sunday school session in chapel, and the helpful Christian Endeavor meeting at night. Is it any wonder that Mather girls are a force in their communities? To see them as Christian wives and mothers in their later years, the heads of happy, well ordered homes, is a joy indeed.

Mather is supported entirely by the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, and is the oldest of its schools. One of its most unique features is its tidy little sales house where the contents of barrels, kindly donated by kind Northern friends, are sold and the proceeds used for the upkeep of the buildings. Just now the school, like Old Mother Hubbard, is in a fix because of its empty cupboards! The shelves of the sales house are practically empty, and to Mather's task has been added the burden of making up the cut in her appropriation from the Woman's Home Mission Society. More barrels than ever are needed in order that Mather may emerge from the winter triumphantly, and meet the spring with flying colors—which, at Mather, means teachers' salaries all paid, fences, roofs, walls, and porches patched, windows mended, furniture repaired, wood split and chopped and oil for stoves bought.

What sort of things are needed in barrels? All sorts of salable articles such as men's clothing, women's and children's dresses and underwear, coats, hats, shoes, stockings, blankets, sheets, towels and school supplies. Send barrels by express to Miss Carrie A. Hunt, Mather School, Beaufort, South Carolina—and ship now in time for Yuletide cheer.

The Meaning of Service

(Abstract of address delivered at the Second Biennial Conference of Scout Executives, Blue Ridge, N. C., Sept. 12-19.)

By FRANKLIN K. MATHEWS

Strength for meeting unescapable responsibilities in this day of our opportunity is to be found in the passion of the social service spirit. For us this motive power is to be generated through contact. First, with the boy. We must be lovers of boys, all boys. Not some of the time but all of the time, this master passion must possess our hearts.

Moreover, in absorbing vision the boy must take hold of our minds, for we cannot intelligently work for him or with him except we seek earnestly to understand him. And to the very depths of us this contact must reach. How else can we realize for him, and for ourselves, the great character objectives of our movement?

For us the second contact that generates the motive power of the social power of the social spirit is with the man, to the end that we may bring boy and man together; that we may establish a living contact between them whereby, on the basis of friendship, the man shares with the boy the ideals of his life. This is the service we are called upon to render. Truly this is a vision splendid!

But this is not enough to generate constantly the motive power of the social spirit. Our contact must also be with him of whom it is said, "power belongeth unto God"; personally we must experience the power not ourselves that makes for righteousness. For, gentlemen of the brotherhood of scout executives, the meeting of our service is not only that we work for boys and men, but also that we are workers together with God, for men and boys.

"Ich dien—I serve," said the soldier-saint, Gustavus Adolphus. Are we not also privileged to say, each one of us, "Ich dien"—"I serve boys; I serve men; I serve God"? I know your answer. It is: "On my honor I will do my best: to do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the scout law; to help other people at all times; to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

Thanksgiving for Thanksgiving

I THANK thee, Father, once again
For many blessings gladly known,
And many more beyond my ken
That thou dost see and thou alone;
But most of all my heart I raise
To praise thee for the power to praise.

Thy bounty, it is wondrous kind;
But oh, the smiling of thy face!
My life is all in love designed.
But thou thyself art grace of grace—
Thyself, oh, infinitely more Than all thy bounty's golden store.

That I can feel thy Fatherhood,
That I can press my hand in thine,
That I can know that thou art good,
And all thy power is love divine—
This knowledge every bliss outranks;

I thank thee for the gift of thanks.

The New World Movement in My Church

By ROBERT LINCOLN KELLEY

MY HEART is full as these words are written, full of thanksgiving to God for the blessing that has come into the life of our Delavan Church, in the wake of the New World Movement, and full of appreciation to those who, under God, divined the challenge of a great hour and embodied the same in this movement which has been so marvellously blessed by God.

When the challenges of the kingdom present themselves, our church, the mother of churches in this section of the Badger state, has to answer not only for itself but for others in the influence that it exerts. I will not minimize then to those who read this record the sense of a keen responsibility which became ours when the ringing challenge of the New World Movement came our way. Further, I will also say this: In advance of the receiving of the definite goals of that movement, we had faithfully tried in anticipation to scale up our measure of giving and consecration and were thinking in bigger terms than any we had hitherto known in the giving of self and service and substance. Nevertheless, we were staggered when the definite word came from the headquarters of that responsibility which was allotted to us. It was then that we began to understand somewhat of what it means to walk into the experience others have known of facing the impossible with God. That adventuring of faith with him was not without its results.

Goal Beyond Dollar Sign

The goals of the New World Movement lie far beyond the denomination of the dollar sign, the dollars involved becoming only chariot wheels for the coming of Jesus Christ in human hearts in a great, glad enterprise of Baptist folk to move this old world toward the cross and lift it toward the Christ. When, therefore, we mention money goals here the other just stated is involved.

Our church of between three and four hundred members was asked for $30,398. I am not able as are others, to report a church which "went over the top" in the money goals achieved. I wish I might so report it. However, I will say that our first returns totalled but $13,000 and I have the distinct remembrance of an emergency meeting of our advisory committee and of the challenge we faced to go the second mile, facing that second mile with prayer. And then I remember the plus-campaign committee which went out and again covered the field until we had subscribed over $20,000. In that total thus subscribed there are widow's mites which make puny the giving of some while yet they make glad the heart of God; there are dollars which come of the toil of those who wash for a living while yet they know what it means to live a life; there are sacrifices which entail the broadening vision of many a life and consecration which are enriching the kingdom here and elsewhere. The total comes not from a church which has in its membership any great wealth but from those of average means and the giving is made by practically all our constituency for there are today over 200 subscribers and some of these are from the family as a whole, while several are for husband and wife. When the five-year period is ended I believe that much beyond that originally subscribed will be realized.

So much for the original campaign. Now a word for the by-products in our individual lives, in the life of our church, in the life of our association. The old-time promise has been verified and the windows of heaven have been opened and spiritual enrichment has been our lot. The story of the New World Movement campaign and its reflexes in the Walworth Association under the campaign directorship of Rev. A. L. Drake, then pastor at Lake Geneva, now at Waukesha, have already been told in the denominational press. Pastorless churches found leaders; churches launched forward-looking programs; some churches which had received home missionary aid in support of pastors discovered powers they did not know were theirs and freed the denomination from such missionary aid releasing the same to other more needy centers. These are all matters of record in the wake of subscribing to the New World Movement a total of $51,421.50 by the Walworth Association churches.

These churches today, with special delegation of funds within their New World Movement giving, have their own missionary representative, Rev. J. Winfield Scott, of Nevada, working in that state with the Piute and Soshone Indians and also their own foreign missionary, Dr. Frederick W. Meyer at Emmanuel Hospital in Capiz, in the Philippine Islands. The Delavan church, while yet cooperating with the association in supporting these, has also, and upon a similar basis, its own foreign representative in Rev. and Mrs. Henry Topping at Yokohama, Japan, he being the grandson of the first pastor of the Delavan Church back in the years 1839-1844, Elder Henry Topping. Within the three years and a half of the period covered by the New World Movement, now history, the Delavan church, aside from accessions by letter and experience has had the privilege of welcoming into its membership seventy by baptism, these confessing their faith in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord.

Study and Results

And this is not all. The Delavan church in the spiritual reflex of this denominational movement proceeded to study its field, its forces, its resources and its responsibilities. Its study resulted, through its own survey committee, after a six months' investigation, in the presentation of a church program to the church in its annual meeting. Within that program, while there appeared certain general goals for the church as a whole, there were presented goals of endeavor, budgets, special service and so forth, for each of the several organizations and boards of the church, for example the Bible school, woman's auxiliary, the several chapters of the World Wide Guild, the young people's society, the board of trustees, the board of deacons. Each of these several programs of advance of the respective group had been first of all formally adopted by these organizations. This definite planning of the work of the church now adopted each year, the present year's committee being named the board of promotion, has been the basis of our church work for these three years. God has demonstrated to us that in this we have been experiencing but the leading of the Holy Spirit.

The five happy years of this pastorate were reviewed the other night in our annual meeting and the summaries of those years were noted in part. The portion of those years in which the real advance of this pastorate is to be noted is that covered by the New World Movement period. I cannot here separate the figures so as to demonstrate here in contrast the effects before and after taking. I may here merely set down totals for the five years. Total new members received, 165. Total money raised and expended for all purposes with no current expense debts of any description, $41,569.33 of which $24,188.81 covered current expense items and $17,380.52 covered that given for missions and benefactions. The total membership today is 386. And the end is not yet for the dividends continue and God's blessing abides.

A Changed Life

By Zo D. Brown

WHEN Amrite Babu, our Indian pastor, came to Jamshedpur in 1918, the condition of the Christian community was as he described it: "In 1918, when I first came to Jamshedpur the condition of the Christian community was very bad. Their condition was so bad that when I used to pray with them, they knelt with me in order to pray, but after finishing my prayers I would find them gone. But now a church has been organized and we have some hundred members consisting of men, women and children for Christ the Saviour."

In the community was an Indian Christian named Babu N. Samuel, who was getting 175 rupees per month as a yard foreman, working on an eight-hour shift. His shift followed that of an Eurasian and he was followed by a European. Both these men drank liquor, and why should he not drink spirits also? Were these men not called Christians?

At this time he was drinking from three to five bottles of liquor every day, and it is needless to say, was very indifferent toward the church and all its activities. Amrite Babu continued to visit him and to express his interest in him. Suddenly Babu's wife fell sick and sent for his faithful, patient pastor. The pastor went at once to the sick bedside. While he prayed for the sick wife, he silently prayed for the sin-sick soul of her husband who was drunk. The Tata Steel Company had granted him eight days leave on account of his wife's illness. The wise pastor gave him some books to read, saying, "Why should you just sit?"

After eight days the wife began to recover. That day the husband's heart was touched. He gave up drink. That day also a letter came from his company. He had been promoted to a better position and to better pay. Now he receives 300 rupees a month.

Our church services have now been held in his home for more than a year. He is a leader in the present effort of organizing the church and of making it self-supporting. If our wise, patient pastor had done nothing more than to be the instrument in God's hands in changing this one man's life, his four years' service in Jamshedpur would have been worth while.

Evangelism in Ohio

By C. H. STULL

Week-end Missions

By HENRY BRANDT

THE past year was one of the most fruitful in additions for Ohio Baptists in recent years. During the fall and winter of 1921-22 more than 120 pastors conducted evangelistic campaigns away from home, serving 124 churches, a number of which were pastorless. This state-wide cooperative movement resulted in hundreds of baptisms and saved a few discouraged churches, we believe, from closing their doors. The number of baptisms increased over last year in some churches more than 100 per cent. The baptisms increased in one association more than 150 per cent. The 1921 Annual reports 4824 baptisms. But the 1922 Annual brings the number of baptisms to 7760. This year we hope to increase this figure by fully a thousand.

Two Types of Evangelism

The department of evangelism has engaged in two types of evangelism mainly—the state-wide interchange of pastoral evangelism from November to Easter; and the week-end evangelistic missions from Easter through the summer into late fall. Plans are forming now for the state-wide cooperation of the pastor-evangelists to commence with the first of the new year and continue to Easter. Reports indicate that the movement this year will receive the heartiest possible support in all sections. The method by which this interchange is carried on is quite well known now and is becoming popular with the churches. Every pastor who can give two weeks to evangelism we send out to conduct a campaign. His services are given freely, though his expenses are paid by the department. His pulpit is also furnished with a suitable supply during his absence. Then when his own church is ready for a campaign, a helper with talent and ability commensurate to his needs will be sent him. All this without particular cost to the local church, save the matter of entertainment and a plate offering at the close of the meetings. The plan is working smoothly and we hear of little or no dissatisfaction with it.

Churches Drawn Together

The week-end evangelistic missions begin at Easter and continue through the summer and fall months. These week-end campaigns are intensive and effective, leaving a lasting impression upon the churches. They are carried on by a team of four or five pastors associated with the director of evangelism. They open Wednesday night and close Sunday night—one service each evening, three services on Sunday. Two speakers appear on the program each service. One of this team usually holds an "hour of prayer" while the others call upon the prospects—piloted by some local persons. The main purpose is to line up and properly organize a group of personal workers, with prospect lists, who will undertake to win a definite number unto Christ this year. The local field is divided into calling sections for the purpose of team visitation in order to reach the cold, the erring, the faultfinding, and, in brief, all prospects who should be either lined up with the church or won unto the Savior. The group workers pledge themselves to this personal evangelism. These missions sometimes have

A type of evangelism unique, at least in Ohio, which has been put in operation in our state during the past year under the inspiration and direction of Dr. C. H. Stull of Granville, state director of evangelism, has proved most satisfactory, effective, and inspiring to the churches and participating pastors. This type of evangelism is spoken of as "evangelism for the summer time," or "week-end missions." The plan is for the director to go out to some church each week with a team of four or five volunteer pastors to carry on an evangelistic mission from Wednesday till the following Sunday evening.

These missions have been carried on practically every week since last Easter, April 16, and engagements are booked by the director till Christmas, when he takes up again the management of the statewide, simultaneous evangelistic campaign among Baptist churches, which will continue till Easter.

Eighty-three different pastors, besides state workers and district evangelists, have engaged as helpers in these meetings since last Easter. Hundreds of personal workers have been organized; and very large numbers have been won for baptism or restored to new life and activity in practically every church where meetings have been held. Some missions have drawn as many as a score of churches into active cooperation, while at one point twenty-six churches were represented. Large numbers always attend these missions. Intensity, joyousness, and spirituality characterize them.

Dr. Stull, the director, seems to possess the genius for getting every one to do his best; and on Sunday the closing and climax day, he usually scores a great victory for the Lord. The unifying and stimulating effect of this work on Ohio pastors and churches seems to have been very great.

a remarkable result. These groups number anywhere from thirteen to forty. Many converts are also won before the mission closes. Sometimes those won to Christ outnumber those organized for personal evangelism. We do not advertise these missions as revival campaigns to get a crowd, do not preach on community problems but concentrate our efforts upon the constituency of the church. We draw together many churches, and it is common to see as many as eight pastors on the rostrum any night of the mission. In one mission people came for thirty miles, twenty-six churches were represented by four to thirteen members each—nineteen Baptist churches, five Methodist churches and two others—and Sunday afternoon an overflow meeting was conducted in a nearby grove. That morning fifty-nine people came forward to take up the work of seeking the lost. Missions conducted six months ago show that the workers are really bringing souls in with excellent success. One pastor writes: "We have had baptisms almost continuously since the evangelistic mission; at every communion service some receive the hand of fellowship." Since last Easter eighty-nine pastors have served on these mission teams. All warmly approve of this type of evangelism.

Effect upon the Brotherhood

These two types of evangelism are having a splendid effect upon the Baptist brotherhood in Ohio. This can be seen from several angles. The churches are placing renewed emphasis upon evangelism as the center and heart of kingdom building. They are coming to see that while people can build altars, it takes evangelism to bring down the fire. The associations are now asking that every church lay down a rational and effective program of effort looking to the winning of the unsaved this winter. In Cleveland from February 27 to March 11 a great simultaneous movement is to go on in our churches. The pastors themselves, by reason of the fine team work afforded, are entering into fellowship never known before; and returning to their homes like fishermen with a successful catch, resume their local tasks with optimistic devotion. The two types of evangelism have brought into specific cooperation in the four seasons of this year 159 pastors of the state. Others who could not leave their fields worked with us in prayer and sympathetic concern. The influence of all this is therefore great. Strengthening the interest of the local church in our denominational program, filling our hearts with renewed zeal and love of God, checking the spirit of destructive criticisms here and there, and proving that the Baptists of this great commonwealth are really a solid and progressive body "endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

Carey Mission Centennial

The Carey Mission Centennial was celebrated Oct. 19-22, at Niles, Mich., which city was founded Oct. 19, 1822, when the courageous missionary to Indians, Issac McCoy, and his wife Christiana, with their children and comrades, traveled by ox-team from Fort Wayne, Ind., through the wilderness, bringing with them a mission school of Indian children. Dr. L. C. Barnes, who delivered the address at the mass meeting held in the First Baptist Church of Niles, Sunday, Oct. 22, referred to the strange fact that the story of the Carey Mission is not well known by one American in a million. The whole plot, he affirmed, covers thirty years and plays constantly back and forth between old seaboard cities, especially the capital of the country, and the outmost frontiers. Issac McCoy, it will be recalled by those familiar with the history of Indian affairs, left the banks of the St. Joseph River in Michigan, to explore the country beyond the Mississippi. At the request of the government he took charge of expedition after expedition. He was the foremost pioneer of what is now the great state of Oklahoma and probably did more than any other of his time in advancing the plan for colonizing the natives in sections of the country to be forever theirs west of the state of Missouri. Some years ago Dr. Barnes obtained a collection of relics gathered by residents of Niles from the site of the Carey Mission, a part of which has been deposited with the American Baptist Historical Society at Crozer Seminary.

SOME THINGS I BELIEVE AND WHY.

John 11:17-27, 41-46.

By CARL D. CASE

We have no single passage in the Bible which includes all that we should believe even about Christ himself. There are, however, several great passages where Christ is described in comprehensive terms, such as John 1:1-18, Philipians 2:5-11, Colossians 1:12-20. But none include more inclusive statements of Christ, his person and work, than are found in this lesson of John 11.

In John 11 the teachings are given by Jesus. We need give no other reasons why we accept them than that Jesus has declared them. His spiritual vision was perfect because he was perfect. He was absolutely "pure in heart" therefore he saw God. God gave his Spirit without measure unto him.

Here are the "things to believe" as found in John 11:

1. Jesus is Christ the Son of God (v. 27). He is the Messiah foretold by the prophets and the only begotten of God, and, as John says elsewhere, "We beheld his glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth."

2. He is one with God, the Father, having perfect communion with him (v. 42). He always did those things which were well pleasing unto the Father.

3. Jesus had to die for the world that the people might not perish (vv. 49-52).

At the close of the chapter, it is recorded that they planned to take him. The wrath of man was made to praise God.

4. Jesus lived the life of God and therefore was not subject to spiritual death nor could he be held by physical death (v. 25). What he did for Lazarus, he did for himself. He had power to lay down his life, and he had power to take it up. He conquered death and rose not, like Lazarus, to die again.

5. Christ was sent into this world by the Father (v. 42). He became really one of the human race in that he was born an infant and grew to manhood. He was made in the likeness of sinful man, yet without sin.

6. He was the world's one great teacher (v. 28). We are disciples, learners of him. He is the final authority for all faith and practice.

7. Jesus is our great High Priest who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities (v. 35). He learned obedience by the things which he suffered. He was tempted as we are, he wept as we do, he ate, slept and was weary in a human way. He therefore has compassion on us, because he personally knows.

8. Jesus is our Master and his commands are to be obeyed (v. 39). Whoever breaks one of the least of his commands, is least in the kingdom of heaven. He who loves Christ keeps his commandments.

9. The great duty of all men is to believe (v. 15). Some do believe (v. 45), but not all (v. 47). The great sin is unbelief. The work of the Holy Spirit is to convict men of sin because they do not believe on him.

10. Those who believe in Christ have a present eternal life which life will never perish (v. 26). Eternal life is more than mere existence. The saved are those who have passed from death unto life.

11. Prayer made in Jesus' name is answered (v. 22), though there are delayed answers to prayer (v. 6). The heavenly Father is more ready to give us good gifts than an earthly father.

12. All sickness, trials and burdens are the occasion by which we can manifest the glory of God and his Son (v. 4).

13. The Christian's life as that of his Lord is one of activity (v. 9). We must work the works of him that sent us while it is day. The great commission is to go. The command of the Master is, "Go, work in my vineyard."

14. He who has faith in Jesus Christ, even though he die, shall live again (v. 25). Death is conquered. We shall be raised in Christ. Christ in us is the hope of glory. Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Note: If desired twenty-eight attendants might be selected and divided into two groups, one from the first group reading the first great belief, and the corresponding one of the other group reading the Bible passage proving the same, and so continue through the fourteen statements of faith.

TAKEN AT THE CLOSE OF THE

Looking Forward to Boston

Young people from all parts of the United States and Canada are planning to attend the thirty-second anniversary convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America to be held in Boston, July 5-8, 1923.

Dr. Peterson, director of religious education for Massachusetts, presented the matter of the convention to Massachusetts Baptists in annual session. He writes that many societies and classes will register 100 per cent.

Chicago young people have started a "Boston Fund" and a large number are laying aside each month a small amount, so as to have the price when convention time comes around.

Indiana "Hoosiers" have just appointed their state transportation leader and look forward to a large delegation from that state.

Miss Umstott of Kansas writes that there will be at least a carload of "Sunflowers" on hand for the Boston convention.

Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota folks are working out a plan for combining delegations, with special trains, boat rides, and so on.

Iowa young people are busy and the prospects are good for a fine delegation from the "Corn" state.

A correspondent writes that he expects at least 1000 registrations from grand old Maine.

As to Program

It will be the finest ever. With such headliners as Dr. B. C. Clausen, Dr. F. W. Padelford, Dr. Russell H. Conwell, Dr. C. N. Arbuckle, Prof. H. B. Robins, Dr. R. M. West, we expect to kick a goal at every session of the convention. Additional speakers and conference leaders will be announced from time to time. Watch the pages of THE BAPTIST.

The registration fee of $1 will entitle delegates to all privileges of the convention sessions, a souvenir program and badge.

Hotel Bellevue will be hotel convention headquarters for all officers, speakers and conference leaders.

For information as to hotels, registration, and so forth, write to Rev. F. F. Peterson, Ford Bldg., Boston, Mass.

Let's all go up to Boston for the big meeting, the key-note of which will be "THE ATTRACTIVE CHRIST."

For the World Alliance

Baptist Church House, Southampton Row, London.

Dear Dr. White:

I have recently had a talk with Dr. Shakespeare on the important subject of closer cooperation between the young Baptists of the various countries represented by our Baptist Unions of the World Baptist Alliance. Dr. Shakespeare has recently received the enclosed appeal from the Rev. M. Timoshenko of Moscow and has been interested in the proposal it makes. He wishes me to write asking for your opinion on the formation of a Baptist young people's world committee, as a first step toward such a world alliance of young Baptists.

He suggests that each of the Baptist Unions in the World Baptist Alliance should be asked to appoint one (or perhaps two) representatives to such a committee, which might then meet during the congress at Stockholm next July.

It would, probably, be better to form an interim committee for this purpose of any representative of your union especially qualified to deal with young people's work, and who would be likely in any case to be present at Stockholm.

I should much value your views upon this matter. Perhaps you would name some one besides yourself who might become representatives on such a committee and get these nominations confirmed by the executive authority of your union. Dr. Shakespeare suggests that we should call a meeting of such a committee for the Tuesday afternoon at Stockholm, and perhaps arrange some special young people's gathering on the same day, either before or after the meeting of the committee.

Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience, as time is now getting short before the great congress, and with best wishes for all your important work,

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) EDWARD E. HAYWARD.

Tulare, California

One of the greatest meetings ever held in the Tulare First Church was a young people's mass meeting held Sunday evening, Oct. 1, the third Sunday of our recent evangelistic services under the direction of Rev. A. V. Willey, state evangelist, assisted by Rev. and Mrs. Ralph N. Rowe. After a short devotional service the meeting was turned over to Rev. Willey, who, after a short talk with the young people on "Our All and Best For Christ," gave the appeal, and twenty young people responded to the call of Christian service, offering their all and best—their lives—to God to be used of him in any way he shall see fit, whether it be as a minister or missionary, at home or abroad. Fourteen of these twenty made the full surrender that evening for the first time, and we know that our Lord will surely use them and bless them since they are willing to make any sacrifice that may be necessary. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Daily Vacation Bible Schools of Greater New York

By STANLEY B. HAZZARD

Twenty-five daily vacation Bible schools were organized and conducted in Baptist churches in the Metropolitan area during the summer of 1922. Of these, seventeen were conducted in Manhattan, the Bronx, Staten Island and Westchester County, through the New York City Baptist Mission Society; and eight in Brooklyn and Queens through the Baptist Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens. Six of these schools were partly financed by the local church. The American Baptist Publication Society assisted generously with an appropriation of $1000. The total enrolment of these schools was 3755; the average attendance, seventy a day per school.

This year the Baptist schools were again a cooperating unit in the Metropolitan Federation, united front for daily vacation Bible schools being thus once more maintained in the Metropolitan area. All denominations cooperated. The experience is recommended for the following season. This organization included about 250 schools.

In the spring, a ten weeks' Saturday morning training class was held at the Second Avenue Baptist Church for all young men and young women living in or near New York who anticipated being in the vacation school work of the summer. Prior to the opening of the schools, a three-day institute of intensive training was held at the same place for all teachers engaged in the work. Mr. Hazzard, our Baptist director of religious education, was chairman of the curriculum and training committee for the federation and a new program of training was introduced. The program included instruction in handcraft for both the older and younger boys and girls and for the kindergarten, instruction in music, in Bible story telling, in devotional exercises and in the organization and development of schools. Part of the third day was spent in visitation by the individual staffs of the communities in which the schools were to be placed.

The Bible work was left to the choice of the different denominations cooperating in the federation. The Baptist schools using the material of the American Baptist Publication Society—"Dan of Nazareth" for the primary children, and "Gift from the Heavenly Father" for the kindergartens.

High enough tribute cannot be paid to our supervisors who added materially to the teaching staff of the training institute, and also to the teaching force which, including ninety-eight paid workers and sixty-seven volunteers, numbered 165. Almost all were trained workers, the greater part of them being college men and women. The principals secured from Colgate University are always excellent; likewise the teachers from the People's University Extension Society and the kindergartners from Hunter College.

The spirit manifested in the schools was splendid; it expressed genuine joy and wholesome activity on the part of the children. A few schools experimented with closely graded instruction in all departments, each teacher perfecting herself in one study and the children of different ages going to her at the proper period. The experiment was successful and is highly recommended.

As heretofore, the children were encouraged along the line of charity, and this year two benevolent interests were favored. The daily offerings therefore were divided in half—for the starving children under the care of the Near East relief committee and the daily vacation

Bible school sinking fund of the Metropolitan Federation to open schools in new centers of our city next year.

Closing exercises were held in Wana-maker's Auditorium detailing the daily devotional and patriotic exercises held in the schools each morning and also showing the scope of the daily instruction.

International Sunday School Lesson for December 10

STORY OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN

Lesson: Luke 10:25-37. Golden Text: Leviticus 19:18.

Introduction

The Samaritans were looked upon as accursed. There was no association with them in either a social or a business way. To call a man a Samaritan was an insult to him. To a Jew only a Jew was really a neighbor. Who were the ancestors of the Samaritans of Christ's time and why did the Jews bear this hatred toward them?

Lesson

As in other cases when questions have been asked of Jesus, the one put by the lawyer was not so much for information as to make a test of Jesus. Continually was the Master being placed on trial by such. "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" asked the lawyer. Instead of enumerating a series of meritorious acts, Jesus replies with a question: "What is written in the law?" "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy strength and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself," quoted the lawyer. "Thou hast answered right," said Jesus. "This do and thou shalt live." But the lawyer was not to be thus dismissed. He was determined to justify his questioning of Jesus. His difficulty, at least so he said, was in knowing who was his neighbor. In reply to this Jesus gives the parable of the Good Samaritan, and forces the lawyer to state its lesson by asking him, "Which of these three, thinkest thou, proved neighbor unto him that fell among robbers?" The lawyer, avoiding the use of the despised term Samaritan, replied, "He that showed mercy." And Jesus said "Go thou and do likewise." Surely the lawyer, wise in his own conceit, must have bowed down to Jesus as his Master in every way.

Lesson Thoughts

1. Is it true that "there would be more Good Samaritans if it did not mean of and twopence?" 2. "Passing by on the other side" is such an easy and such a cowardly way out of it. 3. The way to show our love for God is to show love for men. 4. An indifferent neighbor is not worthy the name of Christian.

The Graded Church School

The graded public school is built to fit the needs of the graded child. Likewise the graded church school recognizes the needs of God's growing, developing, graded child. To meet the needs of the growing child there must, first of all, be a graded curriculum which will recognize the mental capacity of each period and provide material for the religious training required by each period. In the second place, there must be a graded organization which will group children of the same ages together for special training, and make possible the special attention which each group needs. In the third place, there should be a graded building and equipment. The physical conditions in many churches are not adequate to meet the demands of efficient spiritual training of the children and youth of the parish. The problem of adapting the graded curriculum to schools of varying sizes, with partially trained leadership, is very difficult, but gradually the educators of the church will solve this problem.

A Trained Leadership

The growing child demands a specially trained leadership. Experts, for example, must devote their lives to the problems of the religious training of children in early and later infancy. Literature must be developed, music prepared, training courses for parents prepared, and the whole program organized and promoted in such a way that there will be a revival of religious training in the home, and parents will be indeed the first religious teachers of their children—WALTER SCOTT ATHEARN in "Introduction to the Study of the Mind," Westminster Press.

STEWARDSHIP

A certain rich man had two sons. Wishing to retire from active business, he divided his possessions and made each son manager of a certain portion. Then he went on a long journey.

One of the sons, realizing that what he had was his only in trust, endeavored to conduct his portion of the business in the way that he thought would be pleasing to his father. As a result the business prospered and was extended into many distant lands.

The other son gave his attention primarily to the pursuit of pleasure; to the gratification of selfish desires and ambitions. His part of the business was neglected and soon became unprofitable.

It is needless to say that, when the father returned, the one son rendered his account gladly and received the praise and reward merited by his faithful stewardship. The other son made his report with regret and remorse for wasted opportunities, and received the rebuke deserved by his unfaithfulness and ingratitude.

Each of us is manager of a portion of our Father's business. He furnishes the capital and supplies us with time and talents, mind and money. What we have we do not own, but merely hold in trust for a limited period. Some time an accounting will be required to determine whether we are faithful or unfaithful.

We hear much about budgets. It is generally agreed that an organization or institution, to be managed economically and successfully, must have some systematic plan for the distribution and use of its capital and income. If then a budget is good for large affairs, why not also for personal matters? If all that we have, of endowment and possessions, belongs to God, then we are responsible to him for the right use of all that we have.

This means a fair and equitable division of personal and beneficent expenditures. The faithful steward does not use all that he wants for himself, and give what is left, if any, for the extension of his Father's business. He divides his possessions and distributes his abilities according to a percentage approved by his conscience and his God.

THE STOREHOUSE TITHERS AT FRONT

Doubtless those engaged in the stewardship and tithing campaign of our denomination meet with the objection to tithing that it would tend to level down to this percentage the giving of many who should give much more. Here is an example of the actual working which answers that objection.

The Calvary Church of Binghamton, N. Y. had a debt of $9,000 on its building. The first of January there was started a campaign to try and pay off part of it this year. The church numbers 230 members and they report a storehouse tithing league of forty-seven members. As the league were already putting a certain percentage of receipts into this fund, the members were not solicited for anything more than they were doing, but they came forward of their own accord and made pledges in addition to their tithe.

The treasurer of this fund reports the following receipts for the six months beginning Jan. 1, 1922: Total receipts $1816.26. Of this amount the percentage of tithe voted by the league amounted to $921.76. The free-will offerings from tithers, over and above the tithe amounted to $503.50, a total from the forty-seven tithers of $1425.26 and from the rest of the church $391. In other words the offerings of forty-seven tithers after they had paid the full tithe amounted to $112.50 more than the total contributed to this fund by the other 183 members.

BAPTISTS AND CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

There is a form of selfishness which dresses in a placid garb of comfort, ignoring the manifest facts of human need which are never farther than arm's length from us. That religion is false whether it sits easily on Christian Science cushions or on Baptist ones. Hinduism doesn't do that.

The problem Christ had was to lodge a dynamic in human history which would lead people away from themselves to other people. No in-looking interpretation of Christianity can accomplish that. The powerful appeal of Christian Science in our day is to human selfishness. A regal cloak. A comfortable sitting room. A place to read. No anxiety about a Centenary Fund. Placid good health. Mental poise. This allotment of criminal responsibility is resented. That does not disprove its truth. Before you "go over" to "Science," gentle reader, consider for whom you would be doing it? And if it appears a selfish thing ask Christ's forgiveness and turn back to his way.

Now let's put Baptist words in the paragraph above. No in-looking Baptist interpretation of the Christian function can accomplish the loosing of a dynamic that will make me give myself for men. If being a Baptist means to me that I belong to the largest Christian fellowship in the world, to an enlightened era of comfort and reading rooms, industrial reform and a noble missionary enterprise, all without much money or price, what then? Then I am a Baptist but unsaved by grace. I am a Baptist but I am not a Christian.

To be a "Scientist" or to be a Baptist is not, necessarily, to be a Christian. Jesus had poise but he sometimes surrendered it. There was little placidity while he was fighting out the destiny of the world. Is a servant better than his master? Shall such a man as you, or I, flee? He has specifically left the destiny of the world to us. If we laugh and say, "I used to carry the world on my shoulders. I don't do that now," somebody perishes!

That's the matter with Christian Science. Somebody perishes! And that's the trouble with the Baptists and the Methodists. They have autos and ceiled houses but the New World Movement and the Centenary Fund lag.

And the world, shivering, waits. Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand!

Those Desk Bibles

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

Some time ago I put in THE BAPTIST a notice stating that I had a desk copy of the Bible, and would give it, upon payment of postage. That simple notice brought to light a wide-spread need for desk Bibles. Letters are still coming. I want to quote one or two, and thank those who have made it possible for me to do more than give the one. Perhaps there are other churches or missions that need Bibles; and perhaps there are other family Bibles put away on shelves that ought to be brought out and sent to places where they are needed:

"Our little church is located in an oil-field, and is less than a year old. The work is definitely of a missionary type. We are not able to afford a desk Bible, and would be glad to accept your offer."

"I have a church membership of eighty and an outside appointment to a church containing thirty members. I am on a salary of $1000 a year, with a sick wife who has been sick fifteen years. This means that we have had to keep help all the time. We have four children, all making their way but the youngest, and we are trying to put her through school and give her music. I have been here three years, and am on my fourth. I was in the northern part of () Association for nine years. I do appreciate these things so much. I hope I shall be the lucky one."

"I am not a pastor, but a pastor's wife. I do my own work among the women, and am in need of a good print. I would be glad indeed to have one. My husband has been a pastor in Kansas for twenty years. I will gladly send you the postage."

Now are there others who have Bibles to give away, or who want to receive Bibles? Why not make THE BAPTIST your medium of communication?

Or, The Seven Thank You's!

SUPPOSE that in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains there were only one college for women! But you can't quite picture it, can you? Not with Bryn Mawr, Vassar, Wellesley, Smith, Holyoke, Wells, Barnard, and all the host of coordinate colleges where women's buildings share a campus with men.

"But where would we get our women teachers, doctors, lawyers, writers, executives, social workers and prominent leaders in a hundred varied fields if there were only one college?" you demand triumphantly.

Exactly! Where, indeed?

And yet in China, in the great valley of the Yangtze from the eastern seacoast several thousand miles across to the borders of Szechuen in the west as well as north and south for several hundred miles, there is only one place where Chinese girls can go for real college work and get the Christian training which will fit them for leadership among their own people. And that one place is Ginling College, in Nanking.

Since our own Baptist women's board has a share in it, together with Methodists, Christians and Presbyterians, surely you will enjoy a brief glimpse of that Chinese puzzle of a house with which you will undoubtedly fall in love at first sight; for it is the most picturesque official mansion built by the Li Hung Chang family years ago and glorified by all the quaintness that is so charming to behold, so inconvenient for permanency! Imagine the aesthetic joy of pushing ajar the halves of a round door latticed over paper in plum blossom and honeycomb design, of looking out of papered windows framed with dragon tracery, of going from room to room across a maze of flagged courtyards open to the sun and rain, of dreaming over willow-bordered ponds and lotus pools, of sitting in rose-covered arbors reached by wistaria-arched paths! It is like some oriental dream—but consider the winters in stone-flagged, furnace-less mansions with papered windows! Consider the feet of the American teachers chilled and swollen and aching unmercifully, until at last—unable to wear shoes—they evolved clumsy home-made furlined foot bags (one could not call them boots!) so that the days on stone floors and crossing stone courtyards may bring less of a menace. Seven years the heroic American teachers in Ginling College have endured these hardships and these picturesque inconveniences. They realized that the building was secured only as a makeshift; that the Baptists, Methodists, Christians and Presbyterians would build adequate college edifices as soon as possible; but meanwhile the picturesque old place they now occupy is hopelessly outgrown and highly unsanitary, as you will realize from the fact that when the chemistry classes need fungi or moulds for their microscope work they can scrape up an abundance of it from the laboratory floor! A shining example of Christian hygiene?

But the first of January is approaching, and with the last hour of the last day of the year Mr. Rockefeller's generous offer to add 50 per cent to every contribution expires—for you do know that Mrs. Peabody is seeking $3,000,000 for the seven union colleges of the Orient, don't you? Ginling is one of the seven. With tireless energy and a yearning belief in the great need, Mrs. Peabody has been traveling from city to city across the entire United States for several months, helping and inspiring the local committees at work. Thanksgiving is now here; the time is getting so short that not a moment should be lost, for somewhere in the Orient there is a girl longing for a college course—needing one, if she is ever to be responsible for lifting her neighborhood from its heathen superstitions—is she to travel all the weary miles to Ginling only to knock at the door of an already-crowded-to-the-limit college? Is she to be sent back to her old home and her old surroundings to wait and to hope and to lose hope and to forget and to die, useless?

In a very wonderful way Baptist women have always had a large share in these Union colleges, it was through the legacy of Laura Spelman Rockefeller that we could promote the initial growth of several of them; but all the seven colleges—three in China, three in India, one in Japan—have grown far beyond our expectation, and the day of the makeshift was over years ago, yet students are still sleeping in cramped quarters, reciting in rooms often with two classes going on at once, and as an example of the sad waste of procrastination on our part: over one hundred students had to be turned away from Vellore Medical School last year! And that in India, a land where only women doctors may treat women, where for each such doctor there are over a hundred thousand would-be patients!

Thanksgiving is peculiarly a time for thanks-living: in a land brimful of colleges, doctors and other facilities, we take too much for granted. It would be a fine expression of our Christian gratitude if those of us who are housekeepers would cast an appraising eye—for instance—over our Thanksgiving dinner preparations: how about omitting the centerpiece of cut flowers and substituting a bowl of blended fruits flanked by gleaming candles? The fruits can be eaten later on, and the bill saved at the florist's can be our "thank you" to the Union College Fund! How about omitting the caterer's ice-cream and having something home-made, saving at least a dollar for those "seven lamps of Asia"? How about omitting candy? Or couldn't the turkey dwindle to a smaller, less-expensive fowl? There is such a tremendous need in the Orient; there is such a narrowing time in America to meet Mr. Rockefeller's offer; women like Mrs. Peabody are devoting days and nights to this sole object—

*"Shall we whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we to souls benighted
The lamp of life deny?"*

All such expressions of heartfelt thanksgiving should be sent direct to the Assistant Treasurer, Miss Hilda L. Olson, 300 Ford Building, Boston, Mass. (Mention your denomination in order that the sum may count on the Baptists' apportionment.)

Morning

FOR sleep through one more painless night,

All wrapped in soft forgetfulness;
For eager hearts that hail the light,
Unirked by sharp regretfulness;
For eyes that see the trees, the birds,
The morning faces of our friends;
For ears that hear the gentle words
And happy songs the day still sends;
For healthy cry for word and drink,
For time to play, and power to think,
For will to work, and work to do,
For those who trust us to be true,
For pluck that dares and strength that can,
For hope in God and faith in man,
For love for all the pure and good,
Accept, O Lord, our gratitude.

Evening

FOR kindly patience shown this day

By those in higher places,
For warm forgiveness by the way,
And smiling servant faces;
For sweet content's unenvying eye
At sight of power and wealth;
For human hearts that note the cry
Of broken hopes and health;
For all our work has brought us,
All that temptation wrought in us,
For thoughts and books and things of beauty,
For cheerfulness in the way of duty;
And now for the stars that sing o'erhead,
For the love of our home and ease of our bed,
For cool of the night, and for weariness,
Good God of our lives, thy name we bless.

Big Chief Like-Thunder-on-the-Mountain Gives Thanks

A Thanksgiving Story

ALL day long for almost a week Big Chief Like-Thunder-On-The-Mountain sat in the shade of his tepee making something. And this was very astonishing! Not that he should be sitting. For sitting, as you must now hear, is an art in which Indians can excel beyond almost any other people. But that Big Chief Like-Thunder-On-The-Mountain should be making something, working with his hands—oh, this was indeed surprising. For the whole tribe acknowledged that a man who was a great chief, whose shoulders were now bent by many winters, and whose cheeks were wrinkled by many summers, had a perfect right to bask in idleness forever and ever. Yet here he was with a little knife and a piece of wood, whittling something all day. But to neither man, woman or child would he show the thing that he was whittling.

Many an Indian questioned Big Chief's squaw as she weeded his vegetable patch: "Red Beads," they whispered softly in her ear, "what is the use of living in the same tepee with the Big Chief if your eyes cannot see the thing he whittles with this knife?"

"Poof!" grunted Red Beads, shrugging her shoulders, "What good does looking do? You should see poor Red Beads craning her neck and stooping her back and straining her eyes, but always Big Chief's hand covers the thing he carves. But this is what it seems like: like some great medicine to help the tribe! What else should it be—so precious to him?"

"Oh!" the Indians nodded, "Red Beads thinks it may be some new God—"

"Perhaps!" she said. And you can't blame her for thinking this, since Big Chief certainly seemed to worship the little thing he was carving exactly as the whole tribe worshipped the wooden gods—those queer carved bits of wood, brightly painted, to protect the tribe from evil.

But on the day when the whittling was finished you can imagine the mingled terror and pride of two young Indian boys, Brave Heart and Strong Legs, whom Big Chief Like-Thunder-On-The-Mountain summoned to his tepee. Poor Brave Heart's heart was flopping faster than any Indian's heart should flop, and Strong Legs' legs were wobbling more than any Indian's legs should wobble. Yet there they stood, the two of them, as straight as arrows, while the old chief peered out from under his beetling brows—and it is a fact that his eyes seemed to pierce straight through them.

"Brave Heart," said he, "and you, Strong Legs, as time flies, twelve years have you lived in the tepees of your fathers and played childishly at the edge of the desert, until now the time has come for you to prove yourselves men. Full well you know the Indian custom, to send you out alone into the lonely wilds to suffer ordeals and testings, to starve and to be tortured until into your frenzied minds strange visions from the Great Spirit may come. No doubt you have already both dreaded these coming ordeals, yet welcomed their approach, wanting to be proven even as brave and as strong as the names you bear. Is this not true?"

*SOME hae meat and canna eat,
And some would eat that want it.
But we hae meat and we can eat,
Sae let the Laird be thankit.*

ROBERT BURNS

Brave Heart nodded his head and Strong Legs mumbled that he did feel just that way.

"Very well then," continued Big Chief Like-Thunder-On-The-Mountain, "I now lay an ordeal on the two of you. But it is neither by fire nor by torture that you are to conquer. See, in my hand is something I have been carving many days from a piece of wood. Look at it well—then tell me what it seems to be."

Eagerly the two boys leaned near and examined the carving which had been arousing such curiosity in the village. A little square thing it was, with something jutting from the top.

"Strong Legs, he thinks maybe it is a new tribal god, of powerful medicine to protect us," said the first boy, merely voicing the opinion of the entire village, of course.

But Brave Heart saw the Big Chief shake his head, so when his turn came he said: "To Brave Heart the carving looks like the stone tepees of the pale-face tribe of men; only the thing that juts out from the top of the tepee is something which Brave Heart never saw before."

Big Chief grunted approvingly: "You have spoken well, Brave Heart, and now I will tell you my wish. For across the desert from here there is a village where long years ago there was an Indian pow-wow and sun dance to which all the braves of our tribe went. And as if it happened only yesterday there is the surprising memory that half the Indians in that village refused to take peyote or dance in the sun dance as they used to do, because they had begun to 'walk the Jesus-road.' Doubt not that instantly there was great curiosity in the heart of Chief Thunder-On-The-Mountain regarding this Jesus-road, and he asked many questions and heard many answers and saw many sights. But the sight he remembers best after all these years is the cobblestone tepee where the Indians met to walk this Jesus-road together and to sing songs and to hold their peaceful pow-wows. So now here is that tepee carved in wood exactly as Big Chief remembers it. Take it, brave boys, so that you may recognize it when you go over the desert to find this village. And when once you get there show this carving to the Pale-Face-Man from the tribe of white men who live in that village to teach these Indians to walk the Jesus-road. Tell him that after all these many years poor Old Chief Thunder-On-The-Mountain is still waiting for a Pale-Face-Teacher to come to teach his tribe about the Jesus-road. Tell him that during all these weary years of waiting the cheeks of Big Chief have become wrinkled and his back has become bent, and his eyes have become dim, and his legs have become feeble, until if he waits much longer to walk this Jesus-road he will have to be carried like some helpless little papoose upon the backs of strong young braves. Ask this Pale-Face-Teacher if that other tribe of Indians is the only one that needs to learn to walk the Jesus-road, while all the rest of us grow up and die in ignorance. All this, remember! And tell him that your ordeal of manhood is to bring him back to us. Now go! And until you find this village-of-the-stone-tepee and give your message, you shall not eat or drink."

So over the desert they went, the two of them. And they neither ate nor drank until they found a village with a stone tepee and a tower jutting out on top of it. Very weak from lack of food and water, they sought the Pale-Face-Teacher in the mission house, and showing him the carving of that mission they gave their message.

You may be sure that even as the Apostle Paul once heard a voice calling, "Come over into Macedonia and help us," so to that missionary the small carved object was as a voice calling: "Come over the desert into our tribe and help us." You may also be sure that he went!

Moreover, the Christians in that cobblestone mission church which he left behind him raised enough money to buy Bibles to teach their Christless neighbors how to walk the Jesus-road. So that when Brave Heart and Strong Legs went back over the desert they carried those Bibles with them, traveling beside the missionary.

And Big Chief Like-Thunder-On-The-Mountain, sitting in the shade of his tepee, saw the three of them approaching and called to his squaw: "Red Beads! Red Beads! Stop grinding the corn, old woman, and go tell every squaw and every brave in all this tribe that a Pale-Face-Teacher comes across the desert to teach them how to walk the Jesus-road. Hurry!"

So Red Beads stopped grinding the corn to spread the message through the village. And Big Chief Like-Thunder-On-The-Mountain gave thanks that he who had hungered and thirsted for righteousness was about to be filled.

DID we in our own strength confide,

Our struggling would be losing,
Were not the right Man by our side,
The Man of God's own choosing.

Our Own Folks

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

Cosmopolitan Wisconsin

At the recent state convention at Oshkosh it was shown that the Wisconsin Baptists are doing work among the Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Danes, Italians, Poles, Negroes and the Americans. Besides this there is a work established in the state for Czecho-Slovaks, and a small work in Milwaukee for Russians. If there were money and workers many other races could be touched, for we have Hungarians, Roumanians, Lithuanians and many other races in this state in goodly numbers. Truly Wisconsin is the melting pot of the Middle States.

Outstanding Rural Fields

For a number of years the Baptist work at Honey Creek, a small hamlet, which is outstandingly rural, has been held up as one of the best types of rural religious work in the United States. Several years ago the entire equipment there was lost by fire. They at once rebuilt their community hall and will soon have the church completed and ready for dedication. This church has complete control of the social life of that neighborhood. It is the church which provides for the athletics, the picture shows and all other social affairs. Their new pastor, Rev. H. S. Grandholm, who comes from Michigan, is now on the field.

Ralph Mayo, who for a number of years was at Honey Creek as pastor, has a different type of rural work at Elkhorn and Millard. At Elkhorn they have a large community building which is used by many of the organizations of that village and community.

Rev. O. P. Lovik, now at Wyocena, is developing a splendid type of rural work. This young brother was an attendant at the summer school for rural workers at Madison and received a great inspiration which sent him back to his field as a confirmed rural pastor.

Along with the Honey Creek work should go that of Pastor H. E. Mansfield, of Wild Rose. He has what is known as the Wausara County community of Baptist churches. He has a very successful vacation school out in the open country. He has a soil tester and does all sorts of work with it for the farmers. He has come to be a community asset, and preaches the gospel to farmers from topics which are interesting to them. One of the outstanding features is his band. He has thirty pieces with a dozen recruits in training. The equipment of this band is valued at $5000; they give weekly concerts which brings large crowds to hear them. Memorial Day this year was observed in Wild Rose under the auspices of the band. In the October number of the Presbyterian missionary publication, under the department, "The Church and Country Life" an entire page was given to the picture of this band.

Notes From The Field

The First Church of Hudson celebrated its seventieth anniversary, Oct. 22. Dr. A. LeGrand gave the addresses, and a historical paper was read by Mr. J. A. Andrews, for many years a member and officer of the church. Pastor V. N. Robbins has done a splendid work on this field and the church goes forward with courage.

Pastor J. W. Johnson, of Portage, has accepted the pastorate of the Lake Geneva Church and is now on the field.

Rev. J. DeVries, who was pastor for several years at Wisconsin Rapids, has begun his work as pastor of the church at Lancaster. Rev. W. Weybrauch has accepted a pastorate in North Dakota. He did a splendid work at Lancaster. His outstanding work was the erection of the new church building.

Rev. O. A. Graham has become the pastor of the First Church at River Falls. He is taking hold of the work in a masterful way and good things are in store for him.

Rev. Edgar R. Hyde, who for the past twelve years has been pastor of the First Church at Middletown, Connecticut, has accepted the pastorate of the First Church of Racine.

The First Church at Waukesha is erecting a new $12,000 parsonage, which will give them one of the best pastor's homes in the state. Pastor Drake is encouraged over the coming of several prominent Baptist families to Waukesha, whose membership will strengthen the church considerably.

Several other pastoral settlements are in the process of being completed, but as yet are not definite enough to report. In Wisconsin as elsewhere pastors come and pastors go, but the work goes on forever.

The Grace Baptist Church, of Racine, formerly the First German Church, of Racine, has decided to hold its Sunday services in the English language. Several of the older classes in the Sunday school, and the prayer meeting are still conducted in the German. This church has a fine lot of business men in its membership, and Pastor H. F. Hoops, who came from Newark, N. J., several years ago is the tireless and energetic pastor.

A New Kind of Revival

A good many years ago the Free Baptists had a church near Racine, known as the Mount Pleasant Church. Dr. L. A. Crandall at one time was a pastor of this church. About five years ago it ceased holding any services, and from then on until recently the church was closed and the property was falling into decay. There was a parsonage, a church, and a community hall situated on a fine tract of land. About the first of the year the state convention sought to take the property, together with a bequest which had been given to the church with certain conditions. The case was fought in the courts by the church members in the community, and the judge gave them six months in which to reestablish themselves as an active Baptist church. They have gone to work, secured a minister, and recently won a bouquet of flowers which is presented each Sunday to that church in Racine which has the largest percentage of its enrolment present. Several old members who have been with the First Church in Racine are back with them, and things seem hopeful for the future. This may be a hint for some other defunct situation. Set the court on to revive them.

St. Louis Letter

By W. E. DARROW

A few weeks ago the attention of our city was turned toward the influences at work for the helping of girls. It was put on by the board of religious organizations. An entire week was given to the "Girls' Week Festival," the first of its kind in any American city. There was a parade on the opening day, Saturday, Oct. 14, participated in by the various religious and other organizations at work for girls. There were thirty-five floats in the parade, each depicting some particular line of endeavor for the benefit of girls. On Sunday many of the pastors preached sermons appropriate to the week's celebration. A mass meeting with a program built around the theme of "Building for Womanhood" was held in the Lafayette Park Baptist Church, Oct. 17, under the auspices of the city B. Y. P. U. On the following Friday the Baptist unit of the board of religious organizations presented a pageant titled, "A Friend to Man." To Mrs. Nyberg Hughes, one of our St. Louis Baptist women, belongs the honor of having so beautifully conceived and worked out the thought underlying the origin and work of the B. R. O., but Mrs. Manly, another elect Baptist of our city, has the credit for suggesting that such a pageant be given.

"Daddy Card"

A noteworthy religious worker in our city is Rev. Edw. A. Card, affectionately known by all his friends as "Daddy Card." For nearly twenty-one years he has served as superintendent of downtown rescue missions. He came to St. Louis as general agent for the United States Express Company in 1902. After a year's residence, he resigned to accept the superintendency of St. Louis City Missions. He is in charge of Sunshine Mission on Market Street, not far from the Union Station. Recently he rounded out seventy years and it was an opportunity for some of his friends to show their appreciation of his life and service. He was converted in Chicago in meetings conducted by Francis Murphy and began at once to devote his spare time to work for down and out men. Later he worked with Harry Monroe at Pacific Garden Mission. Each Monday evening some one of our Baptist young people's unions conduct the service at Sunshine Mission.

On Nov. 6 and 9 the Third Church conducted its second Find Yourself Campaign. This relates to vocational guidance for boys, sixteen to twenty-one. It is an effort to help older boys to find their aptitude in life, to help them to make decisions concerning their life work, to advise and assist them in preparing for the work they have chosen, to encourage them to study and work for the best things in life and to help them realize their ambitions. A. R. Thornton, Fred Murch, Chester J. Prince and W. C. Ayer of the Third Church directed the program. Assisting them were Dr. W. H. Geistweit, Dr. S. E. Ewing, H. S. Keltner and Robert M. Frehse. Byron W. Mosher, president of the city Y. M. C. A., delivered an address. The meetings each evening began at 6:30 with a supper or lunch, followed by address and personal interviews with the boys present.

Rev. R. K. Kelly has declined the unanimous call of the Baptist Church at Coffeyville, Kan., the Lafayette Park Church rallying around him and voting him a substantial increase in salary. The writer resigned the pastorate of the Grand Avenue Church on Monday evening, Oct. 30, the resignation to become effective at the end of Sunday, Dec. 3. He accepts the unanimous call of the First Church, Ansley, Neb., and will begin his work there on Sunday, Dec. 10. He is not a stranger to Nebraska, having been a pastor in the state, 1909-1912, also identified with its young people's and social service work. He was called on his record, without need of preaching as a candidate, for which he is grateful. His work at Ansley will be different in many ways from that to which he has recently been given, but it is none the less important and vital. As a result of his decision to go back to Nebraska, he is busy getting ready for his contemplated flight. Rev. P. G. Van Zandt of the West Park Church, has been appointed chairman of the religious education committee in his stead and Bro. A. R. Thornton made chairman of the committee on stewardship and life service. The committee on religious education will have charge of the training school, scheduled for Jan. 15-19, 1923. Rev. J. B. Gunter is the new pastor of Calvary Church. Rev. E. Ballenger takes up the pastorate of the Terry Avenue Mission. This is a branch of the Euclid Church. Dr. W. H.

Geistweit has received a call to the pastorate of the Central Baptist Church, Toronto, Can. This congregation plans the erection of a $250,000 church building. Dr. Geistweit has been pastor of the Third Church, St. Louis, for nearly six years. He came here from San Diego, Cal.

Our Schools

Northern Baptist Theological Seminary

The board of trustees of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, through President George W. Taft, makes the following announcements:

Dr. Jacob Heinrichs, who is beginning his fifth year with the seminary as professor of systematic theology, has been elected dean of the faculty.

Rev. Walter J. Sparks has been elected vice-president and as such will be in charge of the extension campaign which the seminary is inaugurating. This campaign will be not only for publicity but also for an increased student body, an increased teaching staff, and an increased equipment.

Charles R. Holden, vice-president of the Union Trust Company, of Chicago, has been elected attorney for the seminary. Nearly ten years ago, Mr. Holden drew up the charter under which the seminary is operating.

On Monday, Nov. 13, an unnamed donor turned over to the trustees securities and cash to the value of over $125,000 for the purpose of erecting another building to be used principally for a men's dormitory. The building committee consists of Thomas J. Bolger, W. G. Brimson, J. L. Kraft, the chairman of the board of trustees, Dr. John H. Byrne, and the president of the seminary, Dr. George W. Taft. The local finance committee consists of Thomas J. Bolger, C. J. Howel, and W. G. Brimson.

The board of trustees unanimously passed the following declaration: Resolved that the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary base its teaching upon the authority of the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, upon the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, his perfect holiness, his incarnation, his atoning death and bodily resurrection and his personal return to earth.

Corner-Stone of Swasey Chapel Laid

An outstanding event among our Baptist colleges this last week was the laying of the corner-stone of Swasey Chapel, at Denison University, Granville, Ohio. The announcement of this gift at the June commencement signalized the first and most important step in the realization of the much cherished plans for the greater Denison. In the appropriate words of the donor, Dr. Ambrose Swasey, the chapel, occupying the central place in the group of new buildings, "is set apart particularly for religious services as a positive support to the ideals upon which this college was founded and which may characterize its religious life in the future."

As was becoming for such an important event careful plans had been made to mark the occasion with appropriate ceremonies. The procession from Shepardson Campus to the Baptist church, made up of alumni and students, with the seniors, faculty and trustees in full academic regalia was an imposing sight. The two addresses, one by Dr. W. S. Abernethy and the other by Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, were unusually fitting and made a profound impression. Dr. Abernethy spoke upon "Religion and the Future of Our Nation." Coming from the president's pastor his timely observations as to the vital place religion must have in the life of the nation were especially weighty. He paid tribute to the worth of the Christian college and found in the erection of such a building the indication of a determination to safeguard the religious life of Denison. The address of Dr. Woelfkin, "At Home in God's Universe," was a suggestive contribution to a Christian conception of the wonders of God's world. He indicated the place a chapel has in relation to an institution of learning and portrayed the evils of narrow-mindedness in scholastic channels. The dignified academic procession reformed and wended its way up the hill to the site of the chapel where Dr. Swasey himself conducted the ceremonies connected with the placing of the corner-stone.

The occasion was also designated as home-coming day and numerous college festivities enlivened the program, chief of which was the formal presentation of Deeds Field by the donor, Colonel E. A. Deeds. The first unit, the foot-ball section, a beautiful oval with cement bleachers and field-houses, is now completed. Experts say that this remarkable equipment cannot be surpassed in its appointments and its natural scenic grandeur. Work will be continued until all out-door athletics, both for men and women, will be abundantly and satisfactorily cared for.

The Baptists are showing their confidence in Denison by the representative and international complexion of the student body. The events of the last week are a safe indication that it is the steadfast purpose of the board of trustees and of the administration to faithfully maintain the ideals and traditions of Denison.

SWASEY CHAPEL AT DENISON UNIVERSITY

Shurtleff College

The following resolutions were adopted by the board of trustees of Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill., at their recent regular meeting: Resolved: That in the death of Hon. Francis W. Parker this board of trustees and the interests of the institution which we represent have sustained a serious loss—a loss which we share with his family, his local church, his city and the state. Ever ready by word and deed to further the cause of humanity and righteousness, whether at home or abroad, Dr. Parker has visualized to all who knew him the full spirit of the injunction to be "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

Resolved: That words of ours cannot add to the esteem in which he was held by those whose privilege it was to know the man. We shall miss his wise counsel, his ready help in such a way as circumstances required, his constant loyalty to the cause of Christian education as a fundamental element in all true evangelism. We shall miss him whose graces of character have endeared him, personally, to his colleagues on this board during the twenty-seven years of his service as a trustee of Shurtleff College.

Resolved: That to his family we extend our fullest sympathy, mourning with them the vacant chair in the family circle, and yet rejoicing with them that, having "kept the faith" and "finished his course," he has entered upon "the rest that remaineth" for the faithful ones here.

Southern Baptist Theological Seminary

Two convocations of great significance were held at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary within the last month, one the regular Missionary Day convocation at which Rev. Leonard W. Doolan of Hopkinsville, Ky., made the address and the other a special convocation for the purpose of hearing the noted Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke of London, special commissioner to Europe of Northern and Southern Baptist Conventions and British and Continental Baptist Unions.

Professor R. Inman Johnson put in a belated appearance last week following a summer in Italy where he pursued studies in music and where he met his bride, formerly Miss Louise Bave. Professor Johnson teaches elocution and music and is son of Rev. J. R. Johnson of Maryville, Tenn., and formerly of Richmond, Va.

In addition to holding many important city and country pastorates in Kentucky and Indiana, students here are divided into four groups for service of a different nature. It is estimated that over sixty per cent of the embryo ministers are taking part in some specific field of service offered in cosmopolitan Louisville.

Sixty-two of the present enrolment at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary came from seventeen states outside of the Southern Baptist Convention and thirteen came from ten foreign countries. Of these states, nearly Indiana leads with 13, while Ohio has 11, New York 9, West Virginia 8 and Illinois 7. South Africa leads foreign countries with four.

A Missionary Field Day in Philadelphia

A record-breaking attendance and unusual interest in the program and displays are items which the members of the Atlantic District of the Woman's Foreign and Home Mission Societies may remember with satisfaction as they recall their first missionary field day, held at First Church, Philadelphia, Thursday, Nov. 9. The district officers and Dr. Carter Helm Jones and his hospitable people gave all possible publicity to the event and the whole district was represented. There were especially large delegations from Washington, D. C., and from New Jersey which, added to the representative groups from the churches of Pennsylvania, filled the auditorium morning, afternoon and evening. The work on many foreign and home mission fields was presented by missionaries and general workers in the native costumes of these remote places. During the intermissions these missionaries were on duty—and very active duty—in their respective booths. The decorative backgrounds owned by the General Board of Promotion were brought on from Des Moines, Iowa, to afford appropriate settings for the various exhibits. In the evening there was a processional, in which all of the missionaries, workers and many Philadelphia members of the World Wide Guild participated. The American and Christian flags were carried by the Baptist Institute seniors. The missionaries in costume were led by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery who delivered the concluding address of the evening.

Mrs. Montgomery made a stirring appeal for loyal and united support of the well-rounded program of the denomination, laying particular stress upon its strong note of evangelism. An hour before she took the platform there was no seat vacant in the spacious auditorium. This great audience certainly was an evidence of the growing interest in the intensive work of our national missionary organizations.

The speakers of the day included: Dr. Joseph Taylor, of China; Mrs. James M. Baker and Mrs. John Dussman, India; Dr. Franklin T. Lynch, Congo; Miss Elizabeth Vickland, Assam; the Rev. A. C. Darrow, Burma; Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Haring, Japan; Miss Albertine Bischoff, Porto Rico; the Rev. A. E. Bigelow, Philippine Islands; Coe Hayne, the frontier; Mrs. H. E. Ransier, Alaska, and Miss Alice Brimson, Chicago, an expert on Americanization.

"Opium and strychnine are used as carelessly as castor oil," asserted Mrs. Baker, a missionary in India for twenty-seven years, now on furlough. She will return shortly to her station at Angola, in South India.

FOURTH CHURCH, MINNEAPOLIS

"To cure nervousness, indigestion, headaches and babies' colic, the native doctors burn the bodies of the patients to drive out the devils, which they say cause the pains. More than two millions of babies die in one year under the age of twelve months," she continued.

"Many mothers are only eight or nine years of age. Recently a child of eleven gave birth to twin babies.

"Epidemics of smallpox, bubonic plague, cholera, leprosy and influenza are constantly ravaging the country. Is it any wonder, when you consider that there is a real doctor for every 250,000,000 people, and for 155,000,000 women there are only 159 women doctors? High caste Indian and Mohammedan women are not allowed to be examined and treated by men doctors.

"It is only in the large cities that we have fully equipped hospitals. In the provinces and in the rural districts, the hospitals of the British government are in the care of apothecaries and contain few medicines and instruments, which hardly anyone knows how to use.

"The nearest doctor to where I was stationed up to three years ago lived seventy-three miles away."

The women of the Atlantic District chiefly responsible for the success of this event are Mrs. H. H. Skerrett, Germantown, Philadelphia; Mrs. George W. Doane, S. Orange, N. J.; Mrs. Ray L. Hudson, Philadelphia; Mrs. F. M. Newcomb, Philadelphia; Mrs. George H. Swift, Woodbury, N. J.; Mrs. A. L. Kenelley, Plainfield, N. J.; Mrs. Wm. E. Morris, Philadelphia; Mrs. Howard Wayne Smith, Ardmore, Pa.; Mrs. J. Francis Miller, Philadelphia; Miss Frances Langstroth, Philadelphia; Mrs. Horace Hunt, Frankford, Philadelphia.

Fourth Church, Minneapolis, Dedicated

Sunday, Nov. 5, was an eventful day in the history of the Fourth Church of Minneapolis. The whole day was devoted to a series of services in which their beautiful new edifice, located at the corner of Fremont and 21st Avenues North, was dedicated.

Sermons were preached in the morning by Rev. J. W. Lawrence and in the afternoon by Rev. W. B. Riley. At the dedicatory service the seating capacity of the building was taxed to the utmost and messages of greeting were brought by representatives of other denominations, Rev. J. J. Runyan, superintendent of the Minneapolis Baptist Union, Dr. Robert Earl, president of the St. Paul Baptist Union, Mr. F. K. Pratt and Rev. E. H. Rasmussen, president and secretary, respectively of the Minnesota Baptist Convention. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison and Albert Scott of the General Board of Promotion. Special music was rendered by an augmented choir.

The Fourth Church, which was organized forty-one years ago, has a membership of 795. The erection of the present building was begun in 1918 and as soon as the lower auditorium was completed the congregation moved in and has worshipped there until the present. The completed building represents an expenditure of $83,000, of which all but about $15,000 has been paid, and the remainder is more than covered by good subscriptions, so that no appeal was made for funds on dedication day. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 800 and by opening the prayer room, which is upon the same level, 900 can easily be accommodated. The form, the decorations, the art glass, the pews, the electric lights, the enlarged and remodeled pipe organ, give to it a distinct attractiveness. The lower auditorium will be divided into class rooms and these with those contained in the three-story north wing will provide excellent, though not adequate, equipment for the rapidly growing Bible school. The erection of an addition to accommodate the Sunday school is planned for in a couple of years.

Immediately following the dedication service, the church entered upon an evangelistic campaign led by Dr. J. W. Lawrence.

Rev. W. E. Loucks, the beloved pastor, who has served this church efficiently for fourteen years, is to be congratulated upon the completion of this splendid house of worship.

The Congo Conference

By A. V. WAKEMAN

Sona Bata Station had the pleasure of entertaining the annual Congo Conference, which was held Sept. 19-24. Sixteen delegates attended, representing five stations. Kimpese has no missionaries at present and Ntondo was not able to send any one, so these two stations were not represented. For many weeks we had been praying for a Spirit-filled and guided conference, and our prayers were answered. There was manifested throughout a spirit of unity and in the most puzzling problems to be solved, we felt the Divine mind leading. With Mr. Metzger of Tshumbiri as chairman, a great amount of work was accomplished in the five days.

One of the most stirring hours of the conference was the session when requests were made for new missionaries. For years Sona Bata has been pleading for a doctor and though there is none in sight, we are in faith asking for one this year and also for an industrialist. The climax of the session came when Dr. Leslie made the requests for the great new work at Vanga. Though the field is large, most of it is visited every two months. Dr. Leslie, in order to make every moment count, does not rest during the heat of the day, which is the custom in the tropics, but presses on to the next post in the hottest part of the day. Thus he makes a two weeks' trip in ten days. Mr. and Mrs. Nugent travel early in the morning and late in the evening, and though their porters object, they insist on this way of saving time. Now that Mr. and Mrs. Nugent are leaving on their furlough, Dr. and Mrs. Leslie will be left with all the educational, evangelistic and medical work. Vanga didn't ask to be first on the list of requests but asks that Noanza, one of the outposts, have the next missionary family. A native, Mpambu, has built up a fine work and is holding it at fearful odds. Dr. Leslie asked that the conference spend a few minutes in prayer for new workers to fill the present great needs of our field. Surely it is God's will that our ranks should be better filled.

The conference was very thankful for the coming of Mr. Korling, our new treasurer. This makes it possible for Mr. and Mrs. Clark to return to the work they love so well at Ntondo, which they have so sacrificially given up for more than a year to be at Matadi. We look forward with gratitude to the coming of four new workers the first part of the year. We thank God for these harvesters he has sent and for the prospects of others yet to come, so that his work can be manned in a manner pleasing to himself.

The Congo work as a whole has prospered. There have been large increases in membership and the Sona Bata revival continues. There has been considerable building and many improvements of property during the past year. Steady gains toward self-support have been made and by frugality we have been able to increase our reserve fund. New fields are opening up and there are innumerable demands for teachers. We are anxious to go into nearby unevangelized sections and "possess the land." With full cooperation in the homeland, we are not able to predict what great things will be done for his kingdom in the Congo Basin.

size or location, rarely have the privilege of hearing a missionary and feel that they can have little part in the denominational program.

Rev. Charles Coffin Tilley

The death of Rev. Charles Coffin Tilley, at the New England Baptist Hospital, Boston, removes one of the ablest and most honored of the Maine pastors.

Born in Sidney, Maine, Jan. 12, 1850, the son of Rev. William and Elisabeth Amsbury Tilley, he fitted for college at Waterville Classical Institute, and after an honorable career at Colby, was graduated in the class of 1876. The year of his graduation he was married to Miss Lydia S. Rathbun, of Providence, R. I., who, with two sons and a daughter, survives him. He was ordained at Nobleboro, Maine, in August, 1876, and served that church for a short time until his going to Newton. After leaving Newton he had pastorates at Fairfield, St. George, Foxcroft, and Lewiston, rendering a very important service in each field. From Lewiston he was called to Bridgeton, New Jersey, where he strongly led that strong church for seven years. Seven years more were given to the church at Hyde Park, Mass., five to Matapan, three to Damarisco, Maine, three to Quincy, Mass., one and one-half to West Harpswell, Maine, and after four and one-half years he finished his ministry in the Jefferson church that had licensed him to preach just fifty years before.

A great company came together for the funeral in Jefferson, Nov. 9, which was conducted by a friend of many years, Dr. E. C. Whittemore, of Waterville.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE FIRST SUNDAY IN NOVEMBER was the anniversary of the first year of the pastorate of Rev. C. P. MacGregor at the First Church, Manchester. The year has been one of much encouragement; 143 new members have been added to the church, nearly 100 of these by baptism; 160 new members have come into the Sunday school. A fine spirit of cooperation, always characteristic of this church, has continued.

THE MERRIMACK STREET CHURCH OF Manchester regrets the departure of pastor Rev. B. R. Harris. The work of Mr. Harris during his five years with this church has been very successful. Mr. and Mrs. Harris both needed rest, which they are taking at their country home in Bradford.

THE CHURCHES AT NORTH SUTTON and Sutton have secured as pastor Mr. George H. Walton, a graduate of Newton Theological Institution. It is expected that Mr. Walton will be ordained soon.

THE AFFAIRS OF THE HUDSON CHURCH are prospering under pastor C. T. Reekie. The church recently voted an increase in the salary and also presented Mr. Reekie with a purse of $81.

TWELVE PASTORS ARE NEEDED in the state to fill vacant pastorates at the present time.

VERMONT

ON SUNDAY, OCT. 29, FIRST CHURCH, Brattleboro, Dr. Clark T. Brownell, pastor, showed appreciation of Mr. and Mrs. Luther W. Hawley, who have been active workers in the church for more than fifty years. On Saturday evening, Oct. 28, Mr. and Mrs. Hawley celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at their home, when more than sixty persons called to extend felicitations and present gifts. Deacon and Mrs. Hawley were

MAINE

ABOUT HALF-WAY BETWEEN Portland and Westbrook is Glenwood Square, a rapidly growing community, without church building or organization. For a time a Sunday school was maintained there by the Portland churches; the sale of the building in which it had been held made it necessary to close the school. Feeling that this was not a move in the right direction, a lot was purchased by the convention on which a building could be erected that should serve for Sunday school, community and church purposes. To have charge of the matter the Baptist Extension Council of Portland, of which Rev. J. Harrison Thompson of the First Church is president, was formed. The council solicited money, the convention pledged "dollar for dollar," and as a result, a neat and commodious building for Sunday school and social purposes has been erected. This building was opened Sunday, Nov. 5. Rev. A. B. Lorimer preached the sermon, Mr. C. S. Emery made report from the building committee, and the address of dedication was given by Dr. I. B. Mower, executive secretary of the United Baptist Convention of Maine. There is no church organization in the place. Sunday school, and other religious services will be maintained, and it is hoped that a center for the social and religious activities of the community will be provided.

REV. H. A. CLARK, lately of Danforth, has accepted the call of the Gardiner Church, and is beginning his work under favorable conditions.

EFFORT IS MADE TO CARRY the missionary gospel and the denominational program to every church in the state. To this end Director Whittemore has had the aid of missionaries A. S. Adams, George H. Waters, and Miss Clarissa Allen Hewey, in holding conferences and in addressing the local churches which, on account of presented with $100 in gold, and also with two gold cloth sofa pillows and with many other useful and ornamental gifts. Mr. Hawley has been the superintendent of the Bible school for thirty-seven years and Mrs. Hawley a teacher. On Sunday each of the children in the primary and beginners' departments presented Mr. and Mrs. Hawley with a large, yellow chrysanthemum.

THE NORTH SPRINGFIELD CHURCH has sustained a wellnigh irreparable loss through the death of Hon. Fred G. Field, on Thursday, Nov. 2. Mr. Field has represented the town of Springfield three times in the state legislature, was county senator for one term, state inspector of finance for two terms, a member of the Board of Directors of the Union Fire Insurance Company, Montpelier, one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank and Trust Company at Springfield, for about twenty-five years president of the National Bank at Springfield, trustee of Vermont Academy for twenty-seven years and treasurer for over twenty years. He loaned money to individuals and, failing to get the money, took a mortgage on property; failing to realize on that, he burned many a mortgage. He was treasurer of the church and an all-round church-worker. For years it had been his custom to give $1 at Christmas time to every scholar in the Bible school who had been present every Sunday during the year; 50 cents to those who had missed only one Sabbath and a new ten-cent piece to every child present on that day. He will be sorely missed, not only by his beloved wife, who for fifty years had been his companion and helpmate, but also by his daughter, Miss Bertha I. Field, a faithful worker in the church and Bible school, and by the son, Fred T. Field, now a leading worker in the First Church of Cambridge, Mass., a member of the Board of Trustees of Brown University and a leader in many other of state and national organizations, as well as by a large host of friends throughout the state and nation. The funeral was held on Monday afternoon, Nov. 6, when Governor Hartness, Ex-Governor William W. Stickney, the directors of the banks and trustees of Vermont Academy and many other representative citizens of Vermont were present to pay their respect to the genuine worth and work of Mr. Field. The pastor of the church, Rev. E. C. Weeks, conducted the service, the eulogy and closing prayer being delivered by Dr. W. A. Davison, an intimate friend of the family for the past twenty-five years.

THE FAIRFAX CHURCH has secured a pastor in the person of Rev. George W. Russell, formerly of Vermont but more recently of New Hampshire. Pastor and people are cooperating heartily. A Christian Endeavor Society has been organized. All bills are paid and a balance is in the treasury with which to start the new year.

NEW YORK

UNDER THE LEADERSHIP of E. LeROY Dakin, pastor of Brooklyn Temple the fall and winter work of that church is opening in a promising manner. Large congregations gather to hear Dr. Dakin proclaim Christ as the one great need of the present day and hour. In addition to new members joining by baptism or letter, scores of those who have been out of active touch with the church for years have returned. The prayer meetings are well sustained and attract visitors from all parts of the city. A new office has been created, that of minister of stewardship. The Baptist Temple is thought to be the first church in America to have such an office. Among the assistants to Dr. Dakin in the work of the Temple are Milton M. McGorriß, director of education, J. Wesley Gould, minister of stewardship, Cornelius Van Rees, director of music and Miss Myra C. Carter, secretary.

THE FLEMING CHURCH is in the midst of a gracious revival under the leadership of T. J. Milton Haines, of Alleghany. Large congregations are in attendance and many are inquiring the way of salvation. The church property is being given a coat of paint.

OVER 500 SAT DOWN TO THE annual roll-call supper of Tabernacle Church, Utica. Dr. Cutten, president of Colgate University, spoke on "Selling the Gospel." Sixty-five members have been added to the church since the coming of Dr. Bleakney to Tabernacle. The program for 1922-23 includes the adoption of the group plan of church organization, church letter Sunday, stewardship Sunday (163 signed cards), opening of a week-day school of religion for children nine to twelve, a nursery during the morning service and a junior congregation. A week-day night school has been opened. Mrs. Vickery will give six lectures on India, six weeks' Bible study will be given; the following six weeks will include a study of evangelism, preparing for the resumption of personal evangelism from January to Easter.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF BUFFALO had its centennial celebration Oct. 15-20. The occasion was all that could be desired in attendance and enthusiasm. Faithful preparation had been made by the anniversary committee under the leadership of Mr. Volney P. Kinne. Among those on the program were Rev. Chas. Colman, Rev. John Gordon and Rev. H. Wyse Jones, former pastor; Rev. Samuel Russell, present pastor; Dr. A. W. Beaven and Mrs. W. A. Montgomery. The church is perfectly united under the leadership of Dr. Russell who is entering upon his fourth year in Buffalo. During the past three years, the mortgage on the church property has been reduced from $28,000 to $10,000, and this balance is all subscribed. More than $5,000 has been spent on church repairs and money is pledged to redecorate the interior and put on a new roof. The church has now a parsonage which is occupied by the pastor and his family. The present membership is 572. During the one hundred years 4,580 persons have united with the church. A campaign is now on to add 100 new members by June 1 and increase the attendance at all the services.

NEW JERSEY

RIDGEWOOD, EMMANUEL, DR. THOMAS H. Sprague, pastor, held its thirty-first anniversary dinner and annual meeting on Thursday evening, Nov. 16. On Sunday, Nov. 5, over $450 was received for Smyrna Emergency Relief Fund. Four boxes have been forwarded for the "Rush a ship to Russia," the value being estimated at about $800. Miss Emma Ellison, formerly connected with the Training School for Christian Workers in Philadelphia was a recent speaker at a "Woman's Night" service. Sunday, Nov. 19, Dr. Eleanor Campbell of the Judson Health Center of New York spoke in the church. The men's fellowship club held a dinner recently which was the occasion of an address by Dr. A. Ray Petty of the Judson Church. 130 new members have been received into the membership of the church since the pastor came. For the last denominational fiscal year over $13,000 was paid to the New World Movement.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

UNDER THE LEADERSHIP of Rev. Havard Griffith, who has been on this field since June, First Church, Monongahela, is going forward to better and larger things. A teacher training class of thirty members taught by the pastor, has just taken the first examination. Another class is studying during the Sunday-school hour. Since the coming of Mr. Griffith the church has purchased new hymn books, a new organ and a large illuminated bulletin board. The church is now undergoing repairs to the extent of about $1000. The financial half year shows all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. Nearly fifty tithers have signed cards in the past few weeks and others will be added to this list. The Sunday school has reached an attendance of over 400 and gives promise of a fine winter's work.

WEST VIRGINIA

WEDNESDAY EVENING, Nov. 1, marked a significant step forward in the history of First Church of Morgantown. For some time this church has been considering relocating and building a structure commensurate with its rapidly growing needs. With the coming of Pastor Rev. Oren H. Baker, a May graduate of the Rochester Theological Seminary, the project took on a new meaning. As a result of careful study and survey the church voted on Nov. 1, to move from its present location. A splendid corner site, 150x125 has been purchased at a cost of $65,000. This is the initial step toward the erection of a modern building which will take care of the increasing number of Baptist people residing in the city as well as provide facilities for a large student constituency. Morgantown is a city of 15,000, and the seat of West Virginia University, an institution enrolling approximately 2000 students. The estimated cost of the new church plant is $215,000. No steps toward the erection of the building will be taken during the next year, although within that time it is expected that all plans will fully mature.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

DR. L. S. COLBURN is closing his labors with the Price Hill Church, Cincinnati, and will move immediately to Columbus.

REV. SAMUEL S. DENNY, widely and favorably known in Central and Southern Ohio, entered into rest and reward Oct. 31, following an illness of a few days. He had been in the Baptist ministry for more than fifty years and had baptized over 2000 converts. His memory will endure many future years. Funeral services were conducted by Dr. Charles H. Stull in the Springfield Church, Bidwell, Nov. 2, and were remarkable for the number of people present and the evidences of sorrow and appreciation on every hand.

MR. J. T. ARNOLD, the last of the charter members of the Riley Creek Church, died Oct. 29, at the age of 81. Mr. Arnold had been a member of this church over 50 years. He was a pioneer in this country and for many years a leader in the religious life of the community. Rev. John Longnecker is the pastor serving full time while he is attending college at Findley. Riley Creek is one of the best country churches in this part of the state.

MICHIGAN

THE FIRST OF A SERIES of winter's get acquainted suppers and entertainments was held at the West Baptist Church, Bay City, on Friday evening, Nov. 10, when 300 people sat down to a splendid and plentifully provided supper in the church parlor. The supper and entertainment were arranged by the Baptist Young People's Union. Rev. Charles Scott is pastor.

ON NOV. 9 OCCURRED THE LAYING of the corner-stone of the new church building of the Fountain Street Church, Grand Rapids. A banquet at 6:30 was one of the features of the occasion. At this time addresses were given by Dr. G. B. Cutten, president, Colgate University, on "Education and Religion" and Dr. H. L. Willett, of the University of Chicago, on "The Church in the New Age." The building is to cost $700,000.

REV. H. P. HOSKINS has completed his work at Portland where he filled the Baptist pulpit as a supply during the summer months. During his short stay here he won the love and esteem of the entire congregation. He will again take up the work of an evangelist which will take him all over the country.

REV. HARRY C. GRIMES closed his work at Stanton on Oct. 29, to reenter the evangelistic field. He may be addressed at Ceresco, Mich.

ON OCT. 24, AT THE MIKADO CHURCH Wm. J. Spiers, who has been pastor for two years, was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry. Rev. John Pearson was moderator and Rev. H. E. McGrath clerk. Rev. I. M. Compton preached the sermon. Delegates from churches in the Alpena association were present.

THE BUILDING OF THE First Church, Battle Creek, was badly damaged by fire of unknown origin in the early morning of Oct. 18. When discovered, the blaze was so well under way it seemed likely the whole structure would go, but prompt and efficient work of the fire department confined the flames to the primary room where the fire started. The auditorium, which had but recently been redecorated, was so damaged by smoke and water, that the services on the following Sunday were held in the Y. W. C. A. gymnasium. The loss of about $6,000 is covered by insurance. At the covenant meeting Wednesday evening, Nov. 1, a reconstruction committee was appointed, with instructions to investigate and report on the feasibility of erecting an addition to the building, that will provide a suitable plan for the various boys' clubs to carry on their activities and also furnish much needed room for the Sunday school. The lack of a plan of this kind has been a serious hindrance to the development of the work among the older boys and now that extensive repairs must be made, it seems wise to make this improvement at the same time, if possible. Sunday, Nov. 5, Rev. Stewart B. Crandell began his sixth year as pastor. The untiring zeal and cheerful optimism of Brother Crandell and his faithful wife have won for them a large place in the hearts of the people, as was evidenced by the many tokens of love that served to brighten the occasion. The entire front of the platform was banked with flowers, and at the close of the evening service, the whole "family" gathered around Mr. and Mrs.

Crandell to express their love and appreciation.

Rev. James Bartlett Edmonson

James Bartlett Edmonson was born at Winchester, Ill., on August 19, 1851, and died at his home in Ann Arbor, Oct. 11. In his childhood his parents removed to Bloomfield, Iowa, making the trip by wagon. His father was admitted to the practice of law in Iowa the same year. Mr. Edmonson united with the Baptist Church in Bloomfield when about fifteen years of age. Besides his early education at home and in the public schools, he was for some time a student at Shurtleff College, and later attended the old University of Chicago. The memories and friendships of college days were kept bright to the last weeks of his life. Mr. Edmonson preached his first sermon, May 25, 1873, at his home church in Bloomfield and not long after was called to the pastorate of this church. Tireless in effort he engaged frequently in fruitful evangelistic service, traveling muddy roads on foot, and experiencing the hardships of the pioneer. Among other pastorates of a nearly forty-five years' ministry in Iowa were those at Hampton, Storm Lake, Vinton and Knoxville. His last settled pastorate was with the First Church, Hillsdale, at the close of which he removed to Ann Arbor. For the past three years he was acting pastor of the Cook's Prairie Church, where he preached his last sermon on July 2. His illness was of about three months' duration. On Feb. 2, 1878, he was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Jane Sloan at Bloomfield, Iowa, and of this union were born five children, all of whom, with the mother, survive. They are: Robert Edmonson, Kansas City, Mo.; James B. Edmonson, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor; William Edmonson, Cleveland; Ruth Edmonson, Ann Arbor; and Mrs. Naomi Peckham, Flint, Mich. Funeral services were held at the home, Friday, Oct. 13, and were participated in by Rev. Howard R. Chapman, Rev. R. Edward Sayles and Rev. Arthur L. Wilkinson. Burial was at Ann Arbor.

WHEN IN 1918, FORTY of the leading members of the First Church of La

Baptist Church was born. It has since been known as a church of prayer. Its quite remarkable success since September, 1919, when it was organized with a new name and with new officers, has been due chiefly to this one factor. The pastor, Rev. Eaton B. Freeman, was called to the work here immediately upon his return from "Y" work over seas. A spirit of earnest cooperation has been characteristic of the church. The charter membership was closed Jan. 1, 1920 with 99 members. Today the members number 230. In the three years there have been but few communion services when new members were not welcomed into the church. The church has the confidence and strong moral support of the whole community and all the churches. It has earned the distinction of being the most active church in La Grange; the most hospitable and the church with the most workers. The church building, altogether inadequate, is a veritable workshop. Every available space is in use on Sundays for Sunday school purposes. Even the coal bin in the basement has been converted into a class room. The summer time is no exception to "activity." This church was the first in all the West district of Chicago to put on a daily vacation Bible school. Now the other churches cooperate in a community school each year. There is no wealth in the membership of the church, yet for the past two years the treasurer has had passed through his hands $10,000 each year. It made its apportionment in the New World Movement and is doing well in meeting its yearly dues on the same. Today the church is committed to the proposition of erecting a new church plant in two units at a cost of something like $125,000. The first unit, the church auditorium, is to be built during 1923 according to present plans. Dr. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Chicago Baptist Executive Council, has been secured to direct the campaign for funds, Dec. 3-10. Preceding this effort the church is committed to a spiritual campaign under the leadership of evangelist Dr. George R. Stair, Nov. 13-26.

IOWA

AFTER HAVING BEEN WITH THE Winterset Church for four years, Rev. G. D. Rogers has accepted a call to Waverly. Winterset is now pastorless. C. R. Peters is chairman of the pulpit committee.

REV. H. B. COX OF HANNIBAL, Mo., has accepted the call to the pastorate of Calvary Baptist Church, Davenport, and began his work there on Sunday, Nov. 12. Mr. Cox has been pastor of the leading Baptist church in Hannibal for the past four years and has served successfully in three other Baptist churches.

THREE DAYS, OCT. 22, 27 AND 29 were devoted to the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of First Church, Creston, Rev. J. H. Woodsum, pastor. The First Church of Creston is a product of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, organized by Rev. W. P. Pattison, Oct. 27, 1872, with thirteen members under the auspices of the society. For almost ten years the church met in the homes of its members and public halls. In 1881 the present location was secured and its first house of worship erected the following year at an expense of about $4,500. This house was used for a period of about twenty-four years. In 1906, under the leadership of Rev. Wm. Gaston, it was decided to build a more modern and larger building. The anniversary exercises were followed by an evangelistic campaign with revival meetings in progress Nov. 12-26. Rev. H. R. Best, pastor of Forest Ave. Church, is the evangelist with Mrs. Best leading the singing. These meetings are a part of an associational campaign of simultaneous evangelistic meetings. Rev. Ray E. York, of Iowa City, is the director.

MINNESOTA

THE REGULAR AUTUMN MEETING of the Women's Baptist Mission Union of Minneapolis was held at Trinity Church, Wednesday, Nov. 8 with about 300 women in attendance. Mrs. C. N. Patterson, the new president of the organization presided. Principal addresses were given by Miss Lavinia Mead, of Asaka, Japan, Miss Elsie Kappen and Mrs. A. E. Jenks. Music was in charge of Mrs. C. C. Aller and Mrs. W. M. Smith sang a group of Negro spirituals. A unique feature of the program was an original jingle by Mrs. Patterson entitled: "Campaign Calisthenics," sung by the audience. Officers of the Woman's Baptist Union are: President, Mrs. C. N. Patterson, University Church; first vice-pres., Mrs. W. S. Barrett Fourth Church; second vice-pres., Mrs. A. J. Wingblade, Elim Swedish Church; third vice-pres., Mrs. M. W. Hovey, First Church; rec. sec'y, Mrs. W. S. Hitchcock, Lake Harriet Church; cor. sec'y, Mrs. Everett C. Jones, Judson Mem. Church; treas., Mrs. J. F. Kruse, University Church.

NEBRASKA

THE FIRST UNIT OF THE OLIVET Church building, Omaha, was dedicated Sunday, Nov. 5. It has a field separate from any other Baptist church. The basement of the new building is called Social Hall, and is equipped for gymnasium, pictures and all social functions of the church life. The first floor will be used for an auditorium and is large enough to accommodate the present congregation. The top floor is divided into rooms adapted to a modern Sunday school. Dr. Geo. Van Winkle became pastor of Olivet Church Jan. 1, 1919. He had served the South Side Church thirteen years as pastor. The Olivet people were then worshipping in a little frame building which they have used for thirty years, and were getting help from the state convention to support a pastor. At the first annual meeting they raised the pastor's salary and voted to become self-supporting. A building committee was appointed and in a few months Dr. F. H. Devine came to help raise money. The church knew its needs but thought a building costing $7,000 or $8,000 would be all it could hope for. Dr. Devine gave us a vision of a $60,000 building to be built in two units, and proceeded to raise $25,000 in pledges covering five-years' time. Two years and a half have elapsed and more than 50 per cent of the total pledges have been collected. The first unit just dedicated will cost $40,000. Under the leadership of Dr. S. P. Shaw the membership of the church renewed pledges for five years from date and the $15,000 is provided for. The church does not give suppers or use any clap-trap methods of raising money, nor does it have any wealthy members. We greatly appreciate the service of Dr. F. H. Devine and Dr. S. P. Shaw. If they or the societies they represent had given us outright the $40,000 it could not have done us the good which their presence and inspiration gave us. The second unit will be erected when the church outgrows the present quarters.

DURING THE WEEK OF the fifth anniversary of Dr. and Mrs. C. L. Trawin's pastorate of the McMinnville Church, their son, Charles Frederick, aged nineteen years, was killed by coming in contact with a charged wire from the street lighting system. Never before has the church been so deeply moved or so closely drawn together in loving fellowship. Pastor Trawin conducted his own services anniversary Sunday, preaching in the morning on, "After the Death of Moses," and in the evening on, "The Hands of Jesus." Dr. Trawin has held pastorates in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Idaho and Oregon where many friends are remembering the family in loving sympathy.

When The Clouds Broke

AN interesting thing occurred in the Baptist Church at Bloomington, Ind., a few Sundays ago. Dr. Allyn K. Foster was spending a few days in the town and had finished preaching at the morning service. No invitation was given and the hymn was being sung, when a sophomore of the university came forward to the pulpit. The pastor, Rev. R. C. Speer, on speaking to her, learned that she had then and there decided to make a public profession of faith in Christ. The incident was so simple, and yet withal so deep and significant, that all present felt the thrill of it. The young woman declared that she had had a hard struggle, but things finally became clear during that service.

"The Foreign Mission Society's warehouse in Brooklyn reported at the close of business, Wednesday, Nov. 15, that approximately 4,000 packages, bags, boxes and barrels, had been received, containing clothing and other garments for distribution in Russia. Already 338 bales have been packed and are awaiting transportation to the steamship pier. Nearly eight tons of goods with the value of more than $12,000 are on the way through the Panama Canal, having been sent by the Baptists of Southern California. The Luckenbach Steamship Company has generously donated all transportation charges from Los Angeles to New York, thereby expressing its own sympathetic interest in this project of coming to the relief of suffering humanity in Russia.

WANTED: An Experienced Executive

An organization having contacts with all the Protestant denominations is looking for an Executive in its promotional department to assist in the extension and strengthening of its church program. He must be able to handle office detail with the aid of an efficient staff—must be able to secure and develop through correspondence mainly the service of official committees in these various denominations and their state and local organizations. He must be a forceful speaker before public gatherings and be effective in smaller conferences and committees where the organization's cause must be frequently presented. Will be located in New York, but must travel widely in the United States during a part of the year.

In writing give age and describe fully previous experience and minimum salary requirements. Address

The Judge, by Rebecca West. New York: Doran. $2.50.

A strong book but not a pleasing one, except as Miss West's choice phrasing, vivid description and apt simile give delight. She deals with basic themes and pictures primitive facts—too realistically at times. In places the movement of the principal trend of the story is so slow as to be tedious. The climax is a triple tragedy.

Spiritual Energies In Daily Life, by Rufus M. Jones. New York: Macmillan. $1.50.

Professor Jones, well-known as the writer of books and articles on the spiritual life, has produced in his latest work a companion volume to "The Inner Life," and "The World Within." By a keen analytical process the author has outlined the various energies of his religious life, and then in his pleasing style has set forth the discussions of them. "You must own this book," says the publisher; the one who does own it will have a volume that will be suggestive of many things in the field of the mystical and spiritual.

"The Cross and the Garden" by F. W. Norwood. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50.

A volume of sermons preached in the City Temple, London. Subject, material and form are attractive, suggestive and appealing. The author departs from conventional methods. He strives to "preach the everlasting gospel with eyes and heart wide open to the facts of life. These sermons are so many sparks struck off from the anvil of experience." Our younger preachers will especially welcome the help of this book.

"Old Testament History" by Frank K. Sanders. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

This is the first of a series of concise handbooks for those who desire a proper foundation for the more detailed study of the Bible and related subjects. Each volume complete in itself contains twelve chapters. While the treatment of the subject is brief, its very brevity makes it usable by the busy person who wants the essential facts in untechnical terms.

One Thing Is Certain, by Sophie Kerr. New York: Doran. $1.90.

A vivid, accurate and picturesque account of the eastern shore farmers of Maryland is given in this novel of Sophie Kerr's. Although local in color it is not so in spirit. Lovell West is the primary character around whom the story is built. She loves one man and marries another. Trite in plot it may seem, but the handling of the story raises it above any such condemnation. Some of Miss Kerr's chapters are exquisite in their description of the intimacies of the home life of the section and the generation portrayed. It is a book worth reading—not skimming.

"The Confessions of an Old Priest" by Rev. S. D. McConnell. New York: Macmillan. $1.25.

There is something pathetic about this book. One cannot read it without seeing the man who has spent fifty years and has been honorably retired from active service only to grope in the mist of uncertainty. Throughout the volume one may catch glimpses of the ghost of Strauss. He has come to his conclusions gradually and has remained silent because he wanted to be "sure" before speaking. The book sets forth the stages in his loss of faith in the Bible. In his own words, "I entered the ministry with enthusiasm, believing as I did that the church was the one organization in the world of divine institution, that it owes its origin to Jesus Christ, and that he was the unique Son of God. I have been reluctantly led to the conclusion that none of these things is true."

Slater was absorbed in the evening paper when his young son's crying disturbed him.

"What is that child howling for now?" he demanded, irritably.

"He wants his own way," said Mrs. Slater.

"Well," argued Slater, absent-mindedly, as his eye fell on a particularly interesting item, "if it's his, why don't you let him have it?"

A crowded motor car was spinning along a mountain road in Colorado. Suddenly as it swung round a curve the highly strung passenger who was sitting next the driver realized that less than twenty yards away was a hair-pin bend down a sharp hill. He looked at the driver, wondering whether he dared ask him a question. It was a deathtrap; he was terrified; he had to say something to keep his nerve. "Do people lose their lives here frequently?" he asked.

"Not more than once," said the driver as he took a firmer grip of the wheel.

OUT OF JOINT WITH THE MORAL ORDER

By

Rev. Andrew W. Archibald, D.D.

The thought of each chapter in this book, the author's seventh, is based on some Scriptural phrase or incident, while upon the superstructure light is made to play from historical, literary and classical sources. Such novel captions as Half-Baked People and The Marathon Run cover entirely serious discussions. While designed for the general reader, the volume is yet particularly suitable for Bible and Pastors' classes and for the interdenominational January to Easter plan of parish evangelism.

The Congregationalist: "Scholarly, popular and enlightening. Out of a wealth of rich personal experience, and out of prolific historical reading Dr. Archibald has made the book such a copious treasury of apt and forceful illustration as must give it great value. Each chapter may constitute the fruitful theme for the mid-week meeting. The treatment of the unique captions, while suggestive and inspiring to the preacher, is so simply vital and attractive to every reader, and prices so keenly and humorously the many airy fallacies of the times that none can read the book without great profit."

Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Ph.D., D.D., Park Street Church, Boston: "A strikingly interesting book full of the practical wisdom that warns and rebukes discord, but also sanctifies, sweetens and harmonizes life. It is most readable, spiritually suggestive, intellectually stimulating. It abounds in historical illustrations, moving metaphors and graphic portrayals of vital truths. An ideal gift for young people, and valuable for all who would know the secret of living well."

I am reprinting from the official circular of this organization a few pertinent facts, presenting a somewhat novel viewpoint on the work of such a club. Apply this as an estimate to your own neighborhood, and see if you have not means at hand to in some measure apply a like stimulus to the local musical culture. There are few Apollo clubs, there are even fewer Harrison Wilds, but there are plenty of local choirs needing support and backing, there are neighborhood choral clubs asking for aid. For the cultivation of a love for music and an appreciation of an increasingly better grade of it, I would unreservedly recommend more and better choral singing. It would react on our church music, on the congregational singing, on the grade of music demanded by our churches—in every way it would be a dynamic force for good.

Below is the list of concerts of the Apollo Club for this season, together with the items of interest spoken of above.

The Concerts

Nov. 6, "Ruth," Schumann: Margaret Lester, soprano; Leah Pratt, contralto; Walter Greene and René S. Lund, baritone. Dec. 24, "Messiah," Handel: Muriel M. Kyle, soprano; Eva Horadesky, contralto; Robert Quait, tenor; John Barclay, bass. Feb. 26, "Mass in B Minor," Bach: Elsie Harthan Arendt, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Arthur Boardman, tenor; Herbert Gould, bass. April 9, "Swan and Skylark," Thomas; "Stabat Mater," "Te Deum," Verdi: Elsa Kressman, soprano; Jennie Johnson, contralto; Eugene Dressler, tenor; Arthur Ranous, baritone.

The Points Made

Do you know—That the Apollo Club was the first musical organization in Chicago after the fire of 1871, and the only one to survive for fifty years? That it first brought the Thomas Orchestra to Chicago and that the history of our Symphony Orchestra dates from that time? That it has participated in practically all events of importance in Chicago's history, one of the earliest being the dedication of Central Music Hall, and more recently the World's Fair concerts? That the Apollo Musical Club has for many years been the one organization to give local and American soloists an adequate public appearance? That it has brought to Chicago all the great concert and oratorio singers of the last fifty years? That many great oratorios have been given a world première by the Apollo Club? That it has developed hundreds of choir directors and soloists from its own ranks and, with its director, has been the practical training school for a large percentage of organists and choir directors of note in Chicago? That the clergy of all denominations recognize it as a dominant factor for good, because of the religious uplift brought about by its presentation of great works of religious and semi-religious nature? That credits are frequently allowed by music schools to those who have passed the Apollo Musical Club examination, and have had the advantage of its training? That the Apollo Club has developed a love and appreciation for the best in music throughout Chicago? That students join the ranks to gain a needed musicianship and become familiar with the works of the old masters? Professional singers join for the routine and added finish which comes with a broader perspective. Those interested in choirs enlist to learn how to handle groups of singers, and hundreds enroll for the sheer pleasure derived from ensemble singing of the best things in the best way. That our great industrial institutions consider music an asset to business efficiency, and have added it to their welfare department?

MUSIC REVIEW

From J. Fischer & Bro., New York.

Traditional Christmas Carols—

.....arr. by McKinney

A splendid set of old carols set for two and three-part women's voices, with organ or piano accompaniment. The last few years have seen a genuine revival of interest in these old melodies—an interest which cannot fail to be an elevating and purifying factor in the evolution of devotional music. The musical settings of these beloved tunes are high grade and the edition is printed in fine style.

From The Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago

A Shepherd's Song.....Michel
Would God I were the tender apple blossom.....arr. Weidig

For an easy, effective four-part jolly chorus the Michel number is to be recommended; it is a bucolic setting of the famous poem by Marlowe. Its titled purpose is for high-school chorus use; its brightness and cheer will make it welcome on any choral program. The Weidig arrangement of the old Irish air from Londonderry is well done for four-part chorus of women's voices. The hand of the practised composer is everywhere evident.

A Giving Christmas.....Schroll-Fillmore

Two necessities for the coming season. The first is a book of seasonal poems, many of them with directions for appropriate action. It is numbered 25. Most Sunday schools celebrate the Christmas Sunday with special services. The service titled last above will be certain to give much pleasure and profit on such occasions. The music is full of variety and the poems are of unusual interest. It may be used for young people's societies also.

From The Hall-Mack Co., Philadelphia.

The Treble Clef Choir.
Gloria.

Above are listed the titles of two valuable books of anthems for chorus choirs. The first is a collection of numbers for two-part women's chorus (available also for duets), three-part selections for chorus or trio, and four-part anthems for chorus or quartet. The music is easy, but good and attractive. A wide field of usefulness is open to this volume. The second volume listed is for mixed voices and contains easy anthems, largely of a praise nature, though giving good representation to the quieter devotional type. A constant supply of new and inspiring music is one of the greatest factors in developing and encouraging interest in the church choir. The two collections named above have value in that way.

DEAGAN TOWER CHIMES

The music of Deagan Tower Chimes reaches out to unseen thousands, bearing a sublime message of peace and good will.

Whether in the ritual of the service, or in playing the old time favorite hymns, the solemn, beautiful tones of Deagan Tower Chimes will serve the community for generations, acting as a benediction and blessing—a constant call to worship.

Fresh From the Field

The Garnett Street Mexican Church of Los Angeles has been received into the brotherhood of Baptist churches as a regularly constituted Baptist church.

Miss Evelyn E. Simons, working under the Woman's Home Mission Society in the Negro community center in Cleveland, is about to leave this field in order to prepare herself for missionary work in Africa. Her life has been dedicated to this purpose since she was eleven years old. Her training among the black men and women of America will help her with her service among the black of another country.

Rev. Alvah S. Hobart, pastor of the Warburton Avenue Church, Yonkers, N. Y., on Oct. 8 preached a sermon the subject of which was "Bible Criticism Criticized." The sermon was preached in view of the fact that there is such an amount of matter printed and written on the subject that the layman is often confused. The speaker assumed "that your faith and mine is built on foundations that can with safety be examined."

At the annual meeting of the Chicago Federation held in the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston; first vice-pres., Rev. Fred D. Stone; second vice-pres., Rev. R. C. Gibson; rec. sec'y, R. Clarence Brown; treas., Mr. Harry A. Brinkman of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank; exec. sec., Walter R. Mee. Dr. Johnston has served over two years as president and Mr. Mee over four years as executive secretary.

The corporation of Brown University bestowed a rare honor on Rev. John Hunt of the class of '42, in extending official greetings. Mr. Hunt is Brown's oldest graduate and celebrated his one hundredth birthday anniversary Oct. 17 at the Odd Fellows' Home at Springfield, Ohio. When he was a student Brown University had only three buildings. College bills including tuition, room rent, library and incidental fees totaled $63 a year and board in commons was $1.18 per week. When he entered Brown in 1838 there were 187 students in the college. Francis Wayland was then president.

The executive committee of the World's Sunday School Association met for its semi-annual meeting in the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City, Oct. 26. Owing to the death of the chairman, James W. Kinnear, the general report at the opening of the session was made by the vice-chairman, Arthur M. Harris, of New York City. President W. O. Thompson, of Ohio State University, voiced the unanimous sentiment of the committee when he made the motion that Mr. Harris be elected chairman of the executive committee. Mr. Harris was treasurer of the World's Association for six years, from 1914-1920.

Young Men's Christian Associations all over Canada and this country, 2,000 of them and more, sent their delegates to the forty-first international convention. Delegates are chosen by vote of active members of each local association or by its board of directors. Probably more than 4,000 gathered at Atlantic City on Nov. 14, for five days' conference on how to make this organization of Christian laymen of more use to boys and young men. This convention of the associations of Canada and the United States is held every three years, this being the first called east of the Alleghenies since that at Washington in 1907. At these conventions the international committee is elected, its 200 members being business and professional men from all parts of Canada and the United States. At the convention also are laid down the policies which are to guide this committee as general agent of the North American associations in their work both at home and in foreign lands.

One of the unique events of the season at Kalaw, Burma, this year has been the triple silver wedding which commemorated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of three mission couples. Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Phinney, of the Rangoon Mission Press; Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Cummings, of the Hanzada Burman Mission; and Mr.

and Mrs. C. H. Heptonstall of the Lolka Karen Mission. Mr. Phinney went to India where he married Miss Jennie Waite at Nellore. Dr. Cummings was wedded at Bhamo to Miss Dora Roberts, daughter of Dr. W. H. Roberts the pioneer Karen Missionary and Mr. Heptonstall found his bride at Toungoo, where she was Miss Petley the daughter of Capt. Petley planter and merchant of that city. It is remarkable that these three couples have remained, in their own particular branch of mission work, steadily during the whole terms of service, only Mr. Heptonstall moving from Toungoo to Lolka within a year. And during the twenty-five years none of these three wives has been separated from her husband for furlough. Neither the Phinneys nor the Heptonstalls have children, but as was said at the reception, on the whole the average of children is fair, for Dr. and Mrs. Cummings have nine, so the average of three to a family is not bad after all.

PROOF

- a. The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society is providing Christian educational advantages among Negroes, Indians, New Americans, Orientals and the Spanish-speaking peoples of Central America, Mexico, Cuba and Porto Rico.
- b. Courses are provided from grammar school to college, including theological, Bible, nurse and teacher training departments. Industrial courses, with instruction in millinery, dressmaking, cooking and gardening, are also offered.
- c. For over forty years our Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago has been training girls for Christian service at home and abroad.
- d. Because of denominational debts the Society has had to withdraw salaries equivalent to 30 teachers and reduce the appropriations of all its schools 25 per cent.

RIGHT now the joint campaign for new and renewal subscriptions to these journals should start. We want to reach the goal of twenty thousand new subscriptions before the New Year. It is personal interest and face to face work that will do it. Make up your canvassing team or committee at once of folks who believe in what they have to offer, and realize that every interest of the church, the denomination, and the mission cause the world around will be served and advanced by the taking and reading of these two denominationally owned periodicals—“THE BAPTIST” and “MISSIONS”.

Fresh from the Field

"Mother" Montgomery's ninetieth birthday anniversary was Nov. 21. An informal reception was held at her home in Rochester, N. Y. She received many friends during the afternoon and evening.

The Nebraska State Convention, the Omaha City Union and the Home Mission Society have cooperated in the purchase of a portable chapel for use in Omaha and vicinity. It is now being occupied by the newly organized Parkside Church.

Rev. Harry H. Powell will close his work at Gardner, Mass., Dec. 3, after four years of service. He has accepted the unanimous call of the church at Natick. The Gardner church has appointed a pulpit committee of which George N. Archibald is chairman.

On Sunday, Nov. 26, the First Mexican Baptist Church of Phoenix was organized with about 150 members. These Baptists were held in membership by the First Church pending the organization of their own Mexican Church. Rev. R. Marlon Garrett is the missionary and pastor and Miss Helen Wainwright is his assistant.

The Church Extension Society and the Strong Place Baptist Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., recently purchased and remodelled a building located in the heart of the Italian district in Brooklyn. This has been opened as a Christian Center and in cooperation with the two home mission societies now offers a fine Christian program to the families of that neighborhood.

Mrs. Paul Judson Morris, wife of the pastor of the Emerson Avenue Church, Indianapolis, died suddenly Nov. 17 following an attack of influenza. Mr. and Mrs. Morris took up the work in Indianapolis about a year ago, from Beaver Dam, Wis., where Mr. Morris had been pastor for about four years. Mrs. Morris was with her husband during his student work at Newton. Many of our readers will sorrow with the husband and the three little children who are thus bereaved.

At an ordination council, composed of thirty delegates from fifteen Baptist churches of the Flint River Association, Michigan, Rev. James A. Lamb and Rev. Clyde Baldwin was ordained to the gospel ministry. Rev. T. D. Denman, of Oxford Church, was moderator; Rev. H. C. Trabert, of Mt. Morris, clerk. Rev. James A. Lamb for two years has been pastor of the Calvary Church of Flint, which was a mission of the North Baptist church. Rev. Clyde A. Baldwin is the pastor of the new Baptist mission on South Saginaw St. near Lakeside Park.

Rev. E. H. Shanks has accepted the unanimous call to the Sixth Ave. Church of Tacoma, Wash., and will close his pastorate in First Church, Phoenix, Ariz., about the middle of December. He will begin his pastorate in Tacoma Jan. 1. An effort to reunite the First Church of Phoenix, Ariz. and the Calvary Church of the same city has been indefinitely postponed. It had been hoped that these two splendid churches could be brought together, thus greatly increasing the efficiency of the Baptist cause in the city and state.

Rev. Joseph C. Hazen of Peoria, Ill., has accepted the unanimous call of the church at North Orange, N. J. and will begin his new work Jan. 1. The church called Mr. Hazen upon his record and without hearing him. He has served at Peoria for seven years and before going to Peoria he also served the church at Janesville, Wis., for seven years. He is a graduate of Bucknell University and of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago.

Having read in a recent issue of THE BAPTIST of the attendance at Sunday school of Mr. Emil Winberg for thirty years without missing a Sunday, Allen Church of Berkeley, Cal., writes to say that next month will complete for him a record of thirty-two years without missing a Sunday, thirty-seven years with one Sunday blacklisted and fifty-two years with only three Sundays missing.

Four missionaries, Miss Frances Tate and Miss Lillian V. Wagner of South India; Dr. Catherine L. Mable of Belgian Congo, and Miss Bertha E. Davis of Burma, who went to the foreign field in 1898 under the Woman's Society, after twenty-four years, are still in active service.

1922 YEARS AGO

Three wise men brought their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh to the boy Jesus.

TODAY

You may also bring your gifts to the One who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." A race of black men await your help. In Southern schools and Northern Christian Centers they have justified their claim on your aid. Over 10,000 teachers and 5,000 ministers have been graduated from our colleges in the South. In the North thousands of unprivileged people in congested districts are being won to a Christian standard of life and are endeavoring to adjust themselves to a new social environment.

Now at Christmas Time

Bring for your Negro brother and sister in the North love gifts which will enable your Home Mission Societies to better manage the already established Centers in Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and Pittsburgh, as well as plan for new centers in other needy cities.

Bring for your Negro brother and sister in the South love gifts which will pay teachers' salaries, enable boys and girls to secure the necessary training for the fields of service to which they are called and make possible necessary additions to our property.

Would Mean Shorter Sermons

Rev. Franklin D. Elmer of the First Church, Hamilton, N. Y., said in a recent sermon: "The liveliest, most interesting denominational journal now published is THE BAPTIST. If this splendid paper was in all our homes your pastor could make references to our great work which would be immediately understood and could omit many paragraphs from his sermons which now must be introduced for information." How true! And you could get home to that Sunday dinner earlier. You have the paper, kind reader, why not help your pastor get the paper into every home?

Killam's Kollum

Sharpe Criticism

"Your paper is simply great. The record of Baptist doings throughout the United States and the world as given by you is indeed tremendous. I like the paper for its power, its patience, and 'pep.' Keep the good work going."—D. R. Sharpe, general superintendent of the Convention of Baptist Churches in Saskatchewan. Tell us what the saints are doing in that great country. It is a part of the world, is it not?

He Acted on Impulse

"I can no longer resist the impulse to write you telling you what an admirable paper I think you are making of THE BAPTIST. You welcome contributions from fundamentalists who are Christians as well as Baptists and from so-called 'modernists' who are Baptists as well as Christians. In your editorial policy you seem to me to be 'a conservative with an open mind,' to borrow from Lowell a happy epithet. Lead on and may the good Lord continue to lead you and your associates." Thus writes Professor C. L. Williams of Denison University, Granville, Ohio. We are glad the impulse led in the direction it did. Other people have written on the spur of the moment and our ears have burned for a week. Some of them want to know why we did not publish something we never saw and some of them want to know why we published what we did see. Professor, you bring a bit of comfort into our troubled life.

Hope Abides

We do not as a rule publish anonymous communications. We are so sure, however, that many of our readers will say "Them's my sentiments" that we deviate from the straight editorial path and give place to the following: "Last week your statement that you really had something to say put me on tiptoe. It was so different. Imagine my disappointment when you went on to say that you would have to postpone saying anything another week. I have read your old kollum for weeks, months and it seems years. Just why I cannot tell. Perhaps it is in the hope that some day you will really say something. You have kept me looking ahead. I have never been satisfied with what I have read but I have felt like going on in the faith that some day you will startle me by saying something. Until that day let me thank you for telling me that you have real 'dope' in stock though your committee will not permit you to release it." It ought to be said that one reason why we have never said anything in this kollum is because it has been so largely devoted to contributions from our friends and admirers.

Pauline Senn, the Chinese young woman who has so creditably handled the work of the Girls' School in Hopo, of which she has entire charge, has been invited to become a full member of the Conference, which is the formal voting body of Baptist Missions in South China.

Miss Sarah B. Gowen, of the Women's Foreign Mission Society, who recently returned to India, writes, "There is a wonderful spirit of awakening everywhere in India these days. I never saw when I was here before, the eagerness to forge ahead among Indian women, as it is now."

For the current year the foreign mission board consists of twenty-eight members. Among these are ten pastors, nine business men, two bankers, two lawyers and five educators. Thirteen different states in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention are represented on the board.

Dr. Henry Edward Tralle recently gave a series of twelve lectures on "Church School Methods and Ideals" in the community school of religious education at Waverly, N. Y., assisting Rev. W. H. Dallman, of the First Church and the other pastors of the town. Dr. Tralle has lectured on various phases of religious education during the last months in conventions and schools of methods in Connecticut, Maine, New Jersey, Virginia, South Carolina and Alabama.

Are Christian centers popular with Negroes in the North? The center in Cleveland served 7,432 people this past quarter; there was an aggregate attendance of 2,106 children at the daily vacation Bible school sessions; 150 letters and forty-two cards were sent out; 639 nursery cases were handled; twenty-two house visits were made; twelve conferences were held and eight lectures given. Mrs. Mattie Anderson, a missionary of the Woman's Society, is in charge of this center.

Dr. J. W. Conley of Cannon Falls, Minn., wishes through THE BAPTIST to express his appreciation for the kind and helpful words and for the gifts and flowers that were sent to him on his seventieth birthday. Friends in fields where he has served from Massachusetts to California remembered their friend and former pastor in these days when he is so largely shut in from the world. About 150 letters and cards were received as well as gifts of money and flowers. He feels as if he could say, "Lord, lettest now thy servant depart in peace for I have seen the glory of Christ manifest in the kindness of his people."

In the three homes for missionaries' children maintained by the Foreign Mission Society, the one at Newton Center being maintained jointly with the Woman's Society, forty-one children have been admitted during the current year. Of these seventeen are at the Fanny Doane Home at Granville, Ohio, under the direction of Miss Charlotte F. Clark; fourteen children are at the Bacon Home at Morgan Park, under the management of Miss Maude Brook and ten are at the Newton Center Home under the oversight of Mrs. M. R. West. These children represent twenty-two missionary families. Their stay in America while their parents are on the field constitutes perhaps the greatest sacrifice involved in a missionary career.

In spite of the economic depression in Porto Rico during the past year, the work of the Caguas-Gayey district has been marked by a steady advance. The Caguas church is completing its third year of self-support. It has cooperated with the Home Mission Society in the purchase of a parsonage. A recent series of evangelistic meetings at Cidra resulted in sixty-five professions of faith.

Dedication services for the new Lorimer Memorial Church, 70th St. and St. Lawrence Ave., Chicago, will be held Dec. 3-10. On Sunday, Dec. 3, E. G. Kilham, editor of THE BAPTIST, will preach the morning sermon at 10:45; Johnston Meyers, of Immanuel Church, Chicago, will preach the dedicatory sermon at 2:30 p. m., and Carl D. Case, of Oak Park, will preach at 7:45. On the following Sunday, Dec. 10, Rev. C. D. Althoff, pastor of Lorimer Memorial will preach at 10:45 a. m., and James M. Stifer, of Evanston, will preach the coronation sermon at 7:45.

When the new congress assembles there will be 296 congressmen who are "dry" and 133 who are "wet," according to an announcement made recently by Dr. Clarence True Wilson, Washington, D. C., corresponding secretary of the board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Dr. Wilson, in a telegram received at Methodist headquarters, says, "The wets re-elected to the house seventy-nine members and the dries re-elected 224. Wet new members to the house of representatives are fifty-four and the 'dry' new members are seventy-two. The 'dries' also gained three votes in the senate." According to Dr. Wilson's statement there are 133 congressmen who are wet and 296 who are dry. Dr. Wilson also says, "Ohio majority against beer, was 187,000. California passed bone dry the Wright Law with a majority of 60,000. There is no slump in prohibition anywhere. All the wet results were from wet places. No dry democrat was defeated. That was the test this year."

Prepare for Stockholm

JAMES H. FRANKLIN

WITHIN recent weeks it has been my privilege to cross the American continent again, attending state conventions, visiting churches, addressing luncheon and dinner conferences, and interviewing many individuals. It is evident that the spirit of our people is superb, and their interest keen in the work at home and abroad. Their response east and west has been reassuring when they have been told of the progress of their work in the Orient and in Africa, and there is a new interest in Europe as well. Doubtless recent books and magazine articles, referring to the religious awakening on the continent of Europe, are largely responsible for the new interest. But it is clear, too, that developments in the work of our own Baptist brethren in Europe have attracted fresh attention. Then the addresses of Commissioner Rushbrooke, and of our own visitors to Europe last summer have aroused much enthusiasm.

But the purpose of this brief article is to state that wherever I stopped on this transcontinental tour, I found people already thinking of making the journey to Stockholm, Sweden, next summer to attend the meetings of the Baptist World Alliance, which comes late in July. The spontaneous interest of the people in the meeting of the Alliance is most gratifying. It is to be hoped that very many of them will be able to attend, and it is none too early for them to be making their preparations, if they are interested, as most of them are, in making the journey as economically as possible.

In February of this year, when the shipping department of the Foreign Mission Society secured passage for the several members of the board who were to visit Europe in the summer, it was discovered that practically all the space on the less expensive steamers sailing from the United States and from Canada late in June and early in July had been reserved by individuals or by tourist agencies, and the second cabin space on the more expensive vessels was being taken rapidly. It is already evident that the tourist agencies and the steamship companies are preparing for heavy trans-Atlantic travel next year, and it will be necessary for those who desire a moderate priced passage to make their reservations early if they are to make sure of comfortable quarters.

We hear that many in the South also are thinking of going, and it has been suggested from several sources that efforts be made to secure a ship for the exclusive use of American delegates to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance. Serious attention is being given to the possibility of securing a special ship for the voyage. Within a few weeks definite advice will be given through the denominational papers regarding this matter. Meanwhile it is important that our people prepare to act quickly when they know what arrangements are possible.

Park Avenue Church Dedicated

THE new Park Avenue Church building at Park Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street, New York City, formerly the Fifth Avenue Church, was dedicated Sunday Nov. 19. The cost of the building, lot and equipment totals $1,416,000, half of which was paid by members of the Rockefeller family. Although not fully completed until later, the building has been in use for all services of the church and its organizations since April 9, 1922. A picture of the building appeared on the front cover of THE BAPTIST for May 13.

The dedication service, which filled the building, was conducted by the pastor Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, assisted by Dr. Eugene C. Carder, assistant pastor, and Dr. Wallace Petty, pastor of First Church, Pittsburgh.

In his sermon Dr. Woelfkin said that in building the church its leaders were "looking toward tomorrow rather than yesterday." The service closed with a prayer by Dr. Woelfkin, the hymn, "All Things Are Thine," and the benediction by Dr. Carder.

Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, president of Brown University, had been invited to preach the dedication sermon, but was unable to be present, as also was the Rev. Dr. Rufus P. Johnston of New York City.

In the evening the organ, a four-manual instrument, the gift of John B. Trevor and his sister in memory of their father John B. Trevor, was dedicated. An augmented choir under the direction of Harold Vincent Milligan, the organist and choir master, rendered a special music service.

The Baptist

Ten Million Baptists

IT seems altogether likely that the world-roster of Baptists now enrolls ten million members.

The remarkable growth of Baptists in America, growth which sent the figures upward in duplication again and again during the past century, has brought the denomination on this continent up to a total of more than eight millions. In Asia are more than a quarter of a million; in Australia and Africa some eighty thousand more. In Europe we have been accustomed to think of our figures as clinging closely, with slight advance for years, about the six hundred thousand mark, with about four hundred thousand of these in Great Britain, sixty thousand in Sweden, and fifty thousand in Germany, the remainder being distributed for the most part in almost negligible little groups among the vast populations of that crowded continent, though Russia was credited with some forty thousand Baptists among the 170,000,000 people in that land before the world-war.

But a dynamic change in religious affairs has accompanied the momentous political readjustments of the past half-decade. Set free from the dominance of monarchies and hierarchies, the enfranchised peoples, though often groping blindly and stumbling pitifully, have in great numbers turned to purer forms of religion. The ancient Bohemia (now part of the strong young republic of Czecho-Slovakia,) land of the martyr, John Hus, where open Protestantism was crushed out with murderous malignity, is now, after five centuries, turning again to purer religion under varying forms, among which our Baptist faith is represented by rapidly increasing thousands. Marked interest has been shown in our Baptist work by the distinguished President Masaryk himself, recognized as one of the foremost statesmen of the new Europe which has emerged from the great war.

Hungary and other states of the new Europe also disclose fruitful fields for our work, while Sweden and Germany have accelerated their steady but never rapid rate of gain, and France has now in its recovered Alsace-Lorraine its most fruitful Baptist soil.

But our greatest surprise has come from Russia, land of tragedy, turbulence, and penury, whose government was transformed so suddenly and bloodily from the most reactionary to the most radical in the world. Out of the mystery which enwraps the land, and despite the forces of demolition that have seemed to be serving as a sort of wrecking crew for civilization, there are emerging signs of constructive forces at work even amidst so much that is destructive and seemingly a reversion to barbarism. Now that it is becoming possible to discern something of the life that has been evolving itself out of the chaos that was Russia, it is found not only that the land of Baptists in that land has been growing vigorously amid the confusion and tragedy of Russian affairs, but that large numbers of evangelical believers not bearing the Baptist name but holding essentially to Baptist principles have emerged into the light since the soviet government, on principle or through indifference, has permitted some real measure of religious liberty. A great body of these, so Commissioner Rushbrooke tells us, have formed already an experimental union with the Baptists, though for the present retaining both names in the title of the joint organization. These Russian brethren are not greatly interested in statistics nor in definiteness of organization, but Dr. Rushbrooke and others estimate the number of those holding virtually the Baptist faith in Russia at more than one million and possibly at two millions. This would make Russia, next to America, the greatest Baptist territory on earth!

Thus it may be seen that the estimate of ten million living Baptists is well, and perhaps far, within the truth. In 1923 a world-gathering of Baptists will be held for the first time since before the world-war, convening in the city of Stockholm. It will be a notable gathering which represents that great host of ten millions.

But it is for no mere glorification of our denomination that these facts are stated and this roll-call of ten million Baptists is made. It is the rather to ask, "What does the Lord of the churches expect from this vast army, called by his name, professing a peculiar loyalty to him, and claiming indubitable evidence of his saving grace in their lives?" We may go still further and ask, "What do other professing Christians have a right to expect from those who claim a unique place by reason of their fealty to the Scriptures and to the Christ of the Scriptures?" The onlooking world, too, will have insistent and rather difficult questions to ask of us. Ten millions of people, with a constituency of perhaps twenty-five millions, are too many to be hid in a corner. A religious body which includes both the president and the secretary of state in the republic which so potently affects world-destinies, and which includes other statesmen, financiers, educators and authors of world-fame, is sure to awaken the interest and the respect—or contempt—of the critical world, which is yet a world heart-hungry for God.

Christ himself set the criterion before us when he said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Our Lord, our fellow-Christians, and the cynical, disillusioned world will all set before us essentially the same test.

We shall be expected to keep together and to keep sweet.

We shall be expected to find our approach to each other through our approach to Christ.

We shall be expected to fulfill the law of love, the stronger brother helping the weaker, and the favored race the less favored.

We shall be expected to propagate the faith to the ends of the earth and to the end of time.

We shall be expected to meet our promises and to complete our tasks.

O, Baptists of America and of the world, can we make good?

The Flag and the School House

UNCLE SAM calls upon all citizens to observe American Education Week, December 3-9. Radio stations, motion picture houses, public schools, the press and civic bodies everywhere have been asked to cooperate in centering the attention upon the public schools. Their present needs, their service, their defects should have the serious consideration of all good citizens in response to the call of the United States Bureau of Education.

We have not far to look to find the reason for Uncle Sam's interest in education. Democracy in government is facing some acid tests. The question is being raised as to whether a free, independent, self-governing commonwealth can measure up to the demands of this hour. Democracy cannot be imposed on any people. Difficulties in Mexico, the Philippines, China and a long list of new republics can be traced to the large illiterate elements in these countries. The success of a democracy depends upon the average man. Is he devoted? Is he loyal with an intelligent loyalty?

As we think back over the years to a small rural school, we are impressed with the changes which have taken place in the common school system. In the old days "grades" were unknown. Our progress was marked by "readers" and it was a great day when we reached "Sander's Fifth." We never dreamed of a "standard school" with a curriculum. Our children know a little about a great many more things than did their parents. They strive for other attainments than "doing in their heads" all the problems in Olney's arithmetic.

The teachers have changed as well as the courses. It is true that we had some great teachers in the old days. Their qualifications were in brawn as well as brains. We had senators, lawyers, physicians and other learned men for teachers—that is, afterwards they became such. Fewer made teaching their life's work. The majority perhaps looked upon teaching school as a means to an end. Few "normal" requirements were in force. Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of New York and now senator elect from that district, taught the "red school", dropping out of the University of Michigan to replenish his bank account. Another congressman presided with great dignity over the same school. Since that day our great normal school system has been largely developed. Qualifications for teaching have been standardized and the requirements made much more severe. The standardized teacher with the standardized process tends to a standardized product in which it seems to us that individuality has often suffered.

Great improvement has been made in the type of school building now being erected and yet reports secured by the bureau from cities of more than 8,000 population indicate that nearly one-half of the children in these cities are housed in buildings almost a quarter of a century old, many of them veritable fire-traps. No less than 250,000 new schoolrooms are needed today. What an expense to the tax payers! They will cost $3,000,000,000. In 1920 the candy bill of our citizen reached one-third of that vast amount. The chewing-gum crowd, by no means all the citizens of this commonwealth, spent in the same year one-sixth of that amount. The total amount spent for education in 1920 was $963,678,123, which, you will note, was considerably less than our candy bill.

The reports of the bureau show a gradual decline in the percentage of illiterates. These reports are, however, based upon the very simple tests of the census takers. In thousands of cases the ability to write one's name and a few words in English classifies one among the literate. The late Secretary Lane after wide observation gave it as his judgment that fully 20 per cent of our total population must be classed as illiterate. The practical tests made upon a million and a half of soldiers showed that fully 25 per cent had no working knowledge of the English language. While compulsory education is in effect in most states, its enforcement is by no means satisfactory. On one pretext or another thousands of boys and girls of tender years are going into various lines of industry when they should be in school.

The public schools are great levelers in our community life. They should be counted among our assets and not our liabilities. They belong to the people and not to the teachers. It is the citizens of a community who should be most vitally interested in the best possible equipment for the schools, the most thoroughly trained and genuinely patriotic teacher. Good schools pay big dividends. Are the schools of your community all that they should be? If not get busy!

Try the Spirits

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the exposure of a certain notorious spiritualistic wizard has appeared a little pamphlet on "The Physical Phenomenon of Spiritualism," by G. L. Wilkins, a converted spiritualist that ought to open some eyes that need to be opened. Mr. Wilkins says that he was at one time a servitor and believer in the occult seance but was led by what I saw of clever manipulation in the dark to deceive the public to renounce the whole spiritualistic system. He says: "I can state that there is absolutely nothing of supernatural nature that takes place in a seance and that everything that does take place can be explained as a mechanical or natural deception, which under the glare of an electric light would not be believed in as the work of a spirit for a single instant. The little tract is published by the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago.

Just But Impracticable

THE federation of churches in Rochester issues a bulletin. In a recent number we find this comment upon the decision of the railroad labor board. We assume that Dr. Orlo J. Price, the executive secretary of the federation, is responsible for the opinions expressed. At least they have a familiar sound. He says: "The railroad labor board has rejected the demand of the railroad unions for a 'living wage' on the ground that the request is 'just, but impracticable.' 'Whatsoever a man (nation, corporation, people) soweth, that shall he also reap.' The sin of high-financing, watering stock, over-capitalization, is now bearing fruit, as it always does. To pay those sudden fortunes made by speculation, thousands of men must now work for less than a decent wage, and women and children pay the awful cost of dividends on watered stock. But property rights are still more sacred to some people than human rights. Not only that, but communities made up of people living below an American standard suffer as communities. We all pay in suffering, privation, low moral standards, for the social sins of individuals and corporations. President Harding on May 23, 1921, said: In our effort at establishing justice we must see that the wage earner is placed in an economically strong position. His lowest wages must be enough for comfort, enough to make his house a home, enough to insure that the struggle for existence shall not crowd out the things truly worth living for. There must be provision for education, for recreation, and a margin for saving. There must be such freedom of action as will insure full play to the individual's abilities."

Catholic Comment on the Railroad Labor Board's Decision

COMMENTING on the recent decision handed down by the railroad labor board, including a statement of the board's opinion on the living wage issue, the Department of Social Action of the National Catholic Welfare Council in its bulletin of Oct. 31, says: "In making its decision, the railroad labor board has gone counter to Catholic social teaching. The pastoral letter of the American Hierarchy has a passage on the living wage which insists upon the right of a living wage, and points out the need of an adequate definition of the living wage and its realization in practice through whatever means are legitimate and effective. The pastoral letter includes in its definition more liberal provisions than are found in the definition of the railroad employees. It says that 'a living wage includes not merely decent maintenance for the present, but also a reasonable provision for such future needs as sickness, invalidity, and old age.'" The bulletin of Nov. 7 says further concerning the board's pronouncement: "The decision is the more serious because of the influence the railroad labor board has on public opinion and the official approval it gives, as a governmental body, to what the bishops' program of social reconstruction calls 'pagan ethics of industry.'" The closing passage of this well-known program is quoted as saying that "the employer has a right to get a reasonable living out of his business, but he has no right to interest on his investment until his employees have obtained at least living wages. This is human and Christian, in contrast to the purely commercial and pagan, ethics of industry."

"For Greater Eurythmy"

WE HAVE at last a definition of religion, lucid and perfectly intelligible, formulated by a distinguished New York clergyman, Dr. William Norman Guthrie, rector of "St. Mark's in the Bowverie," preached a sermon on a recent Sunday on "The Dance in the Religion of the Future." The New York Press reports him as saying:

"Religion as I conceive it is the art of making available for life greater eurythmy than those within control of the will—tapping the disciplined layers of the psychic."

This eminent divine, in his exposition of the gospel of redemption through Christ, goes on to say that "The trouble of our modern civilization is largely due to the fact of not possessing our bodies. Until we can recapture the body for the average man we have no chance for a sound democracy." From these premises Dr. Guthrie deduced the necessity of promoting the dance in order to secure "greater eurythmy." He declared that he hoped to find and train young men who believe in the dance of the past, in the sacerdotal service.

This rapprochement of the church to the world, in the appropriation of its most popular recreation to spiritual ends, gives promise of making Christianity entirely palatable to followers of the fox-trot and the tango, the two-step and the bunny-hug. The introduction of dancing in the public worship of God will take away the reproach which lies upon the churches as dull and solemn places unfit for young life. If the joyous activity of capering youth in the choir loft and around the communion table and along the aisles of the house of God, can "tap the disciplined layers of the psychic" and "make available for life greater eurythmy"—which is the true religion—then by all means let us cry "on with the dance" and off with the solemn prayers and hymns and ordinances which, by the frank confession of our leading dancers, have become obsolete and no longer minister to the deepest needs of the human soul. Our great pipe organs will now be trained to jazz, and our gifted choirs to "popular airs," while galloping youth offer their sacramental gyrations to promote "greater eurythmy" among the eager crowds in the temple.

The Person of Christ: A Series of "Apologetic" Studies

2. "What Manner of Man Is This?"

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

LOGICIANS admit two great methods of demonstrating the truth of any proposition: the inductive and the deductive. The first deals with palpable facts and seeks their natural causes or principles; the second commences with the principles and then searches for corresponding results, applying the general law to particular cases. I propose now in considering the Person of Christ to follow the inductive method, marshalling incontrovertible facts and then demanding of these their radical and unique explanation. For the audience that I have in view this method is preferable to that of beginning with the "proof texts." They will not be overlooked. We shall end with them.

Three Indisputable Facts

We may begin with three indisputable facts. First, it is undoubted that the human setting of Jesus was of the lowliest. His mother was so poor that on the day of the purification she could afford only the least permissible gift—a pair of doves. Our Lord, humanly speaking, had no social prestige. He was not born in the purple but in poverty. His neighbors, staggered at his knowledge, mentioned that he had not been trained in the schools. He was a working carpenter, and, so far as we know, he was untravelled. He never left Palestine. We are speaking of him as men, unilluminated, saw him. Secondly, the public life of Jesus was of the simplest character. He lived in the full public light for nearly three years. He left no writing behind him. His style of teaching was the essence of simplicity. His method was popular. He "spake" to the people in the way of familiar conversation, conveying his teaching largely by means of parables. And at an early age—after less than three years of public ministry—he was crucified by his enemies. There is no disputing the facts. Again we are speaking of him as men, unilluminated, saw him. The third fact is that the influence of Jesus in the world has been absolutely unparalleled. No one has ever divided the world like Jesus Christ. No one is so bitterly hated or so passionately loved as he. Even those who would deprive him of his crown of Deity have paid him a wholly exceptional homage. Ernest Renan was compelled to say of him "He is in every respect unique, and nothing can be compared with him—he will never be surpassed." Friedrich Strauss in his fanciful life of Jesus has to admit that "It will never be possible to rise above him, or to conceive of any equal to him." Theodore Parker, the most advanced Unitarian of his day asked, "What man, what century, has surpassed his thought?" Men who have broken with every evangelical truth have united in ascribing to Jesus an absolute supremacy and yet they have denied his Deity. Why is this? We shall return to this point in due course. Meanwhile the logic of the situation lies in this, that in attributing his supreme excellence to mere human sources they aim a blow both at God and at man. At God, for tantalizing the human race by creating but one being capable of rising to the highest perfection: at man, for his degradation in failing to rise to the height of another man who climbed to the summit. This is the unescapable logic of claiming for Jesus the greatest human perfection and yet attributing it to a man's natural powers. If, as Dr. Stafford Brooke said at the time when he left the Church of England: "Christ reached his high excellence as a man and by a man's power" then where is the other man who has reached this altitude? Why should he remain alone? What is the matter with the human race that one only of its number has been able to scale the mountain? "What man has done man can do." Why then does no other man do what Jesus did? The question must be faced. The humanitarian view of Christ simply does not account for him. We are leaving alone for the time the direct claim that he made for himself and that his disciples made for him—that is to follow. We confine ourselves entirely to the inductive method. His human origin and setting were of the lowliest: his life and teachings were of the simplest, and yet his age-long influence has been and is unparalleled. This must be accounted for and that adequately. One day when Jesus and the disciples were crossing the lake of Galilee in a little boat, a violent squall sprang up, threatening the lives of the little crew. Jesus was so tired out that he had fallen into a profound sleep. The disciples had to waken him and then, speaking to the storm, he said "Peace be still" and immediately there was a great calm. The rough boatmen, astounded, cried "What manner of man is this?" That he was a man there could be no doubt. A moment earlier he lay tired out and asleep. Now he is seen to be Master of the storm. There was a plus in him for which they could not account. And it is just that plus we must face. It is the distinctive thing in him. It impressed the rough boatmen, but it also impressed everybody else. Pontius Pilate quailed before it. The church worships before it. It is the plus in Christ that is the age-long puzzle of the critic and the age-long joy of the Christian. The Jesus of the Gospels, the Jesus of history—is thoroughly human. Everywhere upon the Gospel page we encounter the figure of a real man. The New Testament never attempts to do what certain first century philosophers essayed—to treat the humanity as unreal. On the contrary it emphasizes that humanity in the most pronounced manner. "In all things he was tempted as we are, yet without sin." And yet without the least clash or sense of incongruity, they who tell the story of his humanity are the very people who speak of him as their "Lord and their God," who declare that he came down from heaven; that he is the one and only authentic revelation of the Father. They found the plus in the fact of our Lord's Deity. But I am anticipating. Let us still keep to the inductive method.

Personality of Jesus

There are three points to which especial attention must be directed and these involve an analysis of the personality of our Lord. With the profoundest reverence the task is undertaken. First we think of the intellect of Jesus. It is partly as a teacher that he appeared, and it is mainly as a teacher that many think of him today. For us who are his disciples this is by no means sufficient, but it is part of the truth concerning him. He was, then, a teacher, and by general admission the Supreme Teacher. His contemporaries were "astonished at his doctrine." The police of the temple who were sent to silence him returned with their masters empty-handed, declaring they could not arrest him; his word had conquered them; "never man spake like this man." For two thousand years men have repeated that encomium. With the exception of a handful of secularists who, like the Torley Street tailors, imagine that they are "the people of England," the civilized world of Christendom whether loving Jesus or not, repeats that word "never man spake like this man." Time has not diminished, it has but augmented the divine force of the Word. But to understand the uniqueness of our Lord's teaching, it is necessary to examine it carefully. What are its characteristics? First, it is superlative. He said the highest thing and said it finally. The drama of human sin and return to God is set forth in a story which can be told in five minutes. Who else has ever said all in so small a space as Jesus did in the story of the Prodigal Son? In the Pater Noster our Lord has compressed the whole science and mystery of prayer into eight sentences. And so it is with all else he said. He strikes ever the final note. A second characteristic is that it is illuminative and not logical. Human teachers reason, argue, convince, they must "prove" their case. Our Lord did this. He said, "I say unto you" and when he said it men saw that it was so. His words were as light: they carried with them their own authenticity. A third characteristic is penetrativeness. Jesus always went to the heart of things. Others condemned the sinful act, he condemned the motive and the thought. Anger with our brother without cause is murder. The lustful thought is adultery. It is in the heart man is right or wrong, he says.

His Own Authority

Hence his great word, "Ye must be born again." A fourth characteristic is the personal authority of his word. Other teachers quote authorities and support themselves upon principles. No man dare face an audience and offer his own personal dictum upon any great subject as the last word of authority. But Jesus did. His "I say unto you" was final. He was his own authority. And the world knows he was right. There are more people than ever now engaged upon the task of trying, as they think, to discover what he meant for the world. And he astonishing (and challenging) thing is that amongst these are large numbers of people who have no relationship with his church, nor fellowship with his people.

A final characteristic is the perpetuity of his teaching. He spake to all people and to all time. His word is timeless. It is as fresh and binding today as ever it was. It is not and cannot be outgrown, his enemies being witnesses. Heaven and earth will pass away, his word will never pass away. Thus, all too briefly, we have glanced at the intellect of Jesus and at the character of his teaching. It is wholly unique. But if it is only the teaching of the man how can we account for it? We have to ask again "What manner of man is this?" And again we are driven to the plus to account for him.

But there is more in Jesus than the intellect and the teacher. There is the heart of Jesus to be considered. The heart is greater than the intellect, as Pascal said. The world has known many brilliant teachers, even religious teachers, whose intellects have scintillated, but whose hearts are cold and repellent. How few indeed possess anything like an equality between heart and brain! But behold the heart of Jesus—it is as perfect as his mind. He was the most popular figure in the country. How did he deport himself? The individual was equally precious to him as the crowd—from addressing the multitude he turns directly to heal a solitary leper—an exile from society. From a crowded synagogue he goes to Simon Peter's home and restores to health a sick woman. For the daughter of the ruler he has the beautiful word "My little darling, arise." He gave his best to the very worst. For lost women he had the Gospel of redemption and to one of them, the woman of Samaria, he addressed one of the greatest of his discourses. For all the needy he had compassion; for all the disinherited, courtesy and the message of hope. He brought into one fellowship a Bolshevik (Simon the Zealot) and the man Simon hated (Matthew the tax farmer). And, miracle of miracles, he brought together into his own and their own fellowship two women whom society forever separates: Joanna the wife of Herod's steward—the lady of the North—and Mary Magdalene "out of whom had gone seven devils." To the man who "found hell about his lips"—Judas Iscariot—our Lord has only the word "friend" to utter. Such was the heart of Jesus. Few public men can bear the test of popularity. Men who can command the crowd are often impatient with the individual. But Jesus loved all. What manner of man is this? And once more we are driven to the plus to account for him.

"Thou Art the Christ"

But there is a deeper region still for us to enter. It is more sacred even than the intellect or the heart of Jesus—it is his holiness. The world has known many great and good men; it has known but one sinless man. The best men have always acknowledged a great abyss between themselves and Jesus Christ. Dr. Channing, Unitarian by label, declared "Jesus puts in the shade all human perfection." The notion of sinlessness was not in the world until Jesus came. It came with him, for he actually realized it in his person. "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" was his challenge, and it remains unanswered. Before his holiness all heads bow. Holiness, however, is a positive quality and it consists in the perfect relation of man to God, himself and his fellows. That triple relation in our Lord was perfect. Of the Father he could say "I do always the things that please him." Jesus never confessed sin, although he taught others to confess theirs. His relation to God was perfect, as was also his relation to men. He gave his life for their redemption and so reached the final attitude of love. His own inner relations were perfect. The equilibrium of his life was complete. Jesus was perfectly "holy and undefiled." What manner of man is this? There is the plus in him which is found in no other and which is only truly expressed in the ancient answer "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

JESUS, by an instinctive sympathy, never went into any neighborhood without finding at once the sick, the poor, the bedeviled. We live in our secluded social circles; we do not know even the maids in our kitchens, the workmen in our factories, the bootblacks and the newsboys who serve us. We deal with our fellows on a cash basis, not on a basis of human interest. And as for the conditions of life in the slums of our own communities, in the jails and asylums, among the sick, the vicious, the homeless, the unemployed, the mentally defective, how little do many of us know—or care!—Harry Emerson Fosdick in "The Meaning of Service."

The Place of the Christian College in the System of American Education

By DAVID J. EVANS

THERE are in America at least two complete systems of education. The public system supported by taxation independent of any ecclesiastical control and which begins with the kindergarten and primary grades and completes itself in the high school, and the state university with literary and professional courses. This system provides knowledge, good citizenship and professional efficiency for the sake of the state.

Parallel to this public system is the Catholic parochial school with academies, high schools and a few universities, giving literary and professional courses all under the Catholic control and ministering to that ecclesiastical system. The first of these is peculiarly American. The second medieval and European.

The Christian colleges or universities do not belong to either of the systems named. They are in a distinct class and they are also peculiarly American. For the most part they were founded by groups of men and women who voluntarily organized and supported them in order to foster a higher degree of culture to preserve Christian ideals and to encourage a fine type of professional dignity in the "learned professions" and especially in the ministry.

500,000 in Higher Schools

These statements are necessarily very general but they probably describe the origin of the type of educational institution we know as the Christian college. Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Brown, Williams, Amherst, Dartmouth, were all similar in their origin and the colleges founded later in our national history have largely patterned after them.

These earlier colleges are older than our public school system and while the state system of higher education has grown at a tremendous rate especially in the north central and western sections of our country, it is interesting to note and gratifying to reflect on the fact that out of about 500,000 young people now attending all our institutions of higher learning approximately 50 per cent of them are in these Christian and denominational schools and the rate of increase is almost equal to that of the state universities.

Our Baptist schools have shared in this increase, and, while we deplore the fact that our great denomination is not producing its share of college people, the improvement has been more than gratifying during the past few years or since Christian education has become the concern of the whole denomination.

We can make no prediction for the future with reference to attendance. But if the present rate continues, we shall be under the necessity of very greatly increasing our college equipment. It is clear that we have every reason to push forward in our educational program.

The report of the committee on denominational schools adopted at Des Moines revealed that in the judgment of the committee our schools for the most part and with only a few unnamed exceptions were living fully up to the provisions of their respective charters and in line with the plans, desires and prayers of their founders and supporters. Let us move with the rising tide in educational affairs and invest to our utmost ability in the higher education of our young men and women, creating a denominational conscience on the subject of education and insisting that these colleges turn out into the activities of Christian life and service leaders of spiritual insight and devotion to Christ and in sufficient numbers to leaven our denomination and to provide for a distracted and wretched world, a sure word of salvation and hope.

Rev. David J. Evans is the pastor of the First Church, Kansas City, Mo. succeeding Rev. W. S. Abernethy. He was before this time president of William Jewell College, Liberty, Mo. This article is written from the brief notes used by Dr. Evans at Indianapolis where he spoke before the convention. While brief it gives some insight into his stirring message.

Place of a Christian College

What then is the place, function and business of a Christian college in the system of American education? If I mistake not its business is first of all the discovery and development of Christian leadership, men and women, laymen and ministers. It is to man the new educational program of the church. The church is already awakened as to the needs of religious education and there are significant movements in the field of the Sunday school today. It is the Christian college that is to broaden the missionary appeal, furnishing teachers, physicians, nurses and evangelists for the mission fields of the world. The Christian college must furnish the man-power for these great enterprises.

It is the Christian college which is to leaven our social, economic and political life with the principles of Jesus Christ. It is not a system of economics which is at the base of our present civilization; it is a relationship of persons. In so far as we find a solution to the great questions of capital and labor, commerce and diplomacy, these solutions will be in the terms of personal relationships. The Christian college has reason to be proud of its contribution in men to the social, business and political life of our country.

It is the function of the Christian college to permeate the culture of other types of schools with the dominant ideals of Christianity. It begets reverence in the temple of truth. Evolution is the underlying hypothesis of all our sciences—biology, psychology, sociology. The criticisms aimed against it in popular lectures are wide of the mark. Too much time is spent on evolution as past history and not enough with reference to the future of man and of the race.

It is true we are in danger of scientific hyper-Calvinism whose sovereign God is irrational chance. We are in danger of being biologically and psychologically damned by the germ plasms or chromosomes. The Christian college does not forget that Jesus is in the world. It does not forget the remedial spirit of God, the Father. A new type of manhood is being created. Man is not a zoological specimen. The Christian college means the uplifted Christ through whom men are to achieve a new civilization, a kingdom of God, the type, pattern and dimension of which is Jesus Christ. The first Adam was a living soul; the last Adam a life giving spirit. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is from heaven.

Reading for the Busy Boy

FOR most boys in the United States school days are few. The average is only a little more than 1,000 for each boy. For many boys the days are fewer still. While in school they have little time for general reading. Lessons in arithmetic, algebra, geometry, elementary science, geography, history, composition, technical grammar, and other subjects, take up most of the time. But all boys in the country and city alike may, if they will, find much time for the reading of good literature on Saturdays, Sundays, holidays, during the long vacations and after they have quit school. Even if a boy works steadily for ten hours a day, six days in a week, he may still find much time for such reading, if only he has learned to save his time, has a taste for reading, and has formed the reading habit.

In a week there are 168 hours. Ten hours of work a day for six days make sixty hours for the week (most boys work much less; in many cities and states the day's work is limited to eight hours); ten hours a day for eating and sleeping make seventy hours; three hours a day for play and recreation make twenty-one hours; a total of 151 hours. This leaves seventeen hours a week, or 84 hours a year for reading—as many hours as are spent in school by a boy who attends school regularly and promptly five hours a day, nine months in the year, with only three holidays.

A boy who has learned to use his time well and has a little good advice in selecting books may easily read two dozen good books a year without infringing on his time for work, sleep, or play and recreation. By reading two dozen good books a year, any boy may, before he is twenty years old, become familiar with a large part of the best literature of the world, fill his mind with helpful ideas and noble ideals, and gain much of the finest culture that the world can offer. Many men have attained all this with less of opportunity than is presupposed here.

A good book should be read more than once, and every boy should own some of the books that he reads. Books are cheap and money paid for them is well invested and will pay large dividends in life and happiness and even in money. Most cities and towns in the United States and some country communities have good public libraries; and many public schools, both in city and country, have good collections

The Value of the Study of the Bible in College

Are our Christian denominational schools still afraid or are they measuring up to their opportunity?

By R. B. STEVENS

THE average person readily admits that the Bible has great cultural value but few of us fully appreciate this phase of the Bible's influence upon our civilization. When we turn to the fine arts we find that the Bible has furnished the subject matter for many productions in which the author, feeling the challenge of the sacredness of his subject, has risen to the highest pinnacle of artistic achievement. We think of Leonardo da Vinci's "Sistine Madonna" and "Last Supper," of Millet's "Angelus" portraying the sacredness of honest toil, of Watts who has given us in "Sir Galahad" the conquering grandeur of intelligent, noble manhood. No musical compositions of the world have so stirred the nobler impulses of the soul as have the great oratorios: Handel's "Messiah," Bach's Passion oratorios, Haydn's "Creation" and Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" and "Elijah." These are examples of painting and music which are the fruits of the Bible and cannot possibly be understood or appreciated without a knowledge of the Bible narratives.

Expression of God-ward Yearnings

Again we turn to the materialized expression of man's God-ward yearnings, the crystalized music of his highest hopes, the world's church architecture. We recall St. Peter's, St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey, Notre Dame, Reims, Amiens and Cologne. Where is there finer, nobler expression of the best thoughts of men than in these cathedrals, built to express the Christian religious nature?

It is commonplace to say that the best types of English and American literature have turned largely to the Bible for their themes and figures, and especially for their style. Milton was saturated with it, Tennyson is said to have over two thousand references to it, and Browning seven hundred. Shakespeare refers to the Bible so much that many people cannot tell whether a given quotation is from the Bible or from Shakespeare. Ruskin attributed his marvelous style to the Bible. Webster was a veritable encyclopedia of the Bible. Lincoln's simple but superb English and his apt expressions were largely due to the Bible's influence. Hall Caine declares that he has derived every one of the plots for his vigorous writings from the Bible. The list is almost endless. The King James Version, written shortly after the death of Elizabeth, belongs to the golden age of English literature and has had a greater influence upon English literature than any other production, we might almost say greater than the combined influence of all others. Who can hope to understand and appreciate the best English literature without knowing the Bible in word and in spirit?

In the social and political life of modern times the Bible has been the source of inspiration and of principles. The idea that all men are created equal, endowed with the inalienable rights of life and liberty, the origins and basis of a sacred and genuine democracy, where are these better set forth than in the gospel records? Can one who is influenced by them ignore these fundamental rights of men? The great reformers of the modern world were Christian at heart and derived their social ideals from Christian ideals if not directly from the Bible. The great army of our social workers today are largely Christian. The many leaders in business who are turning toward Christian methods witness to this book's increasing influence. The greater economists and sociologists are advising us that the Christian spirit is the only influence that can solve our industrial, civil and social problems. The more worthy features of our present social and political achievements clearly suggest the Bible's influence. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has said that "The declaration that Christianity is a part of the law of the land is a summary description of an existing and very obvious condition of our institutions. We are Christian people . . . imbued with the sentiments and principles of Christianity, and we cannot . . . prevent them from entering into and influencing, more or less, all our social institutions, customs, and relations. . . ." Judge Taft says "The Bible's English has given shape to American literature. Its spirit has influenced American ideas in life, and laws, and government." When we remember these things and remember that tomorrow's leaders are in college today we are convinced that the Bible's influence must somehow be powerfully exerted in our colleges. Thomas Huxley, assuredly no Biblicist, when a member of the London school board insisted that the Bible should be a part of the curriculum. This is a matter of concern not only to church people but to every intelligent citizen.

The Bible is needed in the college curriculum for the sake of its direct influence upon the lives of the students. Dr. Nicolas Murray Butler says "It be comes impossible ever again to identify education with the mere acquisition of learning. It must mean a gradual adjustment to the spiritual possessions of the race." Education is defined by leading educators today as the development of a socially efficient personality, one which takes a responsible leadership in all the things which are of greatest permanent value to human life. The day is passing when educational institutions are rated according to the amount of information they can pour into their students, or according to the amount of wealth the students trained by them can produce with that training. Information and mental powers are merely tools to be used. They may be used for good or ill. No one is educated until his personality is so developed that he uses his information and mental power for the highest ends of life. To do this he must have the will to do right. He must also have a genuine appreciation of the finest things in life and a keen sense of the values of life.

Efficient Citizenship and the Bible

For such willing, for such evaluation of life studies of the various philosophies and ethical systems of the world may help but surely a study of the Bible, especially the prophets and Jesus, is much more fruitful. Nowhere are the inner springs of conduct so laid bare and incisively evaluated, nowhere are the greatest values of life so profoundly and yet lucidly treated, nowhere is all that is best in life set forth with such compelling attraction, as in the teachings of Jesus. In them we have the source of the highest qualities of our civilization and the principles which were the original inspiration of our noblest leaders. Surely if efficient citizenship is the aim of education a study of the Bible is indispensable in the college curriculum.

We need a sympathetic, honest, scholarly study of the Bible in the college curriculum for its cultural value, for its influence in our political and social life, and for its influence upon the lives of the students in producing the highest type of Christian citizenship. A few of our larger universities, Columbia and Harvard for example, are for these reasons introducing Bible study into their curriculums. Are our Christian denominational schools still afraid or are they measuring up to their opportunities?

Stingy Receivers

Luke 17:17

By E. C. SCOTT

WHERE are the nine? Why they have just melted away among the countless numbers of their class—stingy receivers every one of them. We may not like the term but like the cockle-burr it may stick all the better for that.

One in ten! How few to stand in the great bread-line of God's bounties and then take the further blessed step of rendering him thanksgiving for all his benefits. And yet see how the one that returned not only received the priceless gift of a cleansed life, but with it the blessing of God's honor: "Arise and go thy way." Was it not the highway of a perfect life to which our Lord pointed him? How many times in the prolific orchards of our state we see otherwise good trees discarded for their imperfect fruit. Like the stingy receiver they do not respond rightly to all their benefits, while the tree of perfect fruitage is almost priceless to the same owner.

But if the stingy receiver's loss was only his own, it were not so bad; those nine, how little they took with them for others compared to what they might have taken! We are told of a minister who, in laying down a constant and hard service of half a century, says that his average salary for that work was $200 per year. What an array of stingy receivers that record brings to our vision as we think of the blessed homes and lives, while we see him ever plodding on with the meager necessities of life!

And again, how our church rolls bulge with memberships that come to get so much, and give so little; and what shall we say, what can we do for the countless multitudes, subject of a God so glorious that he is kind to even them, the unthankful and the evil? What can we do for such stingy receivers but hold them before him at this Thanksgiving time and always with our interceding prayers?

Stingy receiving will give us poverty of soul, while thankful receiving will add to us riches of grace.

Our Broad Home Mission Program

By CHARLES L. WHITE

NORTH America for Christ" is the motto of The American Baptist Home Mission Society, whose devoted missionaries since 1832 have been giving the good news of salvation through Christ to many millions of souls. The first missionaries taught the people on the frontier to plant their altars where they plowed their acres, and we are still at work on the frontier. Missionaries now labor in nearly every state of the Union, and in Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Haiti and Jamaica. They preach the gospel among twenty-two foreign-speaking widely scattered racial groups, including the Mexicans in the Southwest, and fourteen Indian tribes. The motto of the society is therefore singularly appropriate.

Every American problem is necessarily a home mission problem. During the last ninety years we have been spiritually solving the problems of the frontier, the Indians, the Negroes, the Mormons, the cities, rural communities, immigration, Americanization, and the education of Christian leaders among peoples of many races in this polyglot nation. Our missionaries laid the foundations of state conventions and educational institutions west of the Mississippi and guided their spiritual development. They also stimulated the eastern state conventions to work for the millions of strangers living within their boundaries.

Emphasis on Evangelization

The society has insisted that its missionaries shall always interest their churches in the evangelization not only of their own field but in the missionary work of the conventions and the national home and foreign mission societies. The areas, indeed, in which its missionaries have worked are occupied by churches that are generous in their gifts to foreign missions. Arizona and North Dakota, two states which still are needy missionary soil, were the first to "go over the top" in the New World Movement.

The society has pushed out into adjacent unevangelized republics and into the populous nearby islands. Unprecedented opportunities await us in Latin America where a strong native ministry is being trained. Churches, parsonages, schools, hospitals and Christian centers must continually be built and maintained, and many missionaries, teachers and nurses must be sent to these countries.

Vast Areas of Human Loneliness

There are great numbers of our fellow men scattered over vast areas, herdsmen of sheep and cattle living with their families in lonely places, new settlers in lands just cleared, homestead dwellers waiting for irrigation to flow their way, people dwelling in boats, on rivers and canals, to whom the sight of a Christian preacher would be a sensation, and a delight, and who, as did Abraham Lincoln's father when the lad's mother died, have waited weary months for an itinerant preacher who could say a prayer over the dead and give a bit of comfort to the living. We have wide areas of this kind in our country, large enough to make several empires and there are many thousands of such neglected people scattered over them, our own fellow citizens living without God and without hope in the world and likely to die in that condition unless we send our colporter-missionaries and chapel car or chapel auto missionaries to carry to them the good news of salvation.

Through the New World Movement our society is pleading for gifts for the perpetuation and enlargement of all its various forms of missionary work including the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, where foreign-speaking students are being trained for work in their own racial groups in America and has an intercommunity and interstate outreach; its work is interstate with conventions, interracial with city mission societies, intertribal with Indians, and interlocking with the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, the American Baptist Publication Society, the British Baptist Missionary Society, and the Lott-Carey Foreign Mission Society. Its outreach is international in Cuba, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Haiti and Jamaica. Its contacts in missionary education are intercontinental.

A Forward-Looking Organization

The society plans beyond the needs of a year. Its plans and policies are shaped for the near and the long future as a fellow worker with God. Evangelism is stimulated over wide areas. Not only do rich returns follow the visits of the field evangelists, but the conferences held in many states under the direction of the superintendent have increased interest in this type of work among churches and pastors.

Special attention is given to Christian community service in urban and rural neighborhoods. Demonstration country churches are being established, equipment provided and staffs secured to spiritualize adequately all community contacts. A department of architecture seeks to assist architects, churches and institutions to secure better results for money spent by making available the experience and study of specialists.

Our missionary program as outlined above contemplates no lesser goal than that of winning a nation and its neighboring republics to Christ. Our legions of supporters are urged to pray daily that our missionaries and secretaries may have the vision and faith to meet every contingency in our home missionary undertakings and that new friends and adequate funds may be provided through the New World Movement. No one should neglect to give while living, and no Baptist who has made his will, or who contemplates doing so should neglect to arrange for his works to follow him by carefully inserting in his will the correct corporate name of The American Baptist Home Mission Society.

The Future

In 1620 less than half a million people including the Indians, lived in America. Three hundred years later, in 1920, over one hundred million people constituted our population. When we think, however, of the future, let us remember that there are reasons for believing in three centuries there may be a thousand million people living in America and probably fifty million people living in Greater New York. The Baptists of the not remote future will have home mission problems of gigantic proportions.

The Baptists of this generation must lay the spiritual foundations on which the Baptists of future generations in America can build the superstructure of gold, silver and precious stones. We must labor under the guidance of our Lord whose life is the chief corner-stone of our holy enterprise, whose cross is the message of our missionaries and whose example is the inspiration of their self-sacrificing service.

A Clean Heart

UNDERNEATH all our problems today, whether they be political, social, or economic, is the problem of the man himself—the man behind the job or the system, whether it be good or bad. Society is busy with its systems of renovation, but the redemption of society can only come through the redemption of the individual soul. This makes the gospel supreme among all the agencies making for progress and justice. There can be no true or permanent uplift apart from the religious life of man. In proportion as we are civilized, enriched and trained, we stand in need of a simple faith, a redeeming gospel and a new baptism of the Spirit of God. To fill the world with regenerated people is the supreme work of the church. The conditions of our life today necessitate that we speak with clearer emphasis, this meaning of the Gospel. A multitude of interests are pressing their claims, interests relying on external forms, agitations and drives for their power. All this should lead to a deep personal question: Have you gone behind all proprieties and appearances and viewed your own life? Have you studied the motives which control you from day to day? Have you seen and trembled at the hidden faults, and the dangerous energy of destructive passion which only await the favorable moment to assert themselves? Have you prayed till you received the answer, "Create in me a clean heart, O God." It matters not how cultured, or morally respectable or how zealous in social or philanthropic work we may be, the message is to each one of us, "Marvel not that I say unto thee, ye must be born again."

Denominational Relationships

This society assists state conventions and city mission societies in cooperative missionary work until they can be made self supporting. This object of self support it hastens by gifts and plans. It assists in meeting special missionary opportunities in all its departments; it aids in the day of storm, of stress, and of disaster; it stabilizes work which otherwise would be sporadic and insecure; it

Foreign Missions at Northfield

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

FOUR years ago a company of men and women seriously interested in bringing Christianity to distant lands and among strange peoples who did not know Jesus Christ met at Northfield to consider some of the more important problems in their work. The story of that eventful meeting appeared in the denominational papers in December of that year. During the intervening four years many things had happened. A big denominational forward program had been adopted amid great enthusiasm, but only half of its financial objectives had been achieved. National upheavals following the turmoil of the war had taken place in many countries in rapid succession. The cost of doing missionary work owing to the increase in the cost of living has advanced steadily with scarcely any perceptible pause in its upward trend. An immense accumulated deficit had been piled up causing serious delay in the carrying out of any plans for advance in missionary activity. The return of men who had visited the Far East, India, Africa and even Russia made necessary a consideration of questions and problems which had come under their observation. Evidently the time had come for another meeting like that held four years ago.

Why Such A Meeting

Why hold such a meeting at Northfield? Because the environment is conducive to deep thinking, meditation, prayerful consideration of great problems. Among its charming hills and through its picturesque valleys, in the streets of the town itself and in the schools of Mt. Hermon, everywhere one seems to feel the influence of Dwight L. Moody, that man of God whose work has meant so much to the Christian life. Furthermore, it is occasionally desirable to get away from New York with its atmosphere of materialism, the turmoil of the street, the distraction of the office and the interruption of the telephone in order to permit unhurried, careful study of missionary problems in these days of world readjustment. Thus the foreign mission board and the woman's board came to Northfield, Nov. 14-15, for one of the most important meetings in the history of the two foreign mission societies.

In addition to the usual routine business items, and there were indeed many of them, for the program listed eighty-four different items which had to be brought to the attention of the board, there were several big questions up for consideration. One was a report of a special committee concerning the policy to be followed by the society with Grants-in-Aid in British India. This had been thoroughly considered at the several mission conferences in India at which Secretary Robbins had been present.

Another important topic was the financial situation. The treasurer presented an exhaustive analysis of receipts for the past three years of the New World Movement, comparing them with receipts during the three years prior to the New World Movement. A substantial increase was reported, that of donations alone reaching the gratifying percentage of 58. Unfortunately, most of this increase in receipts was absorbed in the expanding cost of doing missionary work. All the mission fields of the society had felt the influence of the rising cost of living, which had necessitated increased salaries for missionaries, larger compensation for native workers and increased appropriations for the maintenance of the work, thereby permitting very little advance work along the lines projected in the New World Movement program.
